majority in number and amount of all claims allowed, and the consideration to be paid to creditors and the money necessary to pay debts entitled to priority and the expenses of administration shall have been deposited in court; (2) there are now three available objections to a composition, the first only being the same as that under the former law, and any available objection to the debtor's discharge being equally effective to prevent a composition. The court, and not the debtor, distributes the consideration. The practice, too, is necessarily different. Further, the section is silent as to some things specifically stated in the former law.

b. Constitutionality.—The objection was raised as to the constitutionality of the act of 1874. But, if the present section amounts, as it does, to a cessio bonorum, whence each creditor obtains substantially as great a pro rata as he would through distribution in bankruptcy, the sections on compositions are clearly within the power given Congress to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy.²³ Nor does the fact that the question whether the bankrupt shall be released from his debts depends upon a majority vote by his creditors, render the law unconstitutional. The discharge and the manner of awarding it are mere incidents.²⁴ The essential purpose of bankruptcy law is pro rata distribution of assets,²⁵ and this being brought about by composition under this section, it is constitutional.

c. Section, how construed.—Since it is in derogation of the common law, and compels any dissenting creditors to accept the percentage accepted by the majority and deprives them of their remedies on the balance thereafter, this section is strictly construed.²⁶ There must be the utmost good faith on the part of a bankrupt in offering a composition; and any attempt on his part to "trade" with the creditors or the court by offering a larger sum after he finds his first offer to be unsatisfactory, is quite contrary to the spirit of the statute.²⁷ Where the parties and the referee follow a course of procedure utterly at variance with the law, confirmation may be refused.

d. Who may offer composition.—Any "bankrupt," that is, any person, copartnership, or corporation against whom an involuntary petition has been filed, or who has filed a voluntary petition, or who has been adjudged a bankrupt, can offer a composition.²⁸ This seems to have been so under the former law, though the word then was "person."²⁹ An offer of composition made by a third party is not authorized by the bankruptcy act.³⁰

As an abstract proposition considered for a moment apart from the provisions of the statute, it is entirely clear that a condition so plainly in derogation of common-law rights should not be permitted unless it is reasonably certain that the creditors approve and that they will fare at least as well as they would were the estate administered in the usual course."

Offer by third party.—An order providing that upon deposit by a tenant in possession of and claiming the bankrupts' real estate of a sufficient amount to pay unsecured creditors, costs of administration, and attorney's fees, the petition in bankruptcy shall be dismissed and the property delivered to the tenant, is unauthorized and contrary to the bankruptcy act and the practice thereunder. Luxury Fruit Co. v. Harris (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 33 Am. B. R. 228, 217 Fed. 740.

c. General purpose and effect.³¹—A composition in bankruptcy is not alone a contract between the bankrupt and his unsecured creditors, but also, on its confirmation, a judgment of the court, having definite legal results.^{31a} The act itself seems to recognize that composition is in some respects outside of bankruptcy, for it is provided in § 12 (e) that if composition is not confirmed "the estate shall be administered in bankruptcy as herein provided."³² If the judge refuses to confirm the composition, the bankruptcy proceeding per se is revived and must be proceeded with as if no offer of composition had been made. If it is confirmed a formal order is entered to that effect.³³ This order and that dismissing the case are not the same. A certified copy of the order of confirmation constitutes evidence of the revesting of the title and, if recorded, imparts the same notice as a deed from a trustee to the bankrupt.³⁴ The effect of a composition is to supersede the bankruptcy proceedings and reinvest the bankrupt with all his property free from the claims of creditors.³⁵ It either extinguishes the legal liability or is a bar to the remedy, and in either event the bankrupt can no longer be compelled to pay.^{35a} Not only the title to the property, but also its accretion and proceeds revests in the bankrupt. Thus where a trustee leases certain property of the bankrupt estate, upon a confirmation of a composition, the rights in the leases accrue to the bankrupt.³⁶ Provable claims are discharged^{36a} though the holders thereof did not actually prove the same or participate with the other creditors in taking action upon the composition.³⁷ But it does not affect the debtor's obligation created as a part of the composition;³⁸ and, if notes given as the consideration are not paid, they are payable in their original amount.³⁹ The composition is only effective to release claims which are provable in bankruptcy, so that if a claim is not provable, as, for instance, where it is for rent accruing under a lease after the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings, attachment will lie against property of the bankrupt, the title of which has revested in him because of the confirmation of composition.⁴⁰

It has been held in New York that creditors who enter into a composition with a debtor thereby release the debt and lose the right to retain securities held for the debt, unless there be an agreement to the contrary.⁴¹ Composition being outside of bankruptcy, a creditor who has received his composition dividend without protest, is not entitled to set off his claim against the bankrupt⁴² or to proceed to recover upon the unpaid balance of his claim,⁴³ and after confirmation of the composition he may not plead res judicata in an action against him on the debt due the bankrupt.⁴⁴ The order of confirmation becomes in effect a discharge and may be pleaded in bar with like effect.⁴⁵ But like a discharge, a composition, if not pleaded, is deemed waived.⁴⁶ The effect of a composition or discharge on the liability of a codebtor is discussed elsewhere.⁴⁷ After an order of confirmation, the bankrupt takes back his property in the same condition that it was in when bankruptcy was initiated, and liens which would be valid and unassailable in the ordinary course of bankruptcy proceedings are protected in composition arrangements and are not discharged or affected.^{47a}

f. Practice.—This is detailed in subsequent paragraphs. The law is not as instructive on this point as was the act of 1874. Nor are the general orders exactly illuminating,⁴⁸ or the forms prescribed by the Supreme Court reliable.⁴⁹ The amendment of 1910 has modified the practice where composition is offered prior to adjudication. It would seem to require the bankrupt to formally petition the court and file therewith the schedules of his property and creditors. In this respect the practice will be much the same

Revival of discharged debt.—A proceeding resulting in the discharge of a debtor from liability, based upon a composition after bankruptcy proceedings are instituted, is not in its nature such a voluntary act of the creditor as is considered in law as being a voluntary assent of the creditor to the satisfaction of the debt and a subsequent written promise to pay the debt is enforceable. III. INFORMAL COMPOSITIONS.

A practice of compromising debts outside of the proceeding in bankruptcy which is sometimes attempted in an informal way should be condemned. A bankrupt's estate can be wound up under the statute in but two ways: (1) by distribution in bankruptcy, or (2) by distribution in composition. The effort is sometimes made to start a proceeding in bankruptcy and then settle with creditors outside the proceeding; either letting the latter die of inanition or else asking for a sale of the assets at a nominal figure to him who furnishes the consideration for the informal settlement. The difficulties attending such an effort are indicated in In re Lockwood. It can never be entirely successful until every creditor has accepted the settlement offered. As an attempt to evade the law, fruitful in possibilities of wrong to creditors who may not have notice, it will usually be checked when brought to the attention of the court. Nothing short of positive proof that every creditor has been ascertained and, without exception, paid the same pro rata, will warrant an order for the sale of the assets, even to him who comes into court claiming to be subrogated to the rights of the creditors; indeed, it may be doubted whether the court, thus informed of an attempted evasion of the law, will set the machinery of that law in motion for the benefit of him who admits such an attempt.⁵²

IV. OFFERING COMPOSITION.

a. In general.⁵³—It has been said that a composition arises from the acceptance of an offer to the creditors to purchase the estate.⁵⁴ The offer of terms should be made as directed by the statute. All the creditors must have notice of the proposal, whether they have proved their claims at the time of the offer or not; the composition must be offered and sufficiently explained to all alike and they must have reasonable opportunity to consider it. They must be fully and honestly advised of the true condition of the debtor's affairs, so they can act intelligently and understandingly in view of the facts and with a knowledge of their rights in the premises. Unless these conditions are met by the bankrupt the composition must fail, for the provisions of the bankruptcy act prescribing the requisites of a composition are to be strictly construed as against those who seek by such means to deprive non-assenting creditors of their right to have the debtor's property administered and distributed in the ordinary course of bankruptcy proceedings.⁵⁵

b. Amendment of offer.—The present law contains no provision relating to amended or substituted offers of composition, but amendments have been permitted, and in such a case, the amended or substituted offer supersedes the original offer and must be submitted to the several creditors in the manner prescribed by law for the original offer.⁵⁶ While the amendment of a composition offer should be allowed only in the rarest cases, it should be allowed when the only change in the offer is an increase in the cash offered, and the bankrupt has not trifled with the court, but has at all times acted in good faith.⁵⁷

c. When offer should be made.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection a provides that the offer to his creditors may be made either before or after adjudication, and after, but not before, he has been examined in open court or at a meeting of his creditors, and has filed in court the required schedules.⁵⁸ A bankrupt will not be allowed to withdraw his offer after it has been accepted, the consideration deposited, and an application for confirmation filed.^{58a}

(2) AFTER DISCHARGE.—It has been suggested that since a person ceases to be a bankrupt after he has obtained a formal discharge, the provisions of the law as to compositions are not effectual after such discharge. The statute does provide that the offer be made by the bankrupt, but so long as the estate is being administered in bankruptcy, he continues as the bankrupt so far as such estate and the incidents relating thereto are concerned, notwithstanding his discharge prior to the closing of the estate. There seems to be no reasonable grounds for refusing to a debtor the privileges accorded him by the act in respect to the settlement of the claims against him by composition proceedings, after his discharge, provided the estate is in such condition that it may be returned to him without detriment to the interests of his creditors.⁵⁹

(3) EFFECT OF AMENDMENT OF 1910.—Some doubt arose under the law as it existed prior to the amendatory act of 1910 as to whether the examination here referred to may be made after the proceedings are instituted and before the adjudication. Under the amendatory act of 1874 composition was permitted "whether an adjudication had been had or not." The act as amended by the amendatory act of 1910 contains a similar provision and it is now provided that an offer of composition may be made "either before or after adjudication," thus effectually nullifying the effect of decisions holding that composition may not be offered until the bankrupt has submitted to an examination under § 7 (9) at the first meeting of his creditors which under § 55-a may only be held after an adjudication.⁶⁰

In form of assignment for creditors.—A composition offer made after bankruptcy though the substantial equivalent in results to the creditors of a general assignment for the benefit of creditors had it been carried out before bankruptcy, is not necessarily, in law, no composition at all. *Matter of Graham & Sons (C. Good faith.—A bankrupt or alleged bankrupt, who, after having made and unsuccessfully endeavored to carry through an offer in composition of a certain amount, makes a new offer of a larger amount, undertakes a considerable burden of explanation as to his good faith. The practice of trading with the court and creditors on offers in composition is not to be encouraged. Matter of Griffith Stillings Press (D. C., Mass.), 39 Am. B. R. 813, 244 Fed. 315.

59. Matter of Spiller (D. C., Mass.), 36 Am. B. R. 399, 230 Fed. 490, in which the court says: "If the bankrupt, at the time of making the offer, has not received his discharge, the confirmation operates as one, and secures to him both his former property, and his discharge. In the present case the bankrupts received one of these before making the offer. It is difficult to see why that fact should restrict their right to redeem their property. The creditors could have objected to the discharges, but did not, and the grant of them completed one of the two principal branches of the case. The creditors could still object to a disposal of the estate in accordance with the offer in composition upon any ground specified in the statute. The fact that the discharges were obtained in the usual course seems to me no sufficient reason for denying the right to settle the estate through proceedings in composition."

d. Meeting of creditors.—The statute does not require the offer to be made at a meeting of creditors. Form No. 60 indicates the practice, for it provides for a petition for a meeting of creditors to act upon a proposal for composition. If the offer is made before adjudication, the amendment of 1910 requires the bankrupt to file the required schedules, and thereupon the court is required to call a meeting of the creditors for the allowance of claims, examination of the bankrupt, and preservations or conduct of estates, at which meeting the judge or referee shall preside. If the offer is made after adjudication it may be made at the first meeting of creditors,⁶¹ and it may even be oral; provided there has been an examination of the bankrupt begun at such meeting. But where there has been a reference, the offer and its acceptance should, in the first instance, be filed with the referee. It would seem also that such acceptance by the required number of creditors can be tendered immediately after the offer. This was not so under the former law. A special meeting of creditors, on not less than ten days' notice, was required whenever the bankrupt proposed a composition.

e. Acceptance by creditors.⁶²—(1) WHEN OFFER TO BE MADE.—But though the offer may be made, application for its confirmation cannot be made until after the offer has been accepted in writing by a majority in number of all creditors whose claims have been allowed representing a majority in amount. Claims can be allowed only in the way prescribed by the law.⁶³ It results, therefore, that, before application can be made for confirmation, an adjudication must be had, else there can be no allowed claims. Thus is accomplished the first wide gap between the former and the present law. There is no statutory limitation as to time of acceptance, and it is thought the consents of creditors can be obtained at any time after the petition for bankruptcy is filed, and, within the usual limitations as to laches, even after the year for the proving of claims has expired.⁶⁴ They could even be obtained at the first meeting, provided a majority in number and amount were present.

(2) HOW ACCEPTANCE OBTAINED.—Any paper containing an unqualified acceptance of the bankrupt's offer and signed by the creditor or a proxy duly authorized to that end, will comply with the statute. The usual method is to send printed forms of acceptance to the creditors. But there must be no improper influences or false representations used to secure signatures, lest the composition be refused confirmation on that ground.⁶⁵ A creditor who has once accepted cannot, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation, withdraw his acceptance.⁶⁶

Effect of amendment of 1910.—The idea of Congress in amending section 12a of the bankruptcy act so that a bankrupt may offer a composition before adjudication, but after he has been examined in open court and that upon filing schedules and suggesting a composition, the court shall call a meeting for such examination shows that the words "after but not before he has been examined in open court" were made to mean that the bankrupt might advance the time of examination and thereafter might present at once the offer of composition. Thus the purpose was plainly to shorten the time necessary in cases of honest composition, and to do away with the necessity of waiting for adjudication, first meeting, and subsequent notice of the meeting to prove claims and of the offer of composition. Hence, an offer of composition and the approval of certain creditors, may be presented as soon as the first meeting and the examination of the bankrupt have been completed, where notice that the offer would be made and considered has been given to creditors. Matter of Fox (D. C., N. Y.), 34 Am. B. R. 812, 222 Fed. 135.

(3) WHO MAY ACCEPT.—Only those creditors who have proved their claims before the application to conform is made are allowed to vote on the acceptance of a composition.⁶⁷ A creditor whose right to prove his claim is barred by the one-year limitation has no voice in a composition proceeding.⁶⁸ Priority claims are "allowed" like other claims, but, as the cash to pay them in full must be deposited as a condition precedent, the injustice of counting such claims is apparent. Secured claims will be counted only to the amount unsecured; they can be "allowed" only to such an amount.⁶⁹ Mortgagees whose debts are dependent solely upon the contingency of a deficiency arising upon foreclosure are neither necessary nor proper parties to a proposed composition.⁷⁰

(4) HOW MANY MUST ACCEPT.—Here the present statute is widely different from its predecessor. A majority only of claims allowed, constituting a majority in amount of such claims, is sufficient for the consent required by this subsection;⁷¹ and the assignee of a large number of creditors will be counted as one creditor only.⁷² An individual composition of a bankrupt partner of a bankrupt firm cannot be effected by the consent of the firm creditors and without the consent of a majority in number and amount of his individual creditors, even though the consenting majority of the firm creditors be more than a majority of number and amount of all creditors, firm and individual.⁷³ A bankrupt will not be permitted to select a time when but few creditors have proven their claims and then present his terms only to creditors friendly to his interests. Indeed, it has been thought that the phrasing of Form No. 60 implies that a court of bankruptcy should notify creditors of a meeting at which it is proposed to offer a composition; and such a practice in cases where but a small number of creditors or creditors apparently controlled by the bankrupt have proven, should usually be followed.⁷⁴

1. Deposit of consideration.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Not only must there be a requisite acceptance, but the consideration of the composition must have been deposited in such place as shall be designated by and subject to the order of the judge.^{74a} That this has been done will, if the acceptance is filed in the first instance with the referee, usually be shown by a certificate from the clerk. Whatever the nature of the consideration, it should in value be substantially as much as the property can reasonably be expected to yield to the creditors.⁷⁵

(2) NATURE AND AMOUNT OF CONSIDERATION.—Under the former law, where money was required to be deposited, it was frequently held that notes or other evidences of indebtedness could be deposited in lieu of money.⁷⁶ Whether this can be done under the present law was doubted by a previous editor of this work.⁷⁷ However, the setting-off of the word "consideration," as applied to common creditors, against the word "money," as applied to priority creditors, is significant; and the word "paid" but little affects the result. It is not doubted, therefore, that any consideration which would have been sufficient under the former law will be under this.⁷⁸ It seems established that the creditors may waive the actual deposit of money required to meet the terms of the composition, where it appears for the best interests of the creditors;⁷⁹ and this being so it would follow that notes or other evidences of indebtedness, postponing the payment of the amounts required, may be deposited.⁸⁰ The considerations tendered by a bankrupt should be substantially equivalent to what his estate would pay, were it fully administered in bankruptcy,⁸¹ and must be sufficient to cover the stipulated percentage on all claims of creditors, both those already filed and also those scheduled by the bankrupt and not filed.⁸² Secured claims, not liquidated, should not be considered in determining the amount.⁸³ While the section makes no reference to taxes, by § 64 they are made preferred claims, and the bankrupt must deposit a sufficient sum for their payment.⁸⁴ The fact that a creditor has received a preferential

Waiver of deposit.—Where attorneys for the bankrupt, for the trustees and petitioning creditors, and for the trustee himself, all waive in writing the deposit in a composition proceeding of a sum sufficient to pay their fees, in order to expedite and facilitate the proceeding, they may not thereafter insist on payment out of the estate. It seems that if the bankrupt be benefited by the waiver he himself should pay the attorneys. Matter of Frischknecht (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 530, 223 Fed. 417.

Unscheduled claims.—It may be that the bankrupt will be compelled to increase the deposit so as to cover unscheduled claims proved after the offer of composition. See Matter of Ennis (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 383, 183 Fed. 859.

Expenses on failure of composition.—Money loaned to a bankrupt and deposited by him for the purpose of a composition, is liable, in case the composition fails, for expenses reasonably incurred, but not for expenses resulting from the opposition of a creditor to the composition. Matter of Wiener (D. C., N. Y.), 33 Am. B. R. 355, 217 Fed. 173.

Time within which changes may be proven.—When an estate is to be administered it is necessary to put a time limit to the proving of claims, because the rate of dividend depends upon what claims are proven, but this is not so in a composition because the dividend is necessarily fixed by the bankrupt upon the schedules alone. transfer within the four months' period does not deprive him of his rights as a creditor, and the amount due on his claim may be considered in determining the amount of the deposit.⁸⁵

(3) WHEN DEPOSIT IN CASH IS NECESSARY.—Clearly, sufficient cash "to pay all debts which have priority and the cost of the proceedings" must be deposited.⁸⁶ This was not so under the former law, if there were no appreciable assets.⁸⁷ There can be no doubt, however, that now in all cases this cash deposit must be made. How the "cost of the proceeding" is to be ascertained in advance is a bit puzzling. It includes the referee's, and, since the amendatory act of 1903, the trustee's commission, and the allowances to the attorneys for the bankrupt at least, and may include receivers' and appraisers' fees, and allowances to the attorneys for petitioning creditors. The only safe practice would seem to be to deposit such a sum as will certainly be larger than the total of all possible expenses, allowances, and fees.⁸⁸

Compensation of referee.—Where a bankrupt upon application for the confirmation of a composition has filed with the court certain obligations in lieu of a portion of the cash deposit required, and has agreed with the court to pay costs and expenses the same as if the money were actually in court, the referee is entitled to the commissions under section 40 of the Bankruptcy Act, based upon the amount paid. Matter of White & Co. (D. C., Ga.), 35 Am. B. R. 670, 225 Fed. 793.

In the case of Kinhead v. Bacon & Sons (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 36 Am. B. R. 390, 230 Fed. 302, it was held that a referee is entitled to a commission of one-half of one per cent on the amount "to be paid by the bankrupt to creditors" regardless of the fact that payment was not made directly by the bankruptcy court. The amount to be paid "may include sums to which certain note-holders were entitled by virtue of the composition proceedings." And see Matter of Batterman (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 36 Am. B. R. 695, 231 Fed. 699, holding that where cash deposits for the whole amount agreed to be paid are waived by the creditors, and a part is taken in notes to be paid by third parties, the referee is entitled to his commission on all claims actually paid. See also under § 40, post.

Expense chargeable against funds on failure of composition.—Upon an application for withdrawal of a fund deposited by a bankrupt for the purpose of composition, which he had procured, from a third person after adjudication, expenses incurred during the pendency of the composition offer, which would not have been incurred if the orders of the court previous to composition had been carried out, and if the property had been sold in the usual manner, should be paid out of such fund. Matter of Wiener (D. C., N. Y.), 32 Am. B. R. 777, 215 Fed. 278.

Expenses of composition.—Where a bankrupt has voluntarily deposited for his attorneys and for the attorney for the petitioning creditors an amount exceeding the total maximum fees of the receiver, said amount may be used to meet the expenses of the composition and of the bankruptcy proceedings. Matter of Miller (D. C., N. Y.), 40 Am. B. R. 153, 243 Fed. 242.

Cost of proceedings.—In the case of In re Harris (D. C., Tenn.), 9 Am. B. R. 20, 117 Fed. 575, the court said: "Composition is wholly a matter of arrangement by the bankrupt and his creditors, and the negotiations should always comprehend a disposition of all the costs, with a definite understanding of amounts and the method of their payment. If there be an attorney's fee not waived, the attorney should agree with the parties on the amount, or if disagreed, application should be made to the court to fix the fee, and so of the receiver or the trustee; and with every item not distinctly fixed by the statutes or rules of practice, this should be done, as a preliminary of the composition agreement and as a part of it. When the amounts are ascertained, the parties should agree whether the costs come out of the deposit for creditors, or whether the bankrupt provides an additional sum to meet costs."

Counsel and referee fees.—In a case where the bankrupt, by a mortgage of his wife's property, had raised a sufficient amount to offer a composition of 40 cents on the dollar, the attorney for the petitioning creditors was allowed $50, the attorney for the bankrupt $20, and the referee was refused an al-

(4) DEPOSIT OF ASSETS OF ESTATE.— Under the present law, title to the assets of the estate generally passes from the bankrupt before he offers the composition; it may even have vested in a trustee. Thus, where there has been a sale of perishable property by an assignee, which is ratified by the trustee and the avails turned over to him. The difficulty is, however, more theoretical than real, for the offer of composition could provide for notes payable on a day certain, and on that day, the composition having been meanwhile confirmed, the court could order the notes surrendered to the bankrupt in exchange for cash in the hands of the trustee, and that the latter be disbursed in place of notes. Section 12-e has been thought an insuperable obstacle to this practice; but, it is suggested that a court of bankruptcy will not dismiss the proceeding until its work is done, and that, therefore, the express provisions of the former law, requiring the enforcement of the composition by the court, by implication at least, still survive.⁸⁹ The opposite view would, in the nature of things, make compositions impossible, save through a loan on the security of property to which the bankrupt has not title. In effect, it would render a beneficent and wise system of arrangement between the debtor and his creditors but an exasperating illusion. It can safely be asserted, then, that, even under the present law, the assets of the bankrupt, after the same are vested in the trustee, can be used by him, if not by direct deposit, at least by indirection, to accomplish a composition.⁹⁰

g. Practice before confirmation.— (1) IN GENERAL.— Much that has gone before indicates the steps in composition proceedings up to the application for confirmation.

(2) "EXAMINED."— This does not necessarily mean that the examination of the bankrupt must be completed, but that there must have been a sufficient examination. If creditors so desire, the judge or referee will, in proper cases, adjourn the meeting to permit an extended examination, before allowing the offer to be made. If there is no meeting pending, and there has been no previous examination, one must be called for the purpose of examination, and the regular procedure to that end must be observed.⁹¹

(3) ASCERTAINING WHETHER A MAJORITY HAS CONSENTED.— This seems to be the duty of the referee, where the case has been referred. Only those creditors may accept a composition who could vote for trustee. This excludes, allowance as special master in the composition proceedings where he was well paid in the bankruptcy proceedings, his fees amounting to $40. In re Talton (D. C., N. Car.), 14 Am. B. R. 617, 137 Fed. 178.

Costs of attorney of bankrupt.— An application to confirm a composition made by an involuntary bankrupt is no part of the administration of the estate, so as to authorize the payment under section 64(3) of the bankruptcy act of a claim for the fees and disbursements of an attorney employed by bankrupt upon the contest of such an application. In re Fogarty (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 568, 187 Fed. 773.

Expenses of continuing bankruptcy proceeding.— After an offer of composition by a bankrupt, the expenses of continuing the bankruptcy proceeding for the purpose of the composition, instead of for liquidation of the estate, should be secured by the bankrupt, and, if necessary, paid out of the amount deposited for the purpose of the composition. besides priority creditors and secured creditors to the amount of their securities,⁹² preferred creditors also, for the reason that their claims, if presented, will not be allowed unless accompanied by a surrender.⁹³

(4) REPORTING TO THE JUDGE.—Only the judge has power to confirm a composition.⁹⁴ If the offer and acceptance are made after reference, the referee will arrest the proceedings and report the proposed composition to the judge. This may be done by handing up a transcript of his record-book, showing (1) the filing of the debtor's schedules, (2) his examination, (3) his offer, (4) its acceptance by the required majority in number and amount of claims allowed, (5) the consideration to be deposited, and (6) a list of creditors and their addresses, the referee meanwhile, however, keeping the meeting of creditors alive by repeated continuances, so as to permit a prompt resumption of administration in case the proposed composition is not confirmed. If it is, the referee has no other duty, save subsequently, to report the case closed. The proper practice is detailed in the "Supplementary Forms," post.⁹⁵

V. CONFIRMING OR REJECTING COMPOSITION.⁹⁶

a. Who may oppose composition.—Creditors may oppose a composition irrespective of the number or amount of their claims.⁹⁷ The assignee of an original claim against a bankrupt is entitled to object to the confirmation of a composition.⁹⁸

b. Objections to confirmation.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The objection that the composition is not offered in accordance with the law (as where it is asserted that a majority in number and amount has not consented), which was a statutory objection under the former law, should probably now be taken specially; and, in that event, opportunity to correct the error will probably be given. It seems that only grounds which can be alleged in the formal written objections are those stated in subsection d.⁹⁹ The court is only concerned with the bankrupt estate; it has nothing to do with that part of the agreement which provides for raising funds which do not come out of the estate.¹⁰⁰

(2) BECAUSE AGAINST THE BEST INTERESTS OF THE CREDITORS.—This was an objection under the former law and useful precedents will be found in the reported cases. The English rule seems to be that, unless fraud is shown, the decision of the creditors will be final.¹⁰¹ That this is not the rule in this country is emphasized by the requirement of the present statute that the judge must be "satisfied." The court should confirm, "if satisfied" that the composition does not run counter to any of the three conditions named in § 12-d.¹⁰² That an offer of composition may, on its face, be suggestive of disadvantage to the creditors as compared with the bankruptcy proceedings does not per se stamp it with invalidity, nor make it proper for the court to reject it without opportunity for its consideration.^{102a} If, however, the composition proceedings are not in accordance with the provisions of the bankruptcy act, if they are irregular, the court cannot confirm.¹⁰³ The point usually made is that the offer is less than would be realized on a sale of the assets in bankruptcy. It is the duty of the court to investigate the facts, independently of any agreement or composition the creditors may have made.¹⁰⁴ In deciding whether the composition should be approved or rejected the sum offered should be compared with what the creditors would receive through the trustee and not with what the debtor might be able to pay them. In the absence of fraud and concealment, the question for the court is not whether the debtor might have offered more, but whether his estate will pay more in bankruptcy.¹⁰⁵ The mere fact that an estate will, on full administration, pay more than the offer in composition, is not sufficient cause for refusing confirmation; if the amount offered is very considerably less than the amount which might be expected reasonably to be realized from administration, the composition is not for the best interests of the creditors and should not be approved.¹⁰⁶ The approval of the majority of the creditors is evidence, prima facie, that the composition is for the best interests of the creditors and the burden is upon those who attach it to show the contrary.¹⁰⁷ There must be a positive showing to rebut the presumption that the action of the majority is for the interest of all;¹⁰⁸ yet any gross discrepancy between the offer and the amount to be reasonably expected from the sale of the assets will justify a refusal to confirm;¹⁰⁹ but where the difference is but slight and necessarily problematical, the composition should be confirmed.¹¹⁰ A bona fide offer of a substantially larger sum for the assets than the bankrupt, through the composition, is willing to pay, would seem sufficient to warrant a rejection of the composition.^{110a} That part of a composition agreement which provides for a provisional order of adjudication will not be approved.¹¹¹ In the nature of things, each case must turn on its own facts.

(3) BECAUSE OF COMMISSION OF ACTS OR FAILURE TO PERFORM DUTIES WHICH WOULD BAR A DISCHARGE.—This objection was not available under the former law. But since the confirmation of a composition discharges the bankrupt,¹¹² it is reasonable that the same grounds which prevent a discharge on a direct petition should also prevent a discharge on an application for confirmation of a composition.¹¹³ The intention clearly is to prevent one who cannot get a discharge from securing its equivalent through a composition.¹¹⁴ If a bankrupt has committed an offense available as an objection to his discharge the court will refuse to confirm the proposed composition without regard to the interests of the creditors, and the fact that but one creditor objects is of no importance,¹¹⁵ as where it appears that the bankrupt has failed to keep books from which his true financial condition might be ascertained,¹¹⁶ or made a false oath to his schedules,^{116a} or where it appears that the bankrupt by a materially false financial statement in writing obtained property from the objecting creditor,¹¹⁷ or where partners take all the money available from the firm's assets immediately before the appointment of a receiver in a State court with the intent to hinder, delay and defraud creditors.¹¹⁸ But a preferential payment on an existing indebtedness does not necessarily constitute a fraudulent conveyance so as to bar the confirmation of a composition.¹¹⁹ The new objections to discharges¹²⁰ will make this subsection more valuable. It is thought that the provision that a petition for a discharge cannot be filed after a year rating from a commercial agency and not for the specific purpose of obtaining credit on any particular sale, and sales were made under circumstances where inquiry of the bankrupt himself was possible. Matter of Witman (D. C., N. Y.), 32 Am. B. R. 780, 215 Fed. 286.

False statement to procure credit.—Where a debtor, who had credit with a trust company not exceeding $1,000, rendered a financial statement to it in order to increase his credit, and stipulated that such statement should be considered as continuing in force until the company was notified to the contrary, and the officers of the company testified that they were not notified of any changes in the financial condition of the debtor, and relied upon his statement, which was false, in all subsequent transactions with him, and at the time of the debtor's bankruptcy he owed the company only $500, an objection by the company to the bankrupt's offer of composition must be sustained. Matter of Levenson (D. subsequent to the adjudication does not apply to compositions. A composition has primarily to do with administration, and that may, from one cause or another, be delayed for years. For available objections to a discharge, see under sections fourteen and twenty-nine of this work.

(4) BECAUSE OF ABSENCE OF GOOD FAITH.—Where the entire course of conduct of a bankrupt is consistent only with an intent to keep his creditors and his trustee in ignorance, and to defraud them by a concealment of his assets, the court cannot confirm a composition.¹²¹ Fraud is sufficient to warrant a refusal to confirm,¹²² but it must be fraud connected with the offer or acceptance of the composition. Cases cited under the succeeding section will also be found in point. Fraud on the part of a single creditor is sufficient,¹²³ as where a creditor proves a false claim.¹²⁴ The giving of money to induce a creditor to sign vitiates the composition,¹²⁵ and, if it is extorted by the creditor, is a crime also.¹²⁶ Any secret advantage given one creditor over his fellows accomplishes the same result.¹²⁷ Where it clearly appears that preferential payments have been made, which, if recovered, would result in a greater percentage than that obtained by the composition, such composition should not be affirmed.¹²⁸ Purchasing claims for the purpose of using them to accomplish a composition is not necessarily fraudulent, but will be so held unless an honest motive appears.¹²⁹ Procuring acceptance of a composition before the examination of the bankrupt is an irregularity for which confirmation of the composition will be denied.^{129a} Improperly inducing a creditor to withdraw has the same effect as improperly persuading him to join in the composition. The good faith of both debtor and creditors must be of the highest order.

c. Withdrawal of objections.—Where specifications of objections to the confirmation of a composition are withdrawn, the proposed composition will not be confirmed until after a hearing before the referee to inquire whether the creditors who withdrew their objections were related to the bankrupt, whether objections were well founded, and what grounds there are for believing that the composition will be for the best interests of the creditors.¹³⁰ Objections to an offer in composition cannot be withdrawn after they have been sustained, under an agreement by which the objecting creditor received, directly or indirectly, a larger amount on its claim than other creditors of the same class.¹³¹

Inducement to withdraw objections.—The court will not permit objections to an offer in composition which have been heard and sustained to be withdrawn after the decision, under any agreement or transaction by which the objecting creditor received, directly or indirectly, a larger amount on its claim than other creditors of the same class. Matter of Levinson (D. C. Mass.), 35 Am. B. R. 260, 223 Fed. 874.

d. Effect of fraud on a composition already confirmed.—Not only may the composition be objected to, but if obtained by fraud, it is void and unenforceable, and the consideration may be recovered.¹³² It would seem, however—a certified copy of the order confirming a composition being evidence of the jurisdiction of the court, the regularity of the proceedings and the fact that the order was made,¹³³ that a composition if attacked for fraud must be so attacked in a court of bankruptcy. It must appear that there was actual fraud, and not mere suspicion of it, to justify setting aside a composition which has been confirmed.¹³⁴

e. Rules of evidence.—A creditor objecting to the confirmation of a composition, has the burden of proving his allegations. But when a set of facts is shown which, unexplained, would lead a reasonable man to believe the allegations of the objecting creditor, the bankrupt must explain.^{134a}

f. Practice.—The practice, from the time the referee's report reaches the judge, is identical with that on contested applications for discharge,¹³⁵ except perhaps, as modified by subsection c "parties in interest" is a broader term than "creditors." The same phrase is used in § 14-b. It is difficult to suppose a case when it will include others than those persons who have proved or may prove their claims. Ordinarily, after the time to enter appearances has expired, and there are none and no objections, there is a reference in any event to the referee in charge, as special master,¹³⁶ it being the duty of the court to satisfy itself as to the three facts set out in subsection d.¹³⁷ In this the practice differs from that on discharges. When objections are filed, there must be a hearing, and the same reference to a special master is customary. The date and place fixed for the hearing must be convenient, but the former is usually set after conference with the respective attorneys. Where the specifications of objections to the confirmation of a composition are meritorious they may be amended to conform to the proof.¹³⁸ The court may allow costs in its discretion. A bankrupt, after composition, including payment of all costs, has been confirmed, must pay his attorney in the matter.¹³⁹ Upon the refusal to confirm a composition the court has no jurisdiction to order that a deed of the trustee be expunged from the records.^{139a} It is discretionary with a referee, whether or not to call a final meeting after a composition has been accepted and confirmed by the court.^{139b} An application to the Circuit Court of Appeals for a writ of mandamus to compel the district judge who has filed an opinion confirming a composition, to sign and docket a decree or order confirming the composition for the purpose of allowing the petitioners a further opportunity to appeal, is not to be granted unless a clear case of necessity, is made out.^{139c}

itor the payment of a certain dividend, in order to induce such creditor to sign a composition agreement, constitutes a secret preference to such creditor, and, although it does not render void the composition, it is void itself, as being against public policy. *Jacobs v. VI. DISTRIBUTION IN COMPOSITION.

a. In general.—Subsection e provides that “upon the confirmation of a composition, the consideration shall be distributed as the judge shall direct, and the case dismissed.” It will be noticed that the judge is to direct as to the manner of distribution, and the referee has no jurisdiction unless delegated to him by the judge.¹⁴⁰

b. Practice.—The law is silent as to the practice on distribution. The consideration has been deposited “in such place as shall be designated by the judge.”¹⁴¹ It can only be distributed “by check or warrant, signed by the clerk of the court, or by a trustee, and countersigned by the judge of the court, or by a referee designated for that purpose, or by the clerk or his assistant under an order made by the judge.”¹⁴² But the distribution may be made “as the judge shall direct.” Form No. 63 seems to imply that it shall be made by the clerk, and this practice, amplified by district rules, has been generally adopted. At the same time, a convenient method is to make the referee in charge a distributing agent to the extent of performing the clerical work required;¹⁴³ the checks, however, to be signed by the clerk. Otherwise, the referee should furnish the clerk with a list of claims allowed, specifying the names, amounts, addresses, and the like.¹⁴⁴ As to the proof of claims the course of proceeding is the same whether there be composition, or the proceedings are carried through in ordinary course. Claims not proved within one year from the date of adjudication are not to share in the composition funds,¹⁴⁵ and the bankrupt may be heard to object to the allowance in composition of a claim offered for proof after the expiration of such year.¹⁴⁶ Where an unscheduled claim is not proved until after the deposit for a composition is made though proved within one year from the adjudication and before confirmation, the claimant is not entitled to share pro rata with the other creditors in the funds deposited but if there is any balance left after the other payments, it is

The facts and circumstances which bear upon the advisability of confirming the offer are no part of the offer itself, but are properly presentable at the hearing of the offer and the objections thereto. Matter of Graham & Sons (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 42 Am. B. R. 52, 232 Fed. 93.

Allowances to attorney of bankrupt.—In the case of In re Fogarty (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 568, 187 Fed. 773, the court said: “If, because the professional services in this case were rendered in the bankruptcy court—in the administration of the bankruptcy law—the attorney’s fees are therefore costs of administration within the meaning of section 64, nevertheless such fees are not payable from the estate unless the services were rendered to the bankrupt while he was in the performance of some duty prescribed by the act. No duty was laid upon him to try to settle the case and get back his property. That was a privilege, not a duty. If it be said that an application for a discharge is likewise merely a privilege, that the bankrupt’s costs in connection with the hearing upon his application for a discharge are payable from the estate, that the confirmation of a composition is equivalent to a discharge, and that therefore his costs in connection with the prosecution of his composition offer should also be payable from the estate, we think the following considerations are a sufficient answer. Attendance in the one case is made by the letter of the statute the bankrupt’s duty; in the other, not. Though a confirmed composition has the effect of a discharge, and though confirmation may be opposed on grounds that would prevent a discharge, the first question for the judge is whether the composition is for the best interests of the creditors, and this question has nothing to do with the right to a discharge. This question might be clearly determinable without the attendance of the bankrupt. Upon the judge is laid the duty of becoming “satisfied” that the composition offer is fair. If questions should arise which the judge thought might not be rightly solved without the attendance of the bankrupt and his attorney to aid in determining what was for the best interests of the creditors, it is possible that under section 7-a (2) he might make a “lawful order” requiring the attendance of the bankrupt and his attorney at the expense of the estate. But the issue here is whether the bankrupt can recover from the estate the fees and disbursements of his attorney in endeavoring to force a dismissal of the case and a restoration of the seized property when neither the letter of the statute nor an order of the court imposed upon the bankrupt the obligation to make such a contest. Our interpretation of the sections herein referred to, in connection with the spirit of the act as an entirety, is against the bankrupt’s contention.”

to be applied to the claim of such claimant to the extent of his dividend.¹⁴⁷ It seems that none of the officers named in the act can collect additional fees for making the distribution, their fees being limited by both it and the general orders. Now that the trustee may receive an allowance in composition cases,¹⁴⁸ such officer, if appointed, may properly be called upon to distribute the consideration.

c. Dismissal of the case.—Not until the distribution is completed, should the case be dismissed. If scheduled debts remain unproved or claimants cannot be found, the case proceeds to final distribution as in cases of unclaimed dividends.¹⁴⁹ Section 12-e does not mean that after confirming a composition the court has lost all further power over the case except to distribute the consideration. The case is to be dismissed, but "dismissed" in this connection can mean no more than that the court is not to proceed further with its administration of the estate under the bankruptcy act. It does not mean that there is to be no longer any case before the court. Immediate dismissal is neither directed nor intended. Dismissal is to be when everything remaining for the court to do has been done, and not before, and until that time has arrived the referee has power to act in the case for any proper purpose.¹⁵⁰

VII. NONPERFORMANCE OF COMPOSITION.

If the consideration for the composition has not for any reason been paid by it, the remedy of the creditor for the recovery thereof is against it as upon a new cause of action, which is not affected by the discharge.¹⁵¹ In New York a failure to carry out to the letter a composition agreement revives the original debts.¹⁵²

VIII. APPEALS.

Whether there may be an appeal from the order of a judge confirming or refusing to confirm a composition has already been somewhat debated. The word "satisfied" suggests a discretion from which no appeal will lie; the words of § 25-a emphasize this impression. That an appeal will not lie has been held,¹⁵³ though that ruling was reversed by the Circuit Court of Appeals of the sixth circuit.¹⁵⁴ The latter decision has already been departed from in the first circuit;¹⁵⁵ indeed, it may be suggested that it loses sight of the fundaing that a certain sum expended in the payment of counsel who conducted inquiries into the affairs of the bankrupt and disclosed facts leading to the discovery of preferences, without the request of the receiver, but with his knowledge and without his dissent, should be repaid, the District Court, in confirming the composition, properly declined to allow the payment of said sum. Matter of Siegel (D. mental difference between a discharge¹⁵⁶ and a composition, which, strictly, is a branch of administration, and, for convenience only, has the effect of a discharge. Even if confirmation is refused, the bankrupt is not aggrieved, for his rights were exercised when he made the offer, and he may still apply for a discharge in the bankruptcy proceeding. He, at least, should not be heard on the appeal. If he cannot, creditors surely cannot, as not within the words or intendment of § 25-a. The question is, however, still an open one.¹⁵⁷ It has been held that the creditors assenting to a composition, and who have received the amount due them thereunder, are necessary parties to an appeal from the order of confirmation.¹⁵⁸

COMPOSITIONS, WHEN SET ASIDE.

§ 13. Compositions, When Set Aside.—a The judge may, upon the application of parties in interest filed at any time within six months after a composition has been confirmed, set the same aside and reinstate the case if it shall be made to appear upon a trial that fraud was practiced in the procuring of such composition, and that the knowledge thereof has to come to the petitioners since the confirmation of such composition.

I. WHEN COMPOSITION WILL BE SET ASIDE.

a. In general.—The striking similarity between this section and § 15, relative to the revocation of a discharge, should be noted at the outset.¹ The marked difference between it and the corresponding clauses of the former law will also be observed.² Then, a composition could be set aside, if it appeared that, in consequence of legal difficulties, or for any sufficient cause, it could not proceed without injustice or undue delay. This, with the added objection that "the approval of the court was obtained by fraud," is the law in England to-day.³ This added objection stands alone in our present law. Those available under the law of 1867 have been discarded. Most of the cases under that law are thus of little value.⁴

b. What constitutes fraud.—Fraud as a reason for refusing to confirm a composition has been discussed under section twelve, ante.⁵ Such fraud as would warrant the refusal of confirmation to a composition will warrant its setting aside, with this difference: the fraud must have been discovered since the confirmation of the composition.⁶ It must, of course, have been practiced in the procuring of the composition. In this respect § 13 is clearly a limitation on § 2 (9).⁷ Only when a fraud, as thus restricted, appears and is proven, can the jurisdiction to set aside a composition and reinstate the case be exercised.⁸ The court may annul the composition where it appears that the fraud was that of the trustee and the bankrupt in inducing creditors to accept it by misrepresentation and concealment.⁹ The making of a false schedule, and a false oath to a schedule, and the concealment of property by the bankrupt constitute fraud "practiced in the procuring of such composition."¹⁰ It is fraud sufficient to justify the setting aside of a composition, to assure a creditor that his claim will be included, while it was the purpose of the bankrupt to secure a confirmation of the composition without the consideration of such claim.¹¹ In considering an application to set aside a composition the court may determine whether the fraud shown is such that, had the circumstances been known at the time of the confirmation, the composition would have been rejected.¹² The utmost good faith must be observed by all the parties to the composition, and a secret promise by the debtor to pay one creditor more than others is False statements of third person.—A composition offered by a banker and accepted and confirmed cannot be set aside on the ground that the state superintendent of banks who was appointed a receiver of the bank, and his assistant made false statements as to the assets of the bankrupt. Matter of Kass (D. C., N. Y.), 45 Am. B. R. 301, 263 Fed. 138.

9. In re Wrisley Co. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 13 Am. B. R. 193, 133 Fed. 388.

Misrepresentation as to value when all of the bankrupt's property is turned over to a corporation organized for the purpose of administering the same under the composition does not require the composition to be set aside at the instance of a creditor. Matter of Kass (D. C., N. Y.), 45 Am. B. R. 301, 263 Fed. 138.

10. In re Roukous (D. C., R. I.), 12 Am. B. R. 128, 128 Fed. 645; In re Kaplan (D. C., Pa., Ref.), 29 Am. B. R. 54, holding that a bankrupt knowingly and fraudulently concealing from his trustee assets to a large amount and making a false oath in having sworn that his schedules were correct and that they contained a true statement of all his assets, constitute fraud "practiced in the procuring of such composition" within the meaning of section 13, and warrant the setting aside of the composition upon a petition, filed within six months after its confirmation, by creditors who had no knowledge of such fraud at the time of the confirmation, or at any time prior thereto.

11. Matter of Abrams & Rubins (D. C., N. Y.), 23 Am. B. R. 25, 173 Fed. 430.

12. Matter of Sacharoff & Kleiner (D. C., N. Y.), 20 Am. B. R. 814, 163 Fed. 664, in which case it appeared that on a composition certain creditors received promissory notes in excess of their pro rata share, and because of inability to pay any of the composition notes a second petition in bankruptcy had been filed against the bankrupt, and the motion of a creditor who had himself received a preference was denied, and the notes declared void.

unenforceable and may affect the validity of the composition.¹³ A failure to fulfill the terms of the composition agreement will not of itself be sufficient basis for setting aside the composition. A bankrupt may by his acts deprive himself of the benefit of a composition; he may so behave that the composition order ceases to be a shield, but that furnishes no reason why the order should be vacated in any other manner or for any other reason than that specified in the act.¹⁴

II. PRACTICE ON APPLICATION TO SET ASIDE COMPOSITION.

a. Who may make application.—The application to set aside a composition must be made by the parties in interest. This will generally be deemed equivalent to the "creditors" of the bankrupt, although often meaning more.¹⁵ A creditor who has assigned his claim, although induced to do so by the bankrupt's misrepresentations, is not a "party in interest."¹⁶ But the assignee of an original claim against a bankrupt is entitled to object to the confirmation of a commission on the ground of fraudulent concealment and disposal of assets.¹⁷

b. To whom and when made.—The application should be made to the judge, and should be filed within six months after the composition has been confirmed.¹⁸ The judge only has power to hear the application, not, however, because of the limitation on analogous proceedings found in § 38-a (4), but because only "the judge . . . may set . . . aside a composition." A referee to whom a petition to set aside a composition has been referred may grant an order reopening the estate.¹⁹

c. Petition; practice as on discharge.—The petition should show (1) that the petitioner is a party in interest, (2) that the composition was confirmed not more than six month before, (3) that fraud was practiced in procuring it and the nature and perpetrators of such fraud, and (4) that such fraud was not discovered by the petitioner until after the confirmation of the composition.²⁰ It is not necessary to allege that the petitioner restored, or offered to restore, the consideration on the discovery of the fraud, nor need he tender the same into court.²¹ Leave to file the petition should be granted unless from the facts

19. Matter of Sonnabend (Ref., Mass.), 18 Am. B. R. 117, wherein the court said: "The pendency of a petition to set aside a composition does not operate to prohibit the referee from exercising his right independently of, or in conjunction with, such application, to reopen an estate, and such reopening is not an interference with the administration of said estate."

20. See In re Roukous (D. C., R. I.), 12 Am. B. R. 128, 128 Fed. 645; Matter of Ennis (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 383, 183 Fed. 859; In re Wilkins (D. C., N. Y.), 27 Am. B. Explanation of rule.—In In re Roukous (D. C., R. I.), 12 Am. B. R. 128, 128 Fed. 645, the court, in so holding, said: "The object of the petition is to secure additional therein alleged it is clear that the petitioner cannot be afforded the relief asked for.²² Where a petition by a creditor to vacate a composition upon the ground of fraud has been sustained after a demurrer was interposed thereto, the petitioner must elect whether to accept his share of the composition or to take his chance of proving the allegations of his petition.²³ In the absence of rules of practice, the procedure followed when application is made to revoke a discharge, perhaps, even the practice on application for a discharge, may be adopted.²⁴

d. Notice to creditors.—Notice should be given to all creditors,²⁵ they, and not the bankrupt, being the real parties in interest; but not necessarily the notice required by § 58-a. The former law prescribes the practice on notice. It is thought that an order to show cause, similar to that used on an application for discharge, will be sufficient. But the judge can change the form or method of service, and make it returnable when or where he wishes; but, from the analogy of other sections, both time and place should, however, be convenient for the parties in interest.

e. Trial.—It has been thought that the word "trial" makes a jury necessary. Not only is the proceeding a purely equitable remedy, but, elsewhere in the statute, the same word is used in such ways as to negative, in connection with the clear meaning of § 566 of the Revised Statutes as limited by § 19 of the law, such a view. The hearing required in §§ 12 and 14 is, therefore, no different from the trial made mandatory by §§ 13 and 15. In actual practice, these trials will usually be before the referee sitting as a special master.

f. Impeaching the order setting aside.—This cannot be done collaterally. A certified copy is evidence of jurisdiction, regularity, and that the order was made.²⁶

III. EFFECT OF SETTING ASIDE.

Setting aside the composition reverts the title in the trustee; but, it does more. It takes from the debtor all property acquired since the adjudication and applies it in payment of debts contracted while the composition was in force.²⁷ This is the only approximation in our statute to the English doctrine that results in drawing in all property acquired after the receiving order and before the discharge. The rule, too, is eminently just. As to payments made under the composition, it seems that they are not affected.²⁸ The order setting aside also reinstates the case, and provision is made elsewhere in the statute for the election of a trustee in such cases.²⁹ A trustee once elected, the case proceeds as though there had been no composition, and every one is restored, so far as possible, to the rights and remedies existent at the time the composition was confirmed.

payments. There is no apparent reason why a petitioner who has received less than his due should surrender this as a condition precedent to getting the full amount to which he is entitled. The setting aside of a composition will not ordinarily have the effect of invalidating pro rata payments made in pursuance of the composition."

SECTION FOURTEEN.

DISCHARGES, WHEN GRANTED.

§ 14. Discharges, when Granted.—a Any person may, after the expiration of one month and within the next twelve months subsequent to being adjudged a bankrupt, file an application for a discharge in the court of bankruptcy in which the proceedings are pending; if it shall be made to appear to the judge that the bankrupt was unavoidably prevented from filing it within such time, it may be filed within but not after the expiration of the next six months.

I. HISTORY AND COMPARATIVE LEGISLATION.

a. Discharges under Roman and continental systems.—Republican Rome punished the bankrupt with slavery, and, it is said, in some cases, even permitted the creditors to prorate the debtor's body, as well as his estate; Rome under the emperors, however, granted a discharge to the honest insolvent. The savagery of the early Latins, though much softened, still survives in the continental bankruptcy systems of to-day. Thus, in France, not only must a bankrupt in effect pay his debts in full, but there are three classes of bankrupts: (1) those whose condition is due to misfortune, and who are, therefore, not liable to imprisonment; (2) those who have been guilty of misconduct not tantamount to an actual fraud, who may be imprisoned from one month to two years; and (3) those whose bankruptcy is fraudulent, who may be sentenced to penal servitude for not less than five nor more than twenty years. These restraints on the liberty of the dishonest trader are characteristic of all European laws. They are a survival of the time when inability to pay a debt was a crime.

b. Discharges under English and Canadian systems.—England stands about midway between the above referred to systems and our own. Fraudulent bankruptcy is a crime,⁵ but, except as against certain well-defined statutory objections, a discharge may generally be obtained whatever be the rate per cent. paid.⁶ The Canadian act is similar in effect to the English statute as regards discharges.^{6a}

c. Origin and nature of the discharge.—We have grown to look upon the discharge feature as the primal element of bankruptcy jurisprudence. Being too easily obtained, it has resulted in abuse, and, therefore, reprobation. The fact is, however, that the discharge feature was not grafted on our Anglo-Saxon bankruptcy system until the fourth year of Anne, two hundred and fifty years after England's first bankruptcy law, and that, in its inception, it was a device to keep bankrupts in England.⁷ Strictly speaking, it is no more a part of a bankruptcy law — which concerns itself with the equitable division of a debtor's assets — than are those sections which define bankruptcy crimes. It is unfortunate that our legislators and jurists have so long overlooked its origin. Else we would not to-day, from this point of view, seem a people given to financial jubilees.⁸ The fundamental and original element of every system of bankruptcy has been to provide for and regulate the distribution of the bankrupt's property equally among his creditors; latterly a second element was added in the provisions for discharge upon such terms and conditions as the act may provide.⁹

5. See English Debtors Act of 1869, Part II.

6. English law as to discharge.—Since the bankruptcy act of 1890 in England, the court has, on proof of certain facts like our objections to a discharge, four options, (1) to refuse the discharge absolutely, (2) to suspend it for not less than two years, (3) to suspend it until a dividend of not less than 50 per cent has been paid, or (4) to require the bankrupt to permit entry of judgment for the balance unpaid, execution, however, not to issue thereon without leave of court. Act of 1890, § 8 (2).

The facts, or objections to discharge as we would call them, are (1) that, save in cases of misfortune not amounting to misconduct, the assets do not amount to ten shillings in the pound, or (2) the bankrupt's omission to keep proper books of account within three years, or (3) continuance in trade after knowing himself to be insolvent, or (4) the contracting of a debt without at the time having reasonable ground or expectation of ability to pay it, or (5) the failure to account satisfactorily for deficiency in assets, or (6) that the bankruptcy was brought on by rash speculation, extravagances in living, gambling or culpable neglect of business, or (7) his interposing any frivolous or vexatious defense to any action properly brought, or (8) within three months incurred unjustifiable expense in so doing, or (9) while insolvent and within three months gives an undue preference, or (10) within three months incurred liabilities for the purpose of making his assets equal to ten shillings in the pound, or (11) had a previous bankruptcy, composition or arrangement with creditors, or (12) been guilty of fraud or fraudulent breach of trust. Act of 1890, §§ 8 (3) (a) (b) (c) (d) (e) (f) (g) (h) (i) (j) (k) (l).

d. Discharges in the United States.—Each of our laws, save that of 1800, was the result of agitation in the interest of the hopeless insolvents of well-known periods of financial depression. Our first law required the consent of two-thirds in number and value of the creditors, and a discharge might be withheld for concealment of assets, fraud, losses in gambling, and the like.¹⁰ Available objections under the law of 1841, among others of less importance, were fraud, concealment of assets, preference of creditors, wilful omission or refusal to obey orders of the court, misappropriation of trust funds, or, if a merchant, failure to keep books of account; nor could a discharge be granted—subject, however, to a judicial inquiry as to its justness—where a majority in number and value of creditors filed a written dissent.¹¹ The law of 1867, modeled in this feature after the then English law, went further and denied a discharge to him who had wilfully sworn falsely in the proceeding, or concealed assets, or been guilty of fraud or negligence as to his property, or destroyed or falsified his books, or secreted his assets with intent to defraud, or given a fraudulent preference, or made a fraudulent transfer, or lost property in gaming, or admitted or failed to disclose a fictitious debt, or if a merchant, had not kept proper books, or procured the assent of a creditor by a pecuniary consideration, or in contemplation of bankruptcy made a preference, or been convicted of a crime under the act, or been guilty of any fraud contrary to the true intent of the law.¹² After the first year, and until 1874, the debtor was obliged to pay fifty cents on the dollar, unless he had the consent of a majority in number and value of creditors to take a less sum;¹³ a restriction which, after 1874, was abolished in involuntary cases, and modified in voluntary cases to a required dividend of thirty per cent., save with the assent of one-fourth of the creditors in number and one-third in amount.¹⁴ Nor, save by consent of creditors, was a bankrupt granted a second discharge, short of paying seventy cents on the dollar to all creditors.¹⁵ There were undoubtedly frauds on creditors, followed by discharges, under that law, but, if so, it was not the fault of the law-making power.

II. DISCHARGES UNDER PRESENT LAW.

a. Definition; nature and purpose.—(1) DEFINITION.—Under our present act a discharge is defined as “the release of a bankrupt from all of his debts which are provable in bankruptcy, except such as are excepted by this act.”¹⁶

(2) NATURE OF RIGHT.—The discharge of a debtor from his debts was grafted upon bankruptcy proceedings as an incident wrought by an advanced civilization. It is not an absolute right existing at the time of filing the petition in bankruptcy. The right or privilege arises subsequently and is granted upon the conditions of the statute, and is dependent in part upon the conduct of the bankrupt after the filing of his petition in bankruptcy. Those conditions cannot be applied until application has been made for a discharge.¹⁷

(3) PURPOSE OF DISCHARGE.—A discharge is granted to an honest bankrupt in order that he may reinstate himself in the business world; it is refused to a dishonest bankrupt as a punishment for his fraud and to prevent its continuance in the future.¹⁸ Where a bankrupt has been brought into court at the instance of his creditors, and all his property is being applied to the payment of his debts, he has paid the price of a discharge, and must be accorded the relief which he seeks, unless he has been guilty of conduct which, under the act, deprives him of such relief.¹⁹

b. Discharges under original and amended act.—It is conceded that the act of 1898 was woefully weak in its discharge features. The bill as introduced was not,²⁰ but, in the compromises that accompanied its passage, nearly all the objections to discharges, not amounting to bankruptcy crimes, disappeared. As the law was passed, a discharge could be refused only on a showing of (1) concealment of assets, (2) false swearing in the progress of the proceeding, and (3) destruction of, concealment of, or failure to keep, books of account, accompanied by fraudulent intent to conceal financial condition and a purpose of going into bankruptcy. Even these meager bars on dishonesty have been necessarily cut through by judicial constructions; and the country has witnessed the spectacle of a commercial jail delivery. This condition was subsequently met by the amendatory act of 1903, which added four new objections to a discharge, discussed in detail later. The amendment of 1910 further strengthened the act by withholding a discharge where money as well as property was obtained by a false financial statement by the debtor to the representative of the creditor, as well as when made to the creditor himself. The amendment also provides for objections to be made by the trustee, in behalf of the creditors, when authorized by them at a creditors' meeting.^{20a}

c. Constitutionality of restrictions.—Congress may prescribe any regulations concerning discharges in bankruptcy that are not so unreasonable as to be incompatible with fundamental laws, and there is nothing in the act relative to discharges which renders it unconstitutional.²¹

d. Jurisdiction.—(1) IN GENERAL. The jurisdiction of courts of bankruptcy in respect to discharges is expressly conferred by § 2 (12) and is sub-

18. In re Hammerstein (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 757, 189 Fed. 37.

The purpose of releasing an honest debtor from the burden of debts which he is unable to longer carry is to give freer play to his energies and enterprises, that he may thereafter be better able to support himself and those dependent upon his earnings, and thereby be in a position to render a better service to the State and to society. Barton Bros. v. Produce Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 502, 136 Fed. 355. The release of the unfortunate and insolvent debtor from the burden of his debts and his restoration to business activity in the interest of his family and the general public, are the main, if not the most important objects of the bankruptcy act. Hardie v. Swafford Bros. Dry Goods Co. (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 457, 165 Fed. 588.

Relief of bankrupt.—In the case of In re Hammerstein (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 757, 189 Fed. 37, the court said: "A discharge is granted to an honest bankrupt in order that he may reinstate himself in the business world; it is refused to a dishonest bankrupt as a punishment for his fraud and to prevent its continuance in the future. In a sense the question has passed beyond the creditors and is one of public policy, but when the charge is that the bankrupt has defrauded his creditors the fact that they have ceased to assert their charge cannot be wholly ignored by the court." In the case of Williams et al. v. U. S. Fidelity Co., 236 U. S. 549, 34 Am. B. R. 181, 59 L. ed. 713, revg. 28 Am. B. R. 802, the court said: "It is the purpose of the Bankruptcy Act to convert the assets of the bankrupt into cash for distribution among creditors, and then to relieve the honest debtor from the weight of oppressive indebtedness, and permit him to start afresh free from the obligations and responsibilities consequent upon business misfortunes."

ject to the same restrictions, territorially and otherwise, as in other matters pertaining to bankruptcy. By subsection a of this section the application is to be filed in the court in which the proceeding is pending. Jurisdiction is conferred where it appears that the applicant resided within the district for practically all of the six months preceding the filing of the petition in bankruptcy.²² It has been held that a creditor who has participated in all the proceedings without objection cannot raise the question of lack of jurisdiction on the bankrupt's application for a discharge.²³ Unless the application for a discharge is filed within the required time the court is without jurisdiction.²⁴

(2) COURT BUT NOT REFEREE.—The section contemplates that the application shall be made to the judge and by § 38-a (4) questions arising out of applications for discharges are expressly excepted from the jurisdiction conferred upon referees. All such questions are original questions for the court,²⁵ although after application reference may be made to the referee as a special master to hear and report on the facts.²⁶ In such a case the reference is not by consent and the report of the referee is advisory merely.²⁷

c. Law governing proceedings.—The proceedings are to be governed by the law as it existed when the bankrupt filed his petition for adjudication.²⁸

22. Matter of Harris (Ref., N. J.), 11 Am. B. R. 649.

Jurisdiction.—Where a court did not have jurisdiction to adjudicate as to the bankruptcy because of lack of residence, it cannot grant a discharge, the question being first raised on the application therefor. In re Cladell (Ref., N. Y.), 2 Am. B. R. 424.

23. Objections going to the jurisdiction must be raised at the first, or, at least, an early opportunity. A creditor who received notice of the first meeting of creditors, who appeared thereat, nominated the trustee, and exhaustively examined the bankrupt, cannot, on the bankrupt's application for a discharge thereafter, urge, for the first time, that the court is without jurisdiction to entertain the bankrupt's application for a discharge, on the ground that the adjudication was made by the referee, and not by the judge. In re Polakoff (Ref., N. Y.), 1 Am. B. R. 359.

24. In re Fahey (D. C., Ia.), 8 Am. B. R. 354, 116 Fed. 239. In this case the judge said: "The power and right to grant a discharge effectual to bar the enforcement of debts is conferred by the statute, and is governed by the limitations found in the statute; and therefore, unless it is petitioned for within the time limit fixed by section 14 of the act, the court of bankruptcy is without the power and jurisdiction to grant a discharge. If the court, yielding to the equitable considerations pressed upon it, should grant a discharge in form to the bankrupt, it would be a mistaken kindness, for the validity of the discharge could be impeached before any court wherein it might be pleaded as a bar to a claim on the ground of want of jurisdiction in this court to entertain the petition for discharge; the record showing on its face that the petition was not filed within 18 months of the date of the adjudication."

Referee has no jurisdiction.—Applications for discharge are in the nature of proceedings separate from the original cause which is closed upon the final distribution of the assets of the estate, and over them the reference to the referee of the original cause confers no jurisdiction. In re Taylor (D. C., Ala.), 26 Am. B. R. 143, 188 Fed. 479.

An application for a discharge is in the nature of a separate proceeding from the original case which is closed with the final distribution of assets. The reference to the referee of the original case confers no jurisdiction whatever on him as to the discharge, as the bankruptcy act, in section 14 (a), requires the application to be "filed in the court of bankruptcy," and, in section 1(5), "Clerk" is defined to mean "clerk of the court of bankruptcy." Matter of Kendrick & Co. (D. C., Vt.), 35 Am. B. R. 630, 226 Fed. 980.

26. See discussion under Section Thirty-eight of this work, post. In re Randall (D. C., Pa.), 20 Am. B. R. 305, 159 Fed. 298.

Reference to special master.—Such application or any specified issue arising thereon may be sent to the referee to ascertain and report the facts and no one is prejudiced thereby. In re McDuff (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 4 Am. B. R. 110, 101 Fed. 241. The judge may, in his discretion, appoint a person other than the referee. In re Gillardon (D. C., Pa.), 26 Am. B. R. 103, 187 Fed. 290.

27. International Harvester Co. v. Carlson, (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 33 Am. B. R. 178, 217 Fed. 736; Matter of Hughes (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 44 Am. B. R. 447, 262 Fed. 500.

28. Matter of Peterson (Ref., Minn.), 10 Am. B. R. 355; In re Chamberlain (D. C., N. Y.), 11 Am. B. R. 95, 125 Fed. 639; In re Hammerstein (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 757, 189 Fed. 37; In re Simon (D. C., N. Y.), 29 Am. B. R. 808, 201 Fed. 1004.

Statutory provisions regulating the conditions on which bankrupts may be discharged are remedial in their nature with respect to the bankrupts or their creditors, and the strict rules of construction or interpretation appropriate to retroactive or retrospective laws are inapplicable to them.^{28a} The amendment of this section by the acts of 1903 and 1910 deals solely with a condition precedent to the discharge of a bankrupt in future cases.²⁹

III. APPLICATION FOR DISCHARGE.

a. Who may apply.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection a provides that that any person who has been adjudged a bankrupt may file an application for a discharge; unless he is within the restrictions of § 14-b and § 29-b he will be entitled to it.³⁰ A bankrupt's right to a discharge is not affected by his insanity, which prevented his examination by creditors,³¹ and the same is probably true in case of death;³² in either event the personal representative should be permitted to institute the proceedings for a discharge.

(2) CORPORATION; INDIVIDUAL PARTNER.—Application may be filed by a corporation when it has been adjudicated a bankrupt.³³ If a member of a firm is adjudged a bankrupt, he is entitled to an individual discharge from partnership debts as well as individual debts.³⁴ But if the adjudication is that of the individual partner, and the administration has no concern with the partnership estate, he is not entitled to a discharge from partnership debts.³⁵

(3) DENIAL IN FORMER PROCEEDING.—The application may be filed even by one refused a discharge in a former proceeding,³⁶ but a second petition cannot be filed where a first petition in the same bankruptcy was denied on the merits.³⁷ Where the prior proceeding determined all the issues, and the subsequent proceeding was instituted for the purpose of obtaining a discharge denied in the prior proceeding,³⁸ or where the same debts were scheduled in

A voluntary bankrupt may be granted a discharge, although he has not filed a schedule of his assets with his petition and schedule of debts. A voluntary bankrupt need not satisfy the court that he has performed everything which the law requires of him to do and is guilty of none of the things which the law condemns; but he is entitled to his discharge as a legal right unless the objecting creditors establish his guilt. b. Time of making application.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The application should be filed after one month, and within the next twelve months. This means any time within a period of twelve months after the end of the first month succeeding the adjudication.⁴²

(2) EXTENSION OF TIME.—His time, on cause shown, may be and usually is extended six months, but such extension can be granted only by the judge.⁴³ In any event the bankrupt must apply for his discharge within eighteen months after adjudication; the one month after adjudication in which he cannot apply is not excluded.^{42a} An extension should not be granted unless it clearly appear that the bankrupt was unavoidably prevented from filing his application within the twelve months; laches will be fatal.⁴⁴ The words "unavoidably prevented" should

Failure of objecting creditor.—Where, upon the objection of a creditor having a provable debt, the bankrupt is denied his discharge, but in a subsequent bankruptcy the same creditor intentionally remained away from court and the bankrupt was granted his discharge without objection, an action upon said debt, if it is a dischargeable one, is barred, where the ground upon which the first discharge was refused does not appear. *Bluthenthal v. Limitation as to time.—The section creates three limitations of time, all subsequent to adjudication, the first one month thereafter, the second the next twelve months after the first, and the third the next six months after the second. The bankrupt has twelve months within which to file his application for discharge as of right and course, commencing after the expiration of one month subsequent to adjudication. Matter of Walters (D. Jurisdiction to grant order extending time.—Where a duly verified petition of the bankrupt, setting forth that sickness had prevented him from having sufficient means with which to pay an attorney for preparing his application for a discharge within twelve months after adjudication, was presented to the district judge before whom the bankruptcy proceedings were had, and who alone had jurisdiction of the discharge proceedings, he had jurisdiction to grant an order extending the time within which bankrupt might file his application for discharge, and the mere fact that the order was erroneous, because based on insufficient evidence, is no reason for vacating it on the ground of want of jurisdiction. In re Casey (D. C., N. Y.), 28 Am. B. R. 359, 195 Fed. 322. 43a. Matter of Weldon (D. C., Ia.), 45 Am. B. R. 196, 262 Fed. 823.

Computation of time.—Where a bankrupt was adjudicated on June 4, 1915, an application for discharge filed December 5, 1916, the preceding day not being Sunday or a legal holiday, is too late. Matter of Lewandowski (D. C., Mass.), 39 Am. B. R. 804.

44. In re Fahy (D. C., Iowa), 8 Am. B. R. 364, 116 Fed. 239. In this case the court said: "In express terms the discretion of the judge is limited to the six months following the expiration of the year beginning with the date of the adjudication, and, as I construe the statute, this is a limitation on the jurisdiction of the judge over the matter of discharge. The power and right to grant a discharge effectual to bar the enforcement of debts is conferred by the statute, and is governed by the limitations found in the statute; and, therefore, unless it is petitioned for within the time limit fixed by section 14 of the act, the court of bankruptcy is without the power and jurisdiction to grant a discharge." This language was quoted and approved in In re Wagner (D. C., Nev.), 15 Am. B. R. 100, 139 Fed. 87; In re Daly (D. C., Wash.), 30 Am. B. R. 475, 205 Fed. 1002.

be construed with some liberality, so as to permit an extension in a case of excusable or ignorant neglect or mistake.⁴⁵ It must be shown that the petitioner was unavoidably prevented from filing his application during the entire period of one year.⁴⁶ An adjudication of bankruptcy will not be opened for the sole purpose of extending the time of making an application for a discharge.⁴⁷ The affidavit, upon which the extension is asked for, should contain a valid excuse; a statement that the counsel for the bankrupt was busy with other matters and had overlooked it is insufficient;⁴⁸ and mere illness in the family of the bankrupt will not suffice.⁴⁹ The granting of the extension is discretionary and no notice to creditors is required.⁵⁰ Creditors who had notice of an application to extend the time within which an application for a discharge may be made and who do not move promptly to vacate the order extending such time, but

A motion made more than eighteen months after adjudication for an order granting leave to file an application nunc pro tunc as of a date sixteen months after adjudication when an authorized application had been made, should be denied in the absence of sufficient reason therefor. In re Wolf (D. C., Cal.), 4 Am. B. R. 74, 100 Fed. 430.

Excuse of default.—Where more than thirteen months have expired from the adjudication in bankruptcy at the time a petition for a discharge is presented, it is impossible for the clerk to file same, or for the court to permit it to be filed, without a showing that the bankrupt was unavoidably prevented from filing it within the thirteen months succeeding the adjudication. If delay in filing an application for a discharge is occasioned by the fault of a postmaster or his employees, where the application is forwarded by mail, or is occasioned by the fault of some clerk or employee in the office of the attorney making the application, or by the absence of the court or judge from his office or place of holding court, or by any act of omission or commission on the part of an officer of the court, justice demands that a nunc pro tunc order be made. Matter of Daly (D. C., N. Y.), 36 Am. B. R. 219, 224 Fed. 263.

Waiting until latter part of year.—It is not obligatory upon a bankrupt or his attorney to make application for a discharge prior to the latter three months of the year succeeding the adjudication, in order to escape the charge of negligence. Matter of Waller (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 41 Am. B. R. 314, 249 Fed. 187.

Delay by the court or referee in conducting the bankruptcy proceedings proper or in deciding questions relating to the due administration of the estate arising therein affords no excuse for not filing an application for a discharge within the time fixed by statute. Matter of Snell (D. C., N. Y.), 40 Am. B. R. 356, 244 Fed. 613.

45. The words "unavoidably prevented," should be liberally construed, so as to permit an application for discharge to be filed where bankrupt has been prevented from filing it during the first twelve months through excusable neglect, reasonable grounds for delay, mistake, inadvertence, etc. Where a bankrupt represents to the court his reliance upon counsel who it appears have misunderstood his instructions, his default in not filing an application for a discharge is explained, and the discretion of the court in granting an extension of time, upon such explanation, will not be disturbed. 48. Failure of application in time.—Where a bankrupt has failed to file a petition for discharge within one year from the time of his adjudication and within the next six months thereafter failed to obtain from the judge an extension of time, as provided by section 14-a of the bankruptcy act, his right to such discharge is lost to him forever, especially where bankrupt had been apprised of his error in time to make application to the judge for such extension of time. In re Levenstein (D. C., Conn.), 24 Am. B. R. 822, 180 Fed. 957, citing Kuntz v. Young (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 12 Am. B. R. 505, 131 Fed. 719, 65 C. C. A. 477; In re Kuffler (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 18 Am. 49. In re Lewin (D. C., Tex.), 14 Am. B. R. 358, 135 Fed. 252.

Grounds for extension of time; sickness.—If a bankrupt or his family were sick and it was necessary for him to provide for their support, wherefore he did not have sufficient means to pay an attorney, it may be said that he was unavoidably prevented from filing his application for a discharge within one year after adjudication, so as to be permitted to file the application within six months thereafter. In re Casey (D. C., N. Y.), 28 Am. B. R. 359, 195 Fed. 322.

Delay caused by mistake as to law.—Where the bankrupt's counsel, through an honest mistake as to the law, supposed that a petition for discharge could not be filed until equity proceedings in the State court (in which charges were made against the bankrupt, which would be sufficient, if established, to defeat the discharge) had been terminated, and did not attempt to file a petition for discharge until the conclusion of those proceedings, "the bankrupt was unavoidably prevented from filing" the petition within the six months' grace period. Matter of Swain (D. C., Mass.), 39 Am. B. R. 841, 243 Fed. 781.

50. In re Frits (D. C., N. Y.), 23 Am. B. R. 84, 173 Fed. 560; In re Chase (D. C., Mass.), 36 Am. B. R. 456, 188 Fed. 408; Matter of Waller (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 41 Am. B. R. 314, 249 Fed. 187.

Extension may be granted by the district judge, not only ex parte, but in such summary or informal manner as may be proper or convenient at the time; and a contention that an order extending the time in which a bankrupt may file his application is erroneous, because made without notice and upon an unverified petition, is without merit. In re Churchill (D. C., Wis.), 28 Am. B. R. 607, 197 Fed. 114.

appear for the purpose of filing objections will be deemed to have waived objections to the extension.⁵¹

(3) FILING AFTER TIME LIMITED.—It is doubtful whether the court may allow a nunc pro tunc order granting leave to file an application for a discharge after the period of eighteen months has expired;⁵² it has been held that the court has no jurisdiction after the expiration of the time limit.⁵³ If the court has permitted a petition to be filed more than a year after the adjudication, upon an insufficient showing, the remedy is by motion to vacate.⁵⁴ The application for a discharge will be dismissed if not diligently prosecuted.⁵⁵

c. Effect of failure to apply within time.—(1) IN GENERAL.—If the bankrupt fails to apply for his discharge within the limit prescribed by statute, i. e., within twelve months after adjudication, or the succeeding six months if an extension of time has been granted, the court is without jurisdiction to grant such discharge.⁵⁶ His right to a discharge from the debts scheduled by him is lost, and may not be restored by any act or proceeding in the court.⁵⁷

(2) RIGHT NOT RESTORED BY SUBSEQUENT PROCEEDINGS.—The failure to apply for a discharge within the time limited has the same effect as a denial of a discharge from the debts involved in the proceedings, and the bankrupt may not thereafter institute voluntary proceedings for the purpose of securing a discharge from debts scheduled in the former proceedings.⁵⁸ The failure

Collateral attack.—An order granting an extension of time for the administratrix of a bankrupt to file an application for a discharge, and the validity and regularity of the latter, cannot be attacked upon a hearing of objections to the discharge. Matter of Agnew and Sherman (D. C., N. Y.), 35 Am. B. R. 709, 225 Fed. 650.

Laches of creditor.—Where a petition for an extension of time in which to file an application for a discharge, was filed five days before the expiration of eighteen months after adjudication, a motion by a creditor to vacate said order of extension filed twenty days thereafter should be denied upon the ground that it was not seasonably made. 52. In re Wolff (D. C., Cal.), 4 Am. B. R. 74, 100 Fed. 430, holding that such a nunc pro tunc order may not be granted except where the delay was caused by some act of the court or its officers. But see Matter of Daly (D. C., N. Y.), 35 Am. B. R. 219, 224 Fed. 263.

Attorney in military service.—The time in which a bankrupt must apply for a discharge is not extended by virtue of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of March 8, 1918, by the fact that his attorney entered the service during the period in which a discharge should have been applied for. Delay in prosecution.—The debtor was adjudged a bankrupt on January 4, 1906. In June, 1906, she signed an application for her discharge and left it with her attorney. He did not file it until April 28, 1907, when he procured a permissive order of the bankruptcy court on an affidavit which failed to show that he or the bankrupt had been unavoidably prevented from filing it within the year. Between April 28, 1907, and September 12, 1911, neither the bankrupt nor her attorney took any action to bring the application to a hearing. On the latter day they procured an order for a hearing on October 16, 1911, which was met by creditors by a motion to dismiss the application for the discharge for want of prosecution. Held, the motion should have been granted. The bankrupt failed to exercise that reasonable diligence requisite to call a court of equity into action on her behalf. Lindeka v. Converse (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 596, 198 Fed. 618. But see In re Glasberg (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 828, 197 Fed. 896, holding that delay in bringing on the hearing is not a ground for refusing a discharge.

of an involuntary bankrupt to apply for a discharge within twelve months of his adjudication will prevent him from obtaining a discharge in a subsequent voluntary proceeding from debts which were scheduled in the prior proceeding.⁵⁰ The failure of the bankrupt to apply for a discharge in the first bankruptcy proceedings, and the approval of the record of such proceedings by the court without granting a discharge, are in effect a judgment by default in favor of his then existing creditors that the bankrupt was not entitled to a discharge from their claims, and that judgment is conclusive in favor of such creditors.⁵¹ This rule is also applicable to a case where a partner failed in the first proceedings against the partnership to apply for a discharge within the time required; he may not have a discharge in a subsequent proceeding from debts existing and provable against him in the first proceeding.⁶¹

d. Petition for discharge.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The application for a discharge is made by a petition, which should "state concisely, in accordance with the provisions of the act and the orders of the court, the proceedings in the case and the acts of the bankrupt."⁶² If the application is by a member of a firm, the petition should indicate that the intention is to bar his partnership liability.⁶³

(2) VERIFICATION OF PETITION.—Neither the statute, the general orders nor the official form indicates that the petition must be verified. In conformity with the practice in other similar proceedings it would seem more suitable to verify the petition.⁶⁴ Being in the nature of a pleading, it should,

Failure of bankrupt to apply in former proceedings.—Where it appeared that the bankrupt had filed a prior petition, been adjudicated thereunder, but had failed within the statutory time to apply for a discharge, a creditor scheduled under the first petition may object to a discharge, as to him, on the second application, on the ground of failure to apply under the first petition within the time allowed, and, while a discharge on the second petition will be granted as to other creditors, the debt of the objecting creditor will be excluded from its operation. In re Westbrook (D. in view of the requirements of § 182, be verified.⁶⁵ A failure to object that the application is unverified until after the evidence on the application has been heard amounts to a waiver.⁶⁶ The elaborate oath prescribed by the law of 1867 is no longer necessary.⁶⁷

(3) WHERE FILED.—All petitions should be filed with the clerk, and not with the judge or referee.⁶⁸ A filing with the clerk is deemed a filing with the court, within the meaning of subsection a, but a filing with the referee is not sufficient, unless specially authorized by court rule.⁶⁹

(4) AMENDMENTS.—The same liberality in respect to amendments to petitions for discharge should be permitted as in the case of other petitions in bankruptcy proceedings. If errors are contained in the petition, the court may direct their correction by amendment.⁷⁰ But such forbearance should not be extended in favor of a bankrupt whose business career is tainted, and whose conduct toward his creditors has not been fair.⁷¹ And where the time to file objections has expired an amendment to the petition in matter of substance is only allowable where there is already a record sufficient to justify it.⁷²

c. Notice to creditors and trustee.—Creditors are entitled to at least thirty days' notice by mail of all hearings upon applications for discharge.⁷³ When the petition for a discharge is duly filed the clerk may either himself send out the notices, or the referee may do it, upon the certificate of the clerk that the petition has been filed. It is usual for the clerk to issue an order to show cause to creditors, returnable before the judge. This order must be served by mail. In some districts, local rules result in the referee giving the required notice by mailing and publishing the order to show cause, or a notice of its pendency, and then returning the proofs, with a certificate of conformity, to the clerk in time for the return day.⁷⁴ Personal service of the notice is not required; the official form (Form No. 57) indicates that the notice be published in a designated newspaper, and "that the clerk shall send by mail to all known creditors copies of said petition and this order, addressed to them at their places of residence as stated;" this practice should be observed, and if it is the validity of the discharge is not affected by lack of personal notice to creditors.⁷⁵ The practice is not uniform throughout the country; local rules or customs should always be ascertained. Everywhere, however, all creditors and persons in interest must have at least ten days' notice of the hearing. Not only should creditors be notified of the application for discharge, but they are entitled to notice of the bankruptcy so that they may file their claims and be prepared to oppose the discharge; if no meeting of creditors is called, it is sometimes required by court rule that the bankrupt see that the creditors are notified of the bankruptcy.⁷⁶ The mailing of the notice in the manner prescribed by statute will be sufficient even if not received and read by creditors.⁷⁷

IV. HEARING ON APPLICATION FOR DISCHARGE.

a. Appearances.—Upon the filing of the application and the giving of notice a creditor opposing the application must enter his appearance in opposition thereto on the day when the creditors are required to show cause.⁷⁸ This requirement should be strictly followed.⁷⁹ The filing of objections by a creditor is equivalent to the appearance which the rule requires.⁸⁰ The appearance must be entered on the day of the return,⁸¹ and if objections are filed on such day it will be sufficient. The appearance may be entered at any time during such day, and it is error to deny the right to enter an appearance, because a creditor failed to appear at the hour appointed.⁸² The court may, in its discretion, extend the time within which the creditor may enter his appearance in opposition to a bankrupt's discharge even after the expiration of the time limit provided in the general order.⁸³ The appearance may be made by the

The determination of the status of the honest and unfortunate debtor by his liberation from encumbrance or future exertion is a matter of public concern, and Congress has power to accomplish it throughout the United States by proceedings at the debtor's domicile. If such notice to those who may be interested in opposing discharge, is provided to be given, that is sufficient. Service of process or personal notice is not essential to the binding force of the decree."

be made," is not obnoxious to the bankruptcy act and void, as adding a new ground for the refusal of a discharge, since it merely provides for the details of the form, manner and time of giving notice of the application for a discharge.

creditor in person or by an attorney "who shall be an attorney or counsellor authorized to practice in the circuit or district court."⁸⁴ On the call of the case on the return day, if no appearance is entered or filed, and the statutory facts as to time, publication and mailing, etc., appear, a discharge follows.⁸⁵ The judge does not, as a rule, investigate further.⁸⁶ The bankrupt should be ordered to attend upon the hearing if the creditors so request.⁸⁷ The failure to appear on the return day will ordinarily preclude a creditor from subsequently filing specifications of objections.⁸⁸ An objection going to the jurisdiction cannot, it seems, be made for the first time on the application for a discharge.⁸⁹ Thus, the objection that a bankrupt is a non-resident will not be considered.⁹⁰

b. Specifications of objections.—(1) IN GENERAL.—If an appearance is made in opposition to the discharge by any party in interest, such party must file a specification in writing of the grounds of his opposition within ten days thereafter.⁹¹ The purpose of such specifications is to give the bankrupt notice of the particular conduct of his which is challenged as an objection to his discharge.⁹²

(2) TIME AND PLACE OF FILING.—The ten days' requirement should be followed, and may only be excused upon reasons satisfactory to the court.⁹³ Under the general order the time may be enlarged by the judge, or, in given circumstances, a late specification may be filed nunc pro tunc.⁹⁴ The hearing must then go on "at such time as will give parties in interest a reasonable opportunity to be fully heard." It must be before the judge or before a special master appointed for that purpose; a jury cannot be demanded.⁹⁵

the trustee when duly authorized by a meeting of the creditors called for that purpose. The meeting which authorizes the trustee to oppose the discharge may be called by the referee; it is not necessary that the district judge should specially authorize the meeting.⁹⁶ A party in interest is meant to include only a party who has some pecuniary interest in the discharge.⁹⁷ Specifications may be filed by any person having a pecuniary interest in resisting the discharge of the bankrupt, as one owning an "unliquidated claim,"⁹⁸ or where the party holds an equitable claim only against the estate,⁹⁹ or is the assignee of a judgment, scheduled in the name of the original creditor,¹⁰⁰ or where his claim is being contested,¹⁰¹ even though such person has not proven a debt,¹⁰² or his debt is no longer provable.¹⁰³ If the bankrupt's schedule contains the name of a creditor, it is prima facie evidence that such creditor is entitled to oppose the bankrupt's discharge.¹⁰⁴ If the claim is barred by the statute of limitations between the filing of objections, and the hearing thereon, the objecting creditor does not lose his right to oppose the discharge because the right to plead the statute is a personal right which may be waived by the debtor.¹⁰⁵ If the limitation had not expired at the time of bankruptcy the debt

The bankrupt denies the right of the objecting creditor to appear and object as a party in interest, because his claim has become barred by the statute of limitations, after the filing of the specifications of objections, but before is provable.¹⁰⁶ A creditor having a claim which is not dischargeable may not be heard in opposition.¹⁰⁷ Where petitioners simply allege that they are creditors of the bankrupt, it is insufficient to show that they are "parties in interest."¹⁰⁸ If a member of a firm files objections he must show that he is acting with the consent of the other members.¹⁰⁹ It was held under the law prior to the amendment of 1910 that a trustee is a "party in interest" and may file objections, when it appears that he is seeking to recover from the bankrupt property alleged to belong to the estate.¹¹⁰ Under the law as amended he is not a party to the proceedings until he has been authorized to appear by a creditors' meeting,¹¹¹ and proof of the trustee's authority is not waived by going to trial.^{111a} And when so authorized he is entitled to exercise the same rights as other parties in interest.¹¹² In Pennsylvania a creditor may prosecute his objections to the discharge of a bankrupt, in forma pauperis.¹¹³

(4) FORM AND CONTENTS OF SPECIFICATIONS.—(I) In general.—Official Form No. 58 should be followed in preparing the specifications. It will require modification to meet the circumstances of the particular case. They should be in writing, and should contain allegations sufficient to show that all essential facts exist bringing the opposition within the grounds specified by the statute.¹¹⁴ Specifications must be clear and unequivocal, and contain the hearing of the application. The statute of limitations does not destroy the cause of action, but merely affects the remedy. If not specially pleaded by the debtor, when the claim is sued on, judgment would go against him. The defense is personal and waived by a failure to plead. In view of the nature of the defense there is left in the creditor a subsisting cause of action in spite of the running of the statute. He is therefore a party in interest, ever thereafter, in resisting the discharge. Again, when the specification of objection was filed by the creditor, the statute had not run. He was then a party in interest, and it seems to me the time as of which this interest is to be determined is the time of the beginning of the opposition to a discharge."

specific averments of facts; they should be pleaded with greater particularity than complaints in civil actions; indeed, they more nearly resemble indictments, especially if the commission of one of the offenses against the law is relied on,¹¹⁵ although the strict rules applicable to indictments may not apply.¹¹⁶ Allegations must be specific and of such a character that their sufficiency may be met by demurrer, or by exceptions analogous to those

A specification of objection to a bankrupt's discharge alleging that, within the four months' period, the bankrupts transferred, removed, destroyed or concealed their property, with intent to hinder, delay and defraud their creditors, in that, about a week prior to the filing of the petition, and at other times, they removed and concealed large quantities of merchandise in a certain house, with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud their creditors, is sufficient. Milgraum v. Ost (D. C., Pa.), 12 Am. B. R. 306, 129 Fed. 827.

Where the written specifications are that the bankrupt has "concealed part of his effects from the court," and has, "in contemplation of becoming a bankrupt, made payments, transfers, and assignments of his property for the purpose of preferring a creditor having a claim against him, and to prevent the same from coming into the hands of the trustee, such specifications are not sufficiently definite and are too vague and general to prevent the discharge of the bankrupt. In re Nixon (D. C., Iowa), 1 Am. B. R. 610, 93 Fed. 440.

An allegation that said bankrupts, with intent to conceal their financial condition, did destroy, through the agency of their regularly authorized bookkeeper, canceled checks drawn by them, and also the check stubs, from which such condition might be ascertained, is sufficiently specific. Godschalk Co. v. Sterling (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 12 Am. B. R. 302, 129 Fed. 580. But it has been held that a specification of objection to a bankrupt's discharge that said bankrupts, with intent to conceal their financial condition, have destroyed, concealed, or failed to keep books of account or record, from which such condition might be ascertained, is insufficient, because it follows the words of the statute. Milgraum v. Ost (D. C., Pa.), 12 Am. B. R. 306, 129 Fed. 827.

Criminal concealment.—Specifications must aver scienter and all essential facts necessary to establish the commission of the offense. In re Kaiser (D. C., Minn.), 3 Am. B. R. 767, 99 Fed. 689; Matter of Wetmore (Ref., N. Y.), 6 Am. B. R. 703.

115. Clear, positive and direct.—Specifications in opposition to a bankrupt's application for a discharge, and the proofs in support thereof, should be clear, positive, and direct. The opposing creditor or creditors must distinctly allege and prove one or more of the statutory grounds for refusing a discharge. In re McGurn (D. C., Nev.), 4 Am. B. R. 459, 102 Fed. 743. See also In re Thomas (D. C., Iowa), 1 Am. B. R. 515, 92 Fed. 912; In re Holman (D. C., Iowa), 1 Am. B. Criminal indictment.—Where the offense is one prohibited by § 29 of the act the allegations should be set forth with substantially the exactness of a criminal indictment. Matter of Wetmore (Ref., N. Y.), 6 Am. B. R. 703; In re Hirsch (D. C., Tenn.), 2 Am. B. R. 715, 96 Fed. 468; In re Quackenbush (D. C., N. Y.), 4 Am. B. R. 274, 102 Fed. 282. So far as the specifications charge or attempt to charge the commission of a crime, they must state facts showing the commission of the crime with substantially the same particularity and exactness required in an indictment. In re Levey (D. C., N. Y.), 13 Am. B. R. 312, 133 Fed. 572. Even if not required to be as specific as indictments, they should, where based upon acts made criminal by the bankruptcy act, be so specific and of such a character that their sufficiency may be met by demurrer or by exceptions. Matter of White (D. C., Ore.), 34 Am. B. R. 803, 222 Fed. 688.

Perjury; sufficiency of specifications.—Where perjury is relied upon as an objection to the confirmation of a composition, it should be charged with substantially the same particularity and exactness as would be required in an indictment. The specifications should set forth the testimony alleged to be false, together with the facts relied on to prove its falsity. Matter of Reivkin (D. C., Conn.), 33 Am. B. R. 170, 216 Fed. 218.

allowed in equity;¹¹⁷ mere general averments are not sufficient.¹¹⁸ If they fail to allege any fact which by any construction would be deemed ground for denying a discharge, they will be disregarded although not excepted to.¹¹⁹ The specifications should allege that the objecting creditor will be affected by the discharge, and is therefore interested in defeating it.¹²⁰ It is also necessary for the petitioners to aver in their application the facts showing their freedom from laches.¹²¹ The exact language of the statute should not be used except, possibly, in the case of failure to keep books of accounts.¹²² If vague or general, or merely asserting acts which would render certain debts not dischargeable, but not affect the right to a discharge proper, the specifications will be dismissed.¹²³ Two grounds of objection should not be included in one specification.¹²⁴ Mere conclusions of law and alternative general averments are not sufficient.¹²⁵ Nor are facts alleged upon mere information and belief.¹²⁶ The rule has been stated to be that facts relied on to prevent a discharge must be pleaded with sufficient certainty of detail to appraise the bankrupt of the charge he has to meet and to enable the court to understand the issue to be examined and determined.¹²⁷

General averments.—Specifications of objections to a bankrupt's discharge, in general terms following the language of the statute, should be ordered amended or made more specific, provided an objection thereto is taken before trial; but where a motion to amend is not made until after witnesses have been called and it is apparent that the bankrupt will not be affected by surprise or prejudice by proceeding upon the specifications as they stand, it is not error to deny the motion until the testimony is heard which might supply the deficiency. In re Mintzer (D. Information to bankrupt and court.—Specifications should distinctly allege the particular grounds relied upon to defeat the discharge, so as to advise (1) the bankrupt of the grounds relied upon, in order that he may prepare to meet the same, and (2) the court of the issue to be tried, and should also allege facts showing that the party filing the specifications will be affected by the discharge and is therefore interested in defeating the same. In re Servis (D. (III) Concealment or transfer of property.—The allegations of the acts alleged as constituting should be specific as to the circumstances of the concealment or transfer.¹³² Where property has been fraudulently transferred or concealed the specifications should disclose a description of the property, together with the names of the persons holding the title, the time of the transfer and any other facts necessary to identify the transaction.¹³³ to prevent the same from coming into the hands of the trustee," they are too vague and general to prevent the discharge of the bankrupt.

Specifications as to time and place.—A specification of objection to bankrupt's discharge alleging that, within the four months' period, the bankrupts transferred, removed, destroyed, or concealed their property, with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud their creditors, in that, about a week prior to the filing of the petition, and at other times, they removed and concealed large quantities of merchandise in a certain house, with intent to hinder, delay and defraud their creditors, and thereafter, on a certain day, removed and concealed other large quantities of merchandise from their place of business with like intent, is sufficiently specific. A specification in opposition to a bankrupt's discharge, which alleges that the bankrupt has concealed a large amount of merchandise and groceries, does not sufficiently describe the property. Matter of White (D. C., Ore.), 34 Am. B. R. 803, 222 Fed. 688.

(IV) False statement to secure credit.—Where it is alleged as a ground of opposition that the bankrupt has made a materially false statement upon which he obtained credit, the substance or part of the statement alleged to be false must be set forth clearly and specifically.¹³⁴ Not only must the false representation be set out but the name of the person alleged to have been defrauded must be given,¹³⁵ and a statement made of the property which was obtained by such fraudulent representation.^{136a}

(V) Failure to keep, or destruction or concealment of books.—Ordinarily the bankrupt knows whether he has kept, destroyed or concealed books of accounts. The creditor may not be expected to know more than that proper books of accounts have not been delivered to the bankrupt's trustee, hence it is not required to allege this offense with the same particularity as the other offenses.¹³⁶ The language of the statute is sufficient to serve the purpose of giving notice to the offender of the particular conduct which is charged against him as an offense.¹³⁷

The intention of the bankrupt in failing to keep books of account should be alleged in the specification of objection to a discharge. Matter of Epstein (D. C., Fla.), 40 Am. B. R. 406, 248 Fed. 191.

Concealment of or failure to keep books; sufficient allegations.—Objections to a bankrupt's discharge upon the ground that he "concealed or failed to have kept books of account or the records from which his financial condition might be ascertained," and that "while under examination under oath before the referee he failed to show what he did or had done with money which he alleged to have borrowed from his sister-in-law," naming her, are sufficiently specific. In re Randall (D. C., Pa.), 20 Am. B. R. 306, 159 Fed. 258.

Where a bankrupt testifies that he kept no books of account, an objection to the granting of his discharge, following the words of the statute, that he failed to keep books of account or records from which his financial condition might be ascertained "with intent to conceal his true financial condition and in contemplation of bankruptcy" is sufficient. But this form of objection, following the language of the statute, may be criticised, in that it is impossible to tell whether an utter failure to keep books is intended to be charged, or whether the books that were kept are insufficient to show the true condition of the bankrupt's property. In re Lewis (D. C., N. Y.), 20 Am. B. R. 711, 163 Fed. 137.

In the case of In re Magen Bros. Co. (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 27 Am. B. R. 729, 192 Fed. 883, the court said: "Whether a bankrupt has kept such accounts, and, if so, whether he retains, conceals, or destroys them, is a matter peculiarly within his own knowledge and which, in the nature of things, a creditor ordinarily does not know. All he does know is that the bankrupt has not surrendered such books to the trustee. Now the purpose of a specification is to fairly apprise the bankrupt of such matters in bar of his discharge as will be insisted upon, in order that he may be able to meet them. Such matters are not to be specified with the exactness and formality required in indictments, but only in such substantial form as will fairly inform one of the charges made against him. But where, as in the case of books of account, the bankrupt in the very nature of things, and he alone already knows what books he did or did not keep, and the creditor does not know, except as he infers their non-existence, concealment, or destruction from the fact of their non-delivery to the trustee, it would seem that a specification following the language of the statute and covering non-keeping, concealment, or destruction sufficiently and fairly apprises the bankrupt of the matter insisted upon in that respect." submission of the case.¹³⁸ It has even been held that under certain circumstances they may be denied to conform to the proofs.¹³⁹ Application should be made to the judge; a referee having no power to grant such amendments.¹⁴⁰ Leave to amend vague and indefinite specifications of objections may be granted.¹⁴¹ Where the original specifications allege fraudulent false representations as grounds of opposition, an amendment is permissible to set up another instance of such representations, where there is nothing to suggest laches or oversight.¹⁴² Specifications of objections to a bankrupt's discharge may be amended, in the discretion of the court, after the expiration of the ten days allowed by General Order XXXIII, for the filing thereof,¹⁴³ provided the proposed amendment does not present a new issue or set up new matter constituting an additional or separate objections to the discharge.¹⁴⁴ The specifications as amended must merely amount to an enlargement of the original, and if they exceed this they are not entitled to come in.¹⁴⁵ Amendments

In cases of mistake or accident the courts are extremely liberal in permitting amendments. In re Gross (Ref., N. Y.), 5 Am. B. R. 271.

Laches.—Where a creditor, nineteen months after filing its objections to the bankrupt's discharge and fifteen months after closing its case, presents a petition alleging more in detail but in substance the same transactions embodied in the objections of another creditor with whom it united in a single joint motion, whereby the specifications of both were referred to a special master, a refusal of the district judge to allow such additional specifications to be filed is a proper exercise of judicial discretion. Kentucky National Bank v. Carley (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 10 Am. B. R. 375, 121 Fed. 822.

When creditors delay the hearing upon an application for a discharge by reason of their insufficient objections thereto, it rests largely in the sound discretion of the court as to whether or not amendments to such specifications shall be permitted. Amendments to conform to proof.—Where specifications of objections to bankrupt's discharge charged concealment of and failure to account for assets and the withholding of property from their schedules in certain amounts, the failure of the trustee to prove the whole amount alleged is immaterial in passing upon the bankrupt's right to be discharged, but the specifications may be amended to conform to the proof. are discretionary with the district courts, and are reviewable in the circuit court of appeals, under section 24-b of the Bankruptcy Act.¹⁴⁸ Leave to amend should not be granted where only the words of the statute are used.¹⁴⁷

(6) WAIVER OF DEFECTS.—All objections to the sufficiency of specifications are waived unless made before trial;¹⁴⁸ unless the specifications are fatally defective because failing to show some jurisdictional requirement, as, for instance, that the party filing them is a party in interest.¹⁴⁹ Lack of verification may be waived,¹⁵⁰ and so may a defect consisting of a failure to allege that the offense was committed knowingly and fraudulently.¹⁵¹

(7) EXCEPTIONS TO SPECIFICATIONS.—Objections to the form of specifications not taken in the lower court cannot be raised on review.¹⁵² The bankrupt need not answer;¹⁵³ the issue is made by the petition and the specifications. He may file exceptions to the latter, on the ground of insufficiency, or he may answer or demur if he chooses.¹⁵⁴ The creditors may not object to the referee's report because he failed to consider the bankrupt's exceptions.¹⁵⁵

148. Amendments discretionary.—An amendment of specifications in opposition to a discharge is a matter of sound discretion and should only be exercised to meet the ends of justice. In re Morgan (D. C., Ark.), 4 Am. B. R. 402, 101 Fed. 982.

Where no laches or unfairness on the part of a creditor appears, and no injustice to the bankrupt or unreasonable delay will result, amendments to specifications in opposition to the bankrupt's discharge should be allowed as of course. In re Carley (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 8 Am. B. R. 720, 117 Fed. 130.

While the court may permit the objecting creditor to amend his specifications so as to specifically state his objections, it should not do so unless it is apparent that the party can specify facts, and that his failure to be specific is excusable. Failure to demur or object.—Where a rule of the court provides that when specifications of objections are filed, and no demurrer or motion as to their sufficiency is interposed, prior to the hearing, they shall be deemed sufficient to present every question fairly suggested thereby, it was held that a specification alleging a fraudulent transfer and that the bankrupt retained possession of the property and made no reference thereto in his schedules, is sufficient to raise the question of a secret ownership or concealment. In the Western District of Kentucky where specifications of objections to a bankrupt's discharge have been filed, the practice is to refer the application for discharge to a referee to ascertain and report the facts under the third clause of General Order in Bankruptcy No. 12; the filing of objections does not start a new case; no system of pleading is in existence in such case, and a demurrer taken to the specifications of objections pending the reference and eleven days thereafter is not in harmony with the practice in such district, although valid grounds of objection, even though taken by demurrer, will not be disregarded by the court. c. Creditor proceeding under specifications of another creditor.—Creditors may be allowed, in the discretion of the court, to enforce objections filed and abandoned by other creditors.¹⁵⁶ And a claim by a creditor, whose objections to a discharge are held to be insufficient, of the right to proceed under objections filed on behalf of another creditor who did not appear on the hearing should be passed upon by the district judge, and not by the referee.¹⁵⁷

d. Verification of specifications.—Specifications of objection to a bankrupt's discharge are in the nature of pleadings within the meaning of section 18-c of the bankruptcy act and should be verified¹⁵⁸ in order to prevent frivolous objections and waste of time;¹⁵⁹ although it has been held that lack of verification is not fatal,¹⁶⁰ and the omission may be supplied by amendment,¹⁶¹ at any time before the testimony is all in and the argument commenced.¹⁶² An objection that there was a failure or omission of verification cannot be raised for the first time on petition for review.¹⁶³ Several creditors may verify the same specifications.¹⁶⁴ A verification, made by the attorney or agent for the objecting creditor, should explain why the oath was not made by the creditor himself.¹⁶⁵ The verification should be in the form prescribed for the creditor's petition. If there be two or more objecting creditors all should verify the specifications.¹⁶⁶

e. Reference to special master.—The referee being denied jurisdiction to determine discharges,¹⁶⁷ references to him, not as referee, but as special master in chancery to hear and report on the facts, are quite universal.¹⁶⁸ The report of the referee is advisory only and the court is not bound thereby.¹⁶⁹ A reference may be made to a person other than the referee, as in other cases in equity.¹⁷⁰ If such a reference is ordered, the special master sets a time and place for the hearing, which goes on before him as if before the judge. Special masters may pass on the relevancy or materiality of evidence,¹⁷¹ and determine the sufficiency of specifications so far, at least, as to decide whether to permit testimony thereon. A referee has no power to decide any question relating to the bankrupt's discharge until that subject has been referred to him by the judge. In re Randall (D. C., Pa.), 20 Am. B. R. 305, 159 Fed. 298; International Harvester Co. v. Carlson (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 33 Am. B. R. 178, 217 Fed. 736.

A referee in bankruptcy having no jurisdiction to act upon an application for discharge, it is within the power of the court, under General Order XII, to specially refer it to a referee. Matter of Amer (D. C., Pa.), 35 Am. B. R. 627, 228 Fed. 576.

The referee has no jurisdiction to determine the question as to discharge, but the court may refer the case to him generally for a report. He aids the court like a master in chancery. He cannot finally determine the question of discharge or non-discharge, but he may be ordered to report the facts and his recommendations or conclusions as to the matter. In re Rauchenplat (D. C., Porto Rico), 9 Am. B. R. 763. Where an application for a discharge must be heard and decided by the judge, such application or any specified issue arising thereon may be sent to the referee to ascertain and report the facts, and no one is prejudiced thereby. In re McDuff (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 4 Am. B. R. 110, 101 Fed. 241.

A referee in bankruptcy, upon a reference as to the sufficiency of specifications of objection to a discharge, has no jurisdiction to determine whether a particular debt is a liability "for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations." Matter of Lockwood (D. C., N. Y.), 39 Am. B. R. 478, 240 Fed. 161.

As to rules governing a special master upon a hearing, see In re Walder (D. C., Ct.), 18 Am. B. R. 419, 152 Fed. 489.

169. The practice on reference of discharge cases and the effect of a referee's report thereon is commented upon in International Harvester Co. v. Carlson (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 33 Am. B. R. 178, 217 Fed. 736, in which the court says: "The duty of the court to pass upon the issue cannot be shifted by such a reference, nor can the duty of the court be dependent upon the filing of exceptions. Orderly practice would require that such exceptions be filed, but the omission to do so is not jurisdictional. When the question of the discharge is brought before the District Court the issue is made up of the specifications of objection to the discharge, and the bankrupt's answer thereto, and not by the report of the referee and exceptions thereto. We are of the opinion, therefore, that it was the duty of the district judge to hear the cause and exercise an independent judgment thereon. When the referee's report was brought to his notice, he was then, for the first time, called upon to perform his duty of deciding whether the petition for discharge should be granted or denied. If the filing of exceptions to the master's report would aid him in the performance of this duty, he had ample authority to require such exceptions to be filed, or to consider such exceptions though they were filed late. Counsel for the objecting creditor insists that General Order 37 makes the general equity rules prescribed by the Supreme Court applicable to proceedings in bankruptcy, and that by Equity Rule 68, the time for filing exceptions to the report of masters is fixed at twenty days. We do not think that the general equity rules can be applied as rules of court in the performance of the administrative work of courts of bankruptcy. They may be looked to for analogies but not as rules. The Supreme Court itself has fixed the rules to govern courts of bankruptcy. To hold that the District Court was bound by the report of the referee because exceptions were not filed within twenty days, would deprive that court of its duty both under the bankruptcy law and the rules of the Supreme Court to pass upon the question of the bankrupt's right to his discharge.

should not base a finding upon the original examination of the bankrupt before him as referee.¹⁷² A special master should not report upon questions presented by the specifications of objections to a discharge without having examined the witnesses and heard their testimony for the presence of witnesses in a contested controversy is vital to its proper determination.¹⁷³ All testimony objected to, with the objections noted therein and the decisions thereon, should be preserved and reported to the court.¹⁷⁴

f. Proceedings on hearing.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The hearing is, in effect, a trial in equity. Objections to a bankrupt's discharge are the beginning of a distinct and separate dispute and easily fall within any accepted definition of a suit or an action.¹⁷⁵ The opposition to the discharge is always in the nature of a new suit. It requires proofs of the grounds set out in the specifications in opposition to the discharge.¹⁷⁶ All the grounds of objection urged against granting a discharge should be passed upon, so as to prevent the necessity of sending the case back, if the referee's conclusions on particular charges are not concurred in by the court.¹⁷⁷ The bankrupt may file such papers as he may desire, but he is not required to file any.¹⁷⁸

(2) DEATH OF CREDITOR AFTER OBJECTIONS.—The death of a creditor who has filed objections prior to the termination of the discharge proceedings, the hearing upon the application should be continued on notice to the decedent's attorney and also to the widow and children or next of kin; but it is not necessary for the bankrupt to proceed in the proper jurisdiction to obtain the appointment of a legal representative of the decedent's estate.¹⁷⁹ The testimony already given by the deceased creditor in the proceedings under oath, although not signed or read to him, as required by General Order 22, may be written out and included in the report.¹⁸⁰

(3) RULES OF EVIDENCE; PROOF REQUIRED.^{180a}—The ordinary rules of evidence control. Proof must be strict and convincing, but not necessarily to the limit required in proving a crime.¹⁸¹ Evidence will be confined to the

When objecting creditors show that a financial statement made by a partner was untrue in the material respects; that the firm had obtained money on the credit of it; and that its untruthfulness related to a subject within the knowledge of said partner, they established a prima facie case, disentitling said partner to a discharge. Matter of Perlmutter (D. C., N. Y.), 43 Am. B. R. 362, 256 Fed. 802.

The reason for this rule rests upon the basis that it is an independent proceeding, and that when the bankrupt comes into court with a proper certificate of conformity, showing he has performed all the acts he is required by the Bankruptcy Act to perform, as preliminary to his discharge, the independent objections of creditors raise a new issue which they must sustain by proof. Matter of Lally (D. C., N. Y.), 43 Am. B. R. 252, 255 Fed. 358.

Failure to keep books.—Where the specification is based upon the ground that the bankrupt has, with intent to conceal his financial condition, failed to keep books of account, the burden of proof is upon the opposing creditor to show by convincing proof both that he failed to keep books of account and that his omission to do so was with intent to conceal his financial condition. C., Ia.), 31 Am. B. R. 231, 207 Fed. 882.

Evidence of false oath.—An objection to a bankrupt being granted a discharge, on the ground that he had knowingly and with fraudulent intent made a false oath to his schedules, need only be sustained by proof such as will overcome the presumption as to his honesty of purpose. Matter of Remmers (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 78, 173 Fed. 484; see In re Marcus & Sherr (D. C., N. Y.), 27 Am. B. R. 164, 192 Fed. 743.

Concealment of assets.—The fact, that a bankrupt has been indicted and put upon trial for the criminal offense of concealing assets on the eve of bankruptcy, may be sufficient ground for a denial of his discharge. The facts need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. A preponderance is enough, although not sufficient to convict. Matter of Atlas (D. C., Ill.), 34 Am. B. R. 44, 219 Fed. 783; In re Delmour (D. Presumption of innocence.—In the case of In re Troeder (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 17 Am. B. R. 723, 150 Fed. 710, the court says that where a crime is charged, although only on a civil issue, "it shocks the judicial mind to refuse to give him the benefit of the usual presumption of innocence, unless the adverse proofs are so far satisfactory as to be convincing." This case was sustained in Garry v. Jefferson Bank (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 511, 514, 186 Fed. 461.

Suspicious circumstances.—Under the rule that mere suspicion, conjecture, or surmise is not a basis for a conclusion that a bankrupt has concealed assets, evidence which merely shows that on the night prior to bankruptcy, bankrupt was seen to leave his business clandestinely and late at night, bearing away with him what seemed to the witness to be books and records, is insufficient to support a charge that bankrupt concealed or destroyed inventory books especially where his bookkeeper testifies that no inventory books were kept and that all the books were delivered to bankrupt's trustees when they entered into possession. Use of bankrupt's former testimony.—In the case of Shaffer v. Koblegard Co. (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 898, 900, 183 Fed. 71, the court said: "It has generally been held that statements made by the bankrupt, under oath in his examination before the referee, may and should be considered in a proceeding touching his right to a discharge so far as the same may be material to the issues involved." (Citing cases in this note and the text.)

An application for a discharge is not a criminal proceeding, and section 7, providing that no testimony given by a bankrupt at any meeting of creditors "shall be offered in evidence against him in any criminal proceeding" has no apparent application to such a proceeding. In re Gaylord (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 7 Am. B. R. 1, 112 Fed. 668.

Evidence by partners on former examination.—Evidence given by the members of a bankrupt partnership on a general examination before the referee as to the property of the firm is admissible, on an application for a discharge, against each of the members respectively; but the evidence of each member is not admissible against each of the other members. Matter of Malschick & Levin (D. C., Pa.), 33 Am. B. R. 214, 217 Fed. 492.

Waiver of objection.—Upon a hearing before the referee upon objections to the discharge of members of a bankrupt firm, objection was made to the admission in evidence, in support of the specifications, of the bankrupt's testimony taken upon the general examination, upon the grounds that such examination was never adjourned sine die, that the testimony had not been signed; that bankrupts had no opportunity to amend or correct it and that no opportunity had been given to cross-examine them for the purpose of elucidating points in their favor, but not upon the ground that the testimony of one bankrupt, so taken was inadmissible against the other, and after opportunity was afforded to examine bankrupts and after their examination in the discharge proceedings, no further objection was taken. Held, that the objection had been waived. Matter of Magen (D. C., Pa.), 33 Am. B. R. 246, 218 Fed. 692.

191. See General Order XXII.

The referee in taking testimony must have it taken down preferably in narrative form, but upon objection raised, it is his duty to require the matter to be presented by question, to which the objection and reason thereof is to clearly but briefly noted, then to enter his ruling thereon as to whether proper or not, and although he may rule it to be improper, yet allow it to be answered. quently stipulated in. This practice is loose and should not be followed. The better method, where a stipulation is possible, is to cull out those portions that are pertinent, and read them in.

(4) MINUTES AND REPORT.—The testimony may be taken down in narrative form, or by question and answer, and, if the latter, a stenographer may be employed, this perhaps by analogy to the procedure on the examination of the bankrupt.¹⁹¹ The referee should preserve all testimony objected to, noting the objections and taking answers subject thereto, and report the same to the court, or if necessary, certify to the court on proper application any particular ruling.¹⁹² Equity Rules LXXII to LXXXII should be consulted for details of procedure on such hearings. At the conclusion of the reference, the special master makes up a report, and files it, with his record, and all papers and pleadings with the clerk.¹⁹³ Such report should embody a summary of his findings and state his opinion thereon. He should pass his own judgment on the facts,¹⁹⁴ and not that of a jury which in another proceeding had rendered a verdict as to the bankrupt's guilt.¹⁹⁴ He should pass upon all the grounds of objections urged on the hearing before him.¹⁹⁵ This report is brought upon notice either on motion for confirmation or by exception, and the case then proceeds before the judge.¹⁹⁶ Exceptions to the report of the referee must be filed within twenty days after the filing of the report.¹⁹⁷ A referee's findings upon conflicting evidence are entitled to the same consideration as those of a district judge,¹⁹⁸ and cannot be disregarded where there is sufficient testimony to support them.¹⁹⁹ This is true whether the findings are in favor of the bankrupt or the trustee.^{199a}

193. Report of special master.—See "Supplementary Form No. 115;" Hagar & Alexander's Bankr. Forms (2d Ed.), Form No. 280, post. Compare In re Steed (D. C., N. Car.), 6 Am. B. R. 73, 107 Fed. 682; Mahoney v. Ward (D. C., N. Car.), 3 Am. B. R. 770, 100 Fed. 278.

It is the duty of the special master to take and report evidence, and to return the same together with the ruling as to its admissibility. It is not error for the special master to reserve decision as to the admissibility of testimony under insufficient specifications. In re Knaszak (D. C., N. Y.), 18 Am. B. R. 187, 151 Fed. 503.

Where a special commissioner has stated his general findings in the form of an opinion on specifications of objection to a discharge, an objection that he has not made separate findings of fact and of law will not be sustained, because an opinion is generally of more value than enumerated statements of fact and conclusions of law. Matter of Rowe (D. C., N. Y.), 39 Am. B. R. 461, 240 Fed. 165.

Synopsis of specifications.—Where the specifications of objections to bankrupt's discharge filed by creditors were before the referee, but in referring to them in his report he set out a synopsis of them instead of setting them out in full, an exception that he erred in setting forth specifications of objections not actually filed, is frivolous. Matter of Magen (D. C., Pa.), 33 Am. B. R. 348, 218 Fed. 692.

193a. Practice where referee only reports testimony and fails to state conclusions.—Where a referee on objection to a bankrupt's discharge only reported the testimony, and failed to reach any definite conclusion thereon, the District Court, on review, may either refer the matter back to the referee with instructions to find and report the ultimate facts upon the testimony and the applicable rules of law, or may find them itself; but it is the better practice to refer the matter back to the referee.

(5) COMPENSATION AND DISBURSEMENTS.—The right of referees sitting as special masters to compensation in addition to their fees as referees has already been well settled,²⁰⁰ and rests on the ground that the duties required of them are outside their functions as defined and paid for under the law. Section 72, added by the amendatory act of 1903, has not, it is thought, affected this rule. This compensation is often fixed by district rules.²⁰¹ If not, it is adjusted under Equity Rule LXXXII. The disbursements of the special master, as for a stenographer, are, of course, allowed.²⁰²

V. GROUNDS OF OPPOSITION TO DISCHARGE.

a. In general.—Subsection b of this section specifies the cases in which a bankrupt may be refused a discharge. As previously suggested, the specifications of objection must exhibit, and the evidence in support of them must prove, one of the objections specified in the law,²⁰³ and the only grounds of

given to the finding of a referee or special master upon an application for a discharge, has been the subject of some difference of opinion among the courts; but we think it may fairly be stated that the consensus is that where a referee and special master's action is based upon conflicting testimony, and he heard and saw the witnesses, that his findings ought to be accepted, and not disturbed, unless it appears that he has made a plain mistake; and this is particularly true in cases involving the concealment of assets, where the motive and intent of the bankrupt becomes material. In this class of cases much weight is necessarily due to the conclusions of the tribunal which had the opportunity of seeing and observing the matter and deportment of the witnesses whose acts were called in question, or of those who may have been cognizant of the transaction. In re Lafache (D. C., Vt.), 6 Am. B. R. 483, 109 Fed. 307; Ohio Valley Bank v. Mack (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 40, 163 Fed. 155, and cases cited, 89 C. C. A. 606, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 184; in re Wheeler (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 262, 105 Fed. 183, 91 C. C. A. 222; Epstein v. Steinfeld (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 32 Am. B. R. 6, 210 Fed. 236, 127 C. C. A. 24. In this case we have the findings of fact by the referee and special master, and have carefully and critically examined the testimony; and our conclusion is that he was correct in his finding, and that the evidence is entirely insufficient to justify a refusal of the discharge."

Review.—The District Court will not overrule the findings of a special commissioner on objections to a discharge, if there is any evidence upon which the findings are based, unless the conclusions are contrary to law, or unless consideration of the entire issue leads to a different construction of some of the acts involved. Matter of Rowe (D. C., N. Y.), 39 Am. B. R. 461, 240 Fed. 166.

St. Louis Cycle* (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 700, 107 Fed. 77, the referee seems to have been allowed extra compensation as referee and not as special master.

Findings where jury has found as to same facts.—Where a referee, who has been appointed to take proofs respecting specifications of objection to a bankrupt's discharge and to report such proofs to the court together with his findings thereon, is convinced after duly considering all the evidence, that bankrupt had wilfully sworn falsely to material facts, and so certifies, he should report a finding to that effect, and it is error for him to subordinate his own judgment in the matter to that of a jury which, by their verdict in another proceeding, had found bankrupt not guilty of the offense with which he is charged. In re Cohan (D. C., N. J.), 26 Am. B. R. 544, 192 Fed. 751.

objection specified are those enumerated in sections fourteen and twenty-nine.²⁰⁴ Matters of jurisdiction and the validity of prior proceedings are not included.²⁰⁵ Even if the proof shows that the only debt is one which is not dischargeable, if the specifications are not sustained, a discharge should be granted.²⁰⁶ But it has been held that if the court knows of facts rendering the discharge revokable if they had first become known after it was granted, the statute does not compel the court to grant the discharge.²⁰⁷ And if one of several objections is well pleaded and sustained by the evidence, a discharge may be denied.²⁰⁸

b. Offense of larceny.—The offense of larceny, or larceny as bailee, committed by a bankrupt against an objecting creditor more than a year before the petition was filed, is not within the statutory grounds.²⁰⁹

c. Under the original law, and under the law as amended.—The additional objections provided for by the act of 1903, and as amended by the act of 1910, are important and far-reaching, but they are not available as grounds for denying a discharge in proceedings instituted prior to the taking effect of said amendments.²¹⁰ Neither the original act nor its amendments are retrospective; if the act complained of was not prohibited when it was committed a discharge may not be refused because under a subsequent enactment such act was prohibited.²¹¹

VI. COMMISSION OF OFFENSE PUNISHABLE BY IMPRISONMENT.

a. In general.—Subdivision 1 of subsection b provides as the first ground of refusing a discharge the commission of "an offense punishable by imprisonment as herein provided." This, in effect, means the commission of either of the offenses specified in the first and second subdivisions of § 29-b.²¹² Those defined in the third, fourth or fifth subdivision cannot well be committed by a bankrupt.²¹³ It has been thought also to include the commission of a contempt, though the use of the word "offense" necessarily negatives such a view.²¹⁴ If any of the offenses enumerated by § 29 of the act are committed by the bankrupt, either in his own or some other bankruptcy proceedings, his discharge must be denied.²¹⁵

b. Concealment of property.—(1) WHAT CONSTITUTES.—(I) In general.—To entitle the bankrupt to the privilege of a discharge there must be entire good faith on his part; he must surrender his property fully; he may not retain or conceal any part thereof which should go to his creditors.²¹⁶ The bankrupt cannot decide for himself whether a specific piece of property may be retained by him, and conceal the existence thereof by omitting it from his

§14. A contempt, even though punished by imprisonment, is not a crime. The offense must be one under the bankruptcy law. Section 29 indicates what constitutes such "offenses."

§15. Commission of offenses in bankrupts bankruptcy.—In the case of Matter of Lesser (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 36 Am. B. R. 833, 234 Fed. 65, the court said: "As herein provided means as provided under the head of 'Offenses' in the bankruptcy act (section 29a). If a bankrupt applying for a discharge has committed an offense covered by section 29a his discharge must be refused. It would be an absolute impossibility for him to commit some of these offenses in his own bankruptcy. One of the offenses punished by section 29a is the embezzlement by a trustee in bankruptcy of property belonging to the estate of the bankrupt. If the trustee is convicted of such embezzlement and subsequently becomes a bankrupt himself he can, if the ruling of the district judge is correct, obtain his discharge, notwithstanding his conviction under section 29a of an offense which section 14 declares is an absolute bar to a discharge. As before stated, there is nothing in the act which confines the perjury which bars a discharge to that committed in the bankrupt's own proceeding. On the contrary, many of the offenses, conviction of which bars a discharge, cannot, as before stated, be committed in the bankruptcy proceedings of the applicant for a discharge. We cannot think that the lawmakers intended a result so illogical as to permit a trustee who has embezzled the estate of the bankrupt placed in his care by the court to file a petition of his own and procure a discharge, notwithstanding his crime, because it was committed in a bankruptcy proceeding other than his own. There is nothing compelling such a construction of the law. * * * It seems clear that the intention of the lawmakers was to refuse a discharge to a bankrupt who has taken a false oath in any bankruptcy proceeding. If he can commit perjury once and succeed he will be quite likely to attempt it again. The contention that the perjury must be committed in his own bankruptcy is contrary to the letter of the law, and if sustained may lead to deplorable results."

Violation of State law.—Although the failure of bankrupts, engaged as private bankers, to transmit to a foreign country moneys received for such purpose, constitutes a misdemeanor under the General Business Law of the State of New York, it is not an offense punishable by imprisonment under any provision of the Bankruptcy Act, and hence does not prevent a discharge. Matter of Oliner (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 44 Am. B. R. 450, 262 Fed. 734.

§16. In re Breitling (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 13 Am. B. R. 126, 133 Fed. 146; Matter of Brincat (D. C., Ala.), 37 Am. B. R. 587, 233 Fed. 811.

Complete appropriation of assets.—In the case of In re Baudouine (D. C., N. Y.), 3 Am. B. R. 55, 61, 96 Fed. 536, 539, Judge Brown said: "A discharge in bankruptcy upon any other condition than the complete appropriation of every known asset legally available to creditors would not only be a glaring wrong to creditors, but contrary to every conception of a just system of bankruptcy."

In the case of Barton Bros. v. Produce Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 502, 505, 136 Fed. 355, the court said: "The bankrupt must make a full and complete surrender of all his unexempt property for the benefit of his creditors. He must be honest in this respect. He must neither conceal nor withhold knowingly anything from his creditors which they are entitled, under the law, to know or receive. Whenever the court is impressed with the belief, after due inquiry and examination, that in the main the bankrupt has intended and tried to comply with the law, he should be dealt with liberally on his petition for manumission from his debts. On the other hand, in order to obstruct gross abuses of the spirit of the bankrupt act, that it may not aid the dishonest debtor in being acquitted of his honest debts, while withholding aught that he should surrender for the benefit of his creditors, it is the duty of the court to look into the heart of his transactions."

Bad faith of bankrupt.—Where creditors objecting to a bankrupt's discharge sustain their accusation that he has so conducted his business as not to indicate good faith, and has caused his assets to disappear, the burden is upon the bankrupt to show that he is entitled to a discharge; and where bankrupt conducted a business which he got rid of when trouble was in sight because of a promissory note, and thereafter conducted business for the benefit and in the name of his sister, who apparently had no capital, without accounting for the proceeds derived from the sale of his business, a discharge will be denied. In re Miller (D. C., N. Y.), 30 Am. B. R. 113, 203 Fed. 170.

schedules; it is his duty to disclose the property and permit the court to determine whether it could go to his creditors.²¹⁷

(II) Essential elements.—To constitute concealment an objection to a discharge, it must be (1) by the bankrupt,²¹⁸ while a bankrupt or after his discharge—in other words, after the filing of the petition²¹⁹—and (2) from his trustee, (3) of property belonging to the estate in bankruptcy, and (4) such concealment must be “knowingly and fraudulently” done.²²⁰

(III) Knowingly and fraudulently.—The most important of the essentials of a concealment is that it be done “knowingly and fraudulently,” and without clear proof sustaining it, the specifications must be dismissed.²²¹ The question of intent becomes, therefore, of first importance in determining whether the offense has been committed. Without a purpose to profit by the concealment, or to deprive the creditors of their legal right to an apportionment of all the property of the bankrupt the act complained of will not constitute a bar to a discharge.²²² Thus, an omission to include property in the schedules under

B. R. 435, 147 Fed. 694, holding that the failure of the president of a mail order corporation to schedule a duplicate mailing list was not a bar to his discharge.

Intent.—While intent is a pertinent inquiry, it is not the sole inquiry. The substance of the offense is the withholding of assets, so that the true inquiry is whether with fraudulent intent, the bankrupt withheld from his schedule property belonging to his creditors. Apart from the withholding of assets, the intent constitutes no cause for denying a discharge. Vehon v. Ullman (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 17 Am. B. R. 435, 147 Fed. 694.

Where it appears that a bankrupt intentionally took his property and kept it from his creditors, with intent to hinder, delay or defraud them, he will be denied a discharge, even though he thought his action justified. Matter of Nelson (D. C., N. Y.), 23 Am. B. R. 37, 179 Fed. 320.

²¹⁸ In re Myers (D. C., N. Y.), 5 Am. B. R. 4, 105 Fed. 353, holding that a discharge may be granted to a wife, notwithstanding a concealment of assets by her husband in managing her business. ²¹⁹ In re Webb (D. C., N. Y.), 3 Am. B. R. 386, 98 Fed. 404.

²²⁰ Concealment; essential elements.—To constitute a concealment of property having discharge, it must have been by the bankrupt after the filing of a petition against him, while a bankrupt, or after his discharge, and the property must have been concealed from the trustee, and such property must have belonged to the estate in bankruptcy. The concealment must be knowingly and fraudulently made. Matter of Agnew and Sherman (D. C., N. Y.), 35 Am. B. R. 709, 225 Fed. 650.

The words “knowingly” and “fraudulently,” in section 29b, relating to concealment of assets by a bankrupt, must be given their natural significance in the consideration of a charge of concealment of assets made in opposition to granting him a discharge, and it must be shown by a clear preponderance of evidence that such concealment was practiced knowingly and fraudulently. Klein v. Powell (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 494, 174 Fed. 640.

R. 132, 209 Fed. 371, holding that creditors, claiming that a bankrupt transferred property in fraud of their rights, must show that the bankrupt knew the result of his act would deprive them of their rights—that is the element of intent—but it is quite irrelevant whether the bankrupt in his own mind had an honest justification; In re Kyte (D. C., Pa.), 23 Am. B. R. 414, 174 Fed. 867.

an honest mistake of law or fact will not bar a discharge.²²³ But, if such omission is not satisfactorily explained, it will usually amount to a concealment.²²⁴

(IV) Property belonging to estate.—The concealment must pertain to property belonging to the bankrupt, which would pass upon his bankruptcy to his trustee. It must be shown by competent and sufficient evidence that the property concealed belonged to the bankrupt, and in the absence of a finding to this effect the offense is not established.²²⁵ The amount or value of the property concealed does not bear particularly upon the existence of the offense, if the knowledge, intent or wilfulness of the concealment is established.²²⁶

(V) Failure to schedule property.—Failure to schedule or surrender property to the trustee is not per se or ipso facto knowingly and fraudulently concealing it.²²⁷ If the bankrupt has money in his possession when he files his petition, which he did not schedule or turn over to his trustee, he is, in the absence of a satisfactory explanation, guilty of a concealment of assets which bars his discharge.²²⁸ An omission to schedule property fraudulently conveyed usually amounts to a concealment, where the bankrupt retains an interest therein.²²⁹ But where the transfer was made more than four months prior

Presumption of concealment arises from failure to account for property in possession of bankrupt shortly before adjudication, and and not included in schedules. The sufficiency of the explanation is in the discretion of the district judge. Siegel v. Cartel (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 140, 164 Fed. 691.

Desire to conceal although no property existing.—The mental operation of thinking property is owned, and desiring to conceal it, when in fact no such property exists, does not fall within any of the prohibitions of section 14. Matter of Hughes (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 44 Am. B. R. 447, 262 Fed. 500.

²²⁶. Value of property concealed.—The bankruptcy act is not aimed particularly at large concealments of property, but at all concealments of property. If the amount is small, and inadvertently retained or forgotten, the failure to disclose will not prevent a discharge; but when knowingly and willfully concealed from the trustee, and drawn out and used by the bankrupt for his own personal use, whether the sum be large or small, there is a concealment of property with intent to defraud creditors. Matter of Smith (D. C., N. Y.), 37 Am. B. R. 230, 232 Fed. 248. See Matter of Levy (D. C., N. Y.), 36 Am. B. R. 181, 227 Fed. 1011.

The mere fact that a bankrupt omitted bedroom furniture of small value from his schedules is not in itself sufficient to justify the denial of a discharge, especially where it was partly owned by his clerk and the key to the room had been given to the trustee. Failure to schedule property transferred.—The failure to schedule or surrender property to the trustee is not per se, or ipso facto, knowingly and fraudulently concealing it, though an omission to schedule property fraudulently conveyed usually amounts to a concealment where the bankrupt retains any interest therein. Where, however, the evidence shows an entire absence of fraudulent intent, no such offense has been committed as will warrant the denial of a discharge on the ground of concealment. to filing the petition in bankruptcy, it will not constitute a bar to discharge.²²⁹ This question often arises where property has been given or transferred by a bankrupt to his wife and omitted from the schedules or otherwise concealed.²³¹ Where a bankrupt has property in his wife's name, for the purpose of keeping such property from his creditors, a discharge will not be granted.²³² It seems, however, that an omission of assets from the schedule, on the advice of counsel, honestly given, is at least a presumptive excuse;²³³ as where the bankrupt was advised that his interest in his grandfather's estate was contingent and not vested.²³⁴ If there be no fraudulent or criminal intent in failing to schedule the property, and it was omitted upon a fair and reasonable cause to believe that it should not be included, based upon the advice of counsel, the omission is not an offense barring discharge.²³⁵ The advice of counsel is no excuse unless it was based upon a full and truthful disclosure of all the facts pertaining to the Failure to schedule property held by wife.—In the case of In re Graves (D. C., Pa.), 26 Am. B. R. 633, 189 Fed. 847, the court said: "To entitle the bankrupt to a discharge, there must be entire good faith on his part. He must surrender his property fully. He cannot retain or conceal any part thereof which should go to his creditors. If the property, or a portion of it, belonging to the bankrupt has been vested directly or indirectly in his wife, no matter when that was done, if the court believes from the evidence that it was done and continued fraudulently, and the property really was held for the bankrupt's benefit and subject to his control, the failure to mention such property, of whatever it may consist, in the schedule and to inform the trustee in regard thereto, is concealment of property and will prevent a discharge. This is a well settled principle, requiring no reference to cases decided." See also In re Diamond (D. C., Wis.), 30 Am. B. R. 363, 204 Fed. 137. omitted assets.²³⁶ Where a person prior to filing a petition in bankruptcy conveys property to a third person, to be held, in whole or in part, in secret trust for himself, and fails to schedule such interest, such failure constitutes a knowing and fraudulent concealment from his trustee, while a bankrupt, of property belonging to his estate in bankruptcy, and will preclude his discharge.²³⁷ The listing of property after an attempt to conceal the same and after the false oath has been discovered will not relieve the bankrupt from the consequences of such acts.²³⁸ Real property set apart to a divorced wife as alimony is not within the jurisdiction of a court in bankruptcy,²³⁹ and a failure to schedule such property does not constitute a concealment so as to defeat the wife's right to a discharge.²⁴⁰ Salary of a public officer does not pass to a trustee, and a failure to schedule the amount earned when the petition was filed is not a concealment of assets barring discharge.²⁴¹ A bankrupt should not be refused a discharge because he failed to set forth in his schedules the income derived from certain trust funds, and did not turn over to the trustee on demand his interest in said income, especially where it has not been decided whether or not such income passes to the trustee.²⁴²

(VI) Undervaluation.—The value of the property concealed is not material if it be shown that it was knowingly and fraudulently done.²⁴³ If property is undervalued the fact may be considered in determining whether a concealment has been committed although it is not itself a concealment.²⁴⁴

months' period, being charged as a fraudulent concealment of assets from the trustee, will prevent the granting of a discharge until the validity of the mortgage and the sufficiency of the foreclosure has been passed upon by a court of competent jurisdiction.²⁴⁶ If a voluntary transfer be made in contemplation of future indebtedness it may amount to a concealment,²⁴⁷ and so also where it appears that property was conveyed in fraud of creditors and is held in secret trust;²⁴⁸ and where a deed executed and recorded more than four months prior to bankruptcy, was in fact a mortgage which was not disclosed until immediately prior to the filing of the petition, there was a concealment of property within the meaning of the act.²⁴⁹ Where the bankrupt remains in possession of the transferred property, and the transfer is merely a device to obtain credit from the use of the transferee's note, the property is fraudulently concealed, and discharge may be denied.²⁵⁰

(2) EVIDENCE OF CONCEALMENT OF ASSETS.^{250a}—A wilful and fraudulent concealment of assets by a bankrupt need only be shown by a fair preponderance of credible evidence.²⁵¹ The burden of proof rests upon the opposing creditors; they must show by satisfactory evidence the essential elements of a concealment.²⁵² If the testimony is that of the bankrupt alone, and the most that can be said is that the circumstances are suspicious, the objection to a discharge should be overruled.²⁵³ Where objecting creditors have made a prima facie

Secret trust.—It has been held on several occasions that where a person, prior to filing a petition in bankruptcy, conveys the whole or a part of his property to a third party to be held in secret trust for himself, and fails to schedule it as a part of his assets, such an act amounts to a fraudulent concealment of assets which will defeat his right to a discharge. *Hudson v. Mere suspicion insufficient.—In the case of In re Taylor (D. C., Ala.), 26 Am. B. R. 143, 149, 188 Fed. 479, 484, the court said: "The denial of the discharge because of fraudulent concealment of assets or of a false oath by the bankrupt must be made out by clear and convincing proof, and is not the subject of mere suspicion or inference."

case the burden is on the bankrupt to so weaken it by credible evidence as to present a question of fact.²⁵⁴ If it appear that the bankrupt did not act in good faith in withholding a part of his property from his creditors, the court will not countenance it by permitting his discharge.²⁵⁵ While fraudulent intent is essential it does not of itself justify a refusal of a discharge where it is not shown that the assets alleged to have been concealed belonged to the bankrupt's estate.²⁵⁶ If it be decided in a prior controversy in the proceedings that the bankrupt was guilty of a concealment of assets, the question of concealment is res adjudicata in the proceedings for a discharge, and raises a presumption against the bankrupt.²⁵⁷ The failure of the trustee to prove the whole amount alleged to have been concealed is immaterial in passing on the bankrupt's right to be discharged, as the specifications may be amended to conform to the proof.²⁵⁸

(3) CONTINUING CONCEALMENT.—Concealment being possible only if the person is "a bankrupt," strictly, a concealment accomplished before the bankruptcy is not within the penalty of the statute. This limitation has, however, led to the doctrine of "continuing concealment," which is now generally recognized.²⁵⁹ Although the concealment must have been done while a bank-

Undervaluation.—In the case of In re Sammel (D. C., Pa.), 9 Am. B. R. 353, 118 Fed. 457, it was held that the bankrupt could not be charged with concealing shares of stock because he had undervalued them, but that fact, as well as the fact that he did not name the stock, was a circumstance of more or less weight on the question of concealment, if there was further evidence to bear it out; In re Jacobs (D. Placing title in wife's name as continuing concealment.—Where a bankrupt, several years previously, had transferred certain real estate, subject to a mortgage to his wife, without consideration, but without any attempt at concealment, and there was no proof that there was any agreement between them that the bankrupt should retain any interest in such property, the fact that after such transfer the bankrupt continued to live with his wife on this property and other real estate which she purchased, and that he worked for her thereon, without proof, however, that he did more for his wife than his board was worth, was not sufficient to disclose such a secret interest in the property as to sustain the burden imposed upon a creditor objecting to the bankrupt's discharge on the ground of concealment of property. In re Wermuth (D. C., N. Y.), 24 Am. B. R. 785, 175 Fed. 1009.

Where the record shows that the bankrupt, having an interest in certain properties, placed the title thereto in his wife's name for the purpose of keeping them out of the reach of the creditors, and she held the title when he filed his schedules, in which he did not include his interest in the properties, he will be refused a discharge, both upon the ground of a fraudulent concealment of assets and of making a false oath. Concealment of assets of a bankrupt before the appointment of a trustee, and continuing after such appointment, is a concealment from the trustee in violation of the bankruptcy act. Matter of Brincat (D. C., Ala.), 37 Am. B. R. 587, 233 Fed. 811.

Conveyances prior to four months' period.—In New York a conveyance of real estate made by a bankrupt long anterior to the rupt or after discharge, yet where a bankrupt has disposed of property prior to bankruptcy but has possession or control of the proceeds subsequent to adjudication which he fails to disclose, there is a continuing concealment for which he is amenable to the law.²⁶⁰ The word "concealed" is sufficiently elastic to include "continuing concealments."²⁶¹ Such a concealment once begun necessarily continues after the bankruptcy and is, therefore, "from his trustee." Whether it is also of "property belonging to his estate in bankruptcy" is sometimes a difficult question, and usually turns on the bona fides of the transaction through which possession and title passed from the bankrupt. No hard and fast rule can be phrased; the cases rest each on its own facts.²⁶² four months' period, with intent to hinder, delay and defraud creditors, may be alleged as a ground of objection to his discharge, where the conveyance is not recorded until within the four months' period. Matter of McKane (D. C., N. Y.), 19 Am. B. R. 103, 155 Fed. 674. But it is no ground for denying a bankrupt's discharge that more than four months prior to the filing of his petition he conveyed to his wife, for full value, certain shares of corporate stock for the purpose of raising money to pay the expenses of an impending suit for breach of promise to marry. In re Brambaugh (D. C., Pa.), 12 Am. B. R. 204, 128 Fed. 971.

Proof that the bankrupt, three years prior to bankruptcy, having no other property, conveyed certain real estate, heavily mortgaged, but in which he had an equity of redemption worth from $10,000 to $12,000, to his sons for a cash consideration of $500, and upon the understanding that they would pay his creditors, including themselves, is insufficient, in the absence of evidence that the property was held by the grantees in trust for the bankrupt or his benefit or that he thereafter in any way dealt with the property as his own or directly or indirectly derived any benefit therefrom, to sustain an objection to his discharge upon the ground of a concealment of assets from his trustee. In re Jacobs (D. C., N. J.), 16 Am. B. R. 482, 144 Fed. 868.

Where a bankrupt, while insolvent, conveys property to a near relative without consideration and afterward fails to disclose the existence of such property in his schedules, he is prima facie guilty of concealing assets from his trustee, although the conveyance may have been made more than four months before the petition was filed; but if, upon the bankrupt's application for discharge, the innocence of the transaction be made to appear, the conveyance and the subsequent omission of the property from the schedules will interpose no obstacle to the discharge. In re McCann (D. C., Pa.), 24 Am. B. R. 789, 179 Fed. 575.

Continued after filing petition.—A concealment of property, in order to bar a discharge, must be by the bankrupt, or by his procurement, after the filing of his petition, and from his trustee, or before such filing, and continued after such filing and the ap-

Knowingly and fraudulently.—A specification of objection to a bankrupt's discharge which fails to state, either in the words of the statute or in equivalent phraseology, that bankrupt knowingly “and fraudulently” made a false oath in or in relation to any proceeding in bankruptcy does not set forth the offense defined in section 29 of the Bankruptcy Act, and is insufficient to bar a discharge. (4) OATH TO SCHEDULES OMITTING PROPERTY.—A common instance is where a bankrupt swears that his schedule of property is a statement of "all his estate, both real and personal," and he has knowingly or fraudulently omitted assets therefrom.²⁷¹ If the items were omitted because of mistake or the honest advice of counsel, to whom the bankrupt had disclosed all the facts relative to such items, the oath will not be deemed wilfully false, and the discharge should not be denied because of it.²⁷² The evidence must be definite and certain to the effect that the property omitted should have been scheduled as part of the bankrupt's assets.²⁷³ A bankrupt, who omits from his sworn schedule

False oath to schedules.—Where a bankrupt, in his schedules, states that he had no money or property except $10 in cash, when in fact he was the owner of nine head of cattle and had in his possession $861 in

Where it appears that a bankrupt has concealed assets, which have not been listed in his schedules, he will be deemed to have taken a false oath when he swore to the truth of the schedules. In re Cantor (Ref., D. C., N. Y.), 26 Am. B. R. 859.

False oath as to interest in real property.—Where it appears that by statute a bankrupt has a life estate in one-third of his wife's real estate, that such property was purchased by his wife with his own savings; that, although he claims to hold the property merely as trustee for his children, he has in many instances held it out as his own, his oath to the effect that he has no such interest will be held to have been made knowingly and will prevent his discharge. In re Hale (D. C., N. Y.), 45 Am. B. R. 319, — Fed. —.

An objection to a bankrupt being granted a discharge, on the ground that he had knowingly and with fraudulent intent made false oath to his schedules, need only be sustained by proof such as will overcome the presumption as to his honesty of purpose. Matter of Remmers (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 78, 173 Fed. 484.

securities which are absolutely worthless, is not guilty of making a false oath.²⁷⁴ If the securities omitted are deemed valuable by the bankrupt, evidenced by an effort made to recover them by suit against a pledgee, brought subsequent to the bankrupt's adjudication, his discharge should be denied.²⁷⁵ It thus appears that the omission of property from verified schedules may be both a false oath and a concealment.²⁷⁶ What has already been said in respect to wilful and fraudulent omission of items from schedules constituting concealment, applies here with equal force.

(5) FALSE OATH ON FORMER EXAMINATION UNDER § 7 (9).—This same analogy has led to much confusion concerning the right to predicate such an objection on a false oath during the bankrupt's examination. It seems not to be doubted that this objection may rest on any oath voluntarily taken,²⁷⁷ but it has been vigorously denied that a false oath under compulsion can be made the basis of an objection to a discharge. The earlier cases were quite uniform that it could not; this on the ground that, by § 7 (9), the evidence then adduced could not be used against a bankrupt in a criminal proceeding.²⁷⁸ This view has, however, now been exploded.²⁷⁹ It is a torturing of words to call a proceeding on discharge a criminal proceeding, merely because the same facts if proven in support of an indictment might result in conviction for crime. The contention that to permit the use of such testimony "would set a trap for the debtor" has been well answered by a distinguished judge to the effect that the opposite rule "would set a trap for the creditors, or else so set the trap that the debtor could get all the bait (the discharge) and yet not spring the trap."²⁸⁰

(6) OTHER INSTANCES OF FALSE OATH.—The false oath must be on a matter material to the inquiry,²⁸¹ and it has been held that it must have been made in the proceedings in which the bankruptcy of the petitioner was to be adjudicated and his estate administered.²⁸² But, if a false oath was due to a mistake in fact or the result of honest advice of counsel, a discharge will not usually

Value of property not scheduled.—Where a bankrupt, after turning over to his wife a plumbing business, had its full management and control, and had drawn but from $2 to $4 a week for his services, which were reasonably worth $10 to $20 a week, it cannot be charged that he made a false oath in omitting from his schedules a claim against his wife for services where the specifications of objection to his discharge, alleging the above facts, fail to set forth the existence of a valid claim against the wife. In re Adams (D. Thus, a false oath made by the bankrupt, prior to his adjudication in a bankruptcy proceeding, against a corporation of which he was an officer and stockholder, is not ground for refusing his discharge. In re Blalock (D. C., S. Car.), 9 Am. B. R. 266, 118 Fed. 679; In re Marcus (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 30 Am. B. R. 176, 203 Fed. 29.

Materiality of false oath.—A false oath is not a bar to a discharge unless it constitutes an offense punishable by imprisonment. Testimony as to property, which can have no in-

be refused.²⁸³ Statements by bankrupt on examination before the referee that he had no property not scheduled, when it appeared that he had transferred valuable property within the four months' period with intent to defraud his creditors, constitute a false oath, barring his discharge.²⁸⁴ A bankrupt's discharge may be denied where he failed to include certain creditors in his schedules, though he presents releases from such creditors on the hearing of the application for a discharge.^{284a} A bankrupt, who at the first meeting of creditors swears positively that he had never made a statement of financial condition to any one, when in fact he had made such a statement a very short time before, is guilty of knowingly and fraudulently making a false oath, which constitutes a bar to his discharge.²⁸⁵ The attempt of a bankrupt, in making his schedules, to falsely decrease the claim of a creditor who has some security is a sufficient ground for denial of a discharge, unless the creditor could have been estopped and his claim held down to the lower amount.^{285a} Cases where the bankrupt swears falsely to an account in the proceeding are rare. Usually such an oath would also amount to a false oath proper, and might often be a concealment. There are as yet no authorities in point. Additional cases where this ground of objection has been considered will be found in the foot-note.²⁸⁶

VII. FAILURE TO KEEP, DESTRUCTION OR CONCEALMENT OF BOOKS.

a. In general.—A bankrupt who, "with intent to conceal his financial condition, destroyed, concealed or failed to keep books of accounts or records from which such condition might be ascertained" is not entitled to a discharge.²⁸⁷ The amendatory act of 1903 materially modified the original law, and greatly altered the essential elements of pleading and proof. We have indicated these changes in the notes to the text of section 14.²⁸⁸ The subdivision in its original form was highly objectionable, in particular, in that it required proof that the act complained of was "in contemplation of bankruptcy,"²⁸⁹ which was held to mean in contemplation of a bankruptcy proceeding. This requirement has been dropped out.²⁹⁰ So have the adjectives "fraudulent," as perhaps narterest to the estate and no bearing on the estate's condition, is not material in a bankruptcy case. Matter of Huber (Ref., D. C., N. D.), 34 Am. B. R. 160.

290. The reasons for these changes are indicated in a Report of the Executive Com-rowing the meaning of "intent," and "true," as redundant when limiting the words "financial condition." These changes, however, by no means bring the law in this regard up to the level of its predecessor. It is still necessary to show that the failure to keep books was "with the intent to conceal his true financial condition."²⁹¹ The former law, like the English law, made mere failure by a merchant or tradesman to keep proper books of account an objection to his discharge; proof of intent was essential only when falsifying books was charged.²⁹² To sustain this objection, the proof must now show that (1) the act complained of was done after the passage of the bankruptcy law, (2) by the bankrupt or by some one acting under his direction, (3) with intent to conceal his financial condition; and (4) the act must consist of either destruction, concealment — which, as has been seen, includes secreting, falsifying, and mutilating²⁹³ — or failure to keep books of account or records from which the bankrupt's condition might be ascertained.²⁹⁴

b. Act committed after passage of law.— The first of these elements flows by implication from the words of the law.²⁹⁵ For instance a loss or disappearance of books prior to the enactment of the bankruptcy act will not justify a finding that there has been a failure to keep books with the intent to conceal the financial condition of the bankrupt.²⁹⁶ The bankrupt's failure to enter loans in the books or records of his business is not excused by the fact that the loans were made before the bankruptcy act was passed.²⁹⁷

c. Act by bankrupt.— It is also clear that the act complained of must have been committed by the bankrupt or by some one acting under his direction.²⁹⁸ If the bankrupt leaves the keeping of books of account to his wife or an agent he is responsible for a failure to keep proper books, if such failure was the natural result of the bankrupt's own acts.²⁹⁹ Where it appears that the bankmittee of the National Association of Referees in Bankruptcy published in March, 1900, as follows: "The necessity of proving intent to conceal condition, coupled with the still more difficult element of 'contemplation of bankruptcy,' which means bankruptcy per se, and not mere insolvency, has rendered this objection all but useless." "It would seem as if the purpose of the amendment was merely to relieve those objecting to the granting of a discharge from being required to prove that the intent with which a bankrupt was concealing his true financial condition was a fraudulent one that is, accompanied by, or in pursuance of, a design actually to defraud; now, it is sufficient if he has the intent to conceal his financial condition from his creditors, because it would be presumed that the existence of such intent was with the design of perpetuating a fraud." Matter of Hindin (D. Inability of bankrupt.—A bankrupt, who was unable to read or write, and who knew nothing about modern methods of bookkeeping and entrusted it to his daughter who had rupt's books were left by him in his office subject to the control of the trustee, he should not be charged with their concealment, in the absence of proof connecting him with the transaction.³⁰⁰ Books left in the bankrupt's safe, of which no one knew the combination but himself, and which remained intact until it came into the hands of the receiver, will be presumed to have been taken out by the bankrupt, and his discharge will be denied.³⁰¹ It has been held that a falsifying of books by the bankrupt's partner is not an objection to his discharge.³⁰² Although if he destroys or mutilates books of a partnership of which he is a member, his discharge should be refused.³⁰³

d. Intent to conceal financial condition.—The act complained of must have been done by the bankrupt with intent to conceal his financial condition.³⁰⁴ This means that the act must have been committed "knowingly."³⁰⁵ The omission of the word "fraudulent" by the amendment of 1903 relieves objecting creditors of the necessity of proving specific acts disclosing "fraudulent intent."³⁰⁶ Mere scienter and a purpose to conceal financial condition without the additional purpose of intent to defraud by such concealment are enough. Mere failure to keep books and records is not enough.³⁰⁷ But if the failure to keep such books is with an intent to conceal the bankrupt's financial condition, the offense is established,³⁰⁸ and an allegation in the specifications of objections to the effect that the bankrupt did with intent to conceal his financial condition fail to keep books of account or records from which such condition might be ascertained, is sufficient, although it did not specify what been in the habit of opening a new set of books each year and destroying the old set, without any guilty intent, should not be denied a discharge under section 14b (2) of the Bankruptcy Act. Matter of Rosenthal (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 30 Am. B. R. 693, 231 Fed. 449.

C., N. Y.), 29 Am. B. R. 73, 199 Fed. 356; Sherwood Shoe Co. v. Wix (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 38 Am. B. R. 670.

books of account the bankrupt should have kept.³⁰⁰ The act proclaims the presumption and intent of the law that honest merchants will keep account books which will disclose their true financial condition. If the evidence shows that a business was conducted without books of account so that nothing could be ascertained as to the bankrupt's purchases and sales, or the disposition of the proceeds of such sales, the intent to conceal the financial condition of the bankrupt will be presumed.³¹⁰ And so too the destruction of important books kept by a bankrupt in a business which would ordinarily require such books to be kept, the necessary result of which was to conceal his true financial condition, will be presumed to have been intentional.³¹¹ In either a failure to keep or a destruction of books of accounts, the bankrupt's intent to conceal his financial condition will be presumed if such was the natural and probable con-bankrupt firm purchased certain goods not of a kind in which he dealt, and no reasonable excuse for its failure to make any entry of such purchase in its books of account is assigned, the presumption is that it intended to conceal its financial condition, and the individual partners are not entitled to a discharge; In re Sabsevitz (D. C., N. Y.), 28 Am. B. R. 623, 197 Fed. 109.

Intent to conceal; what constitutes.—In the case of In re Marcus & Scherr (D. C., N. Y.), 27 Am. B. R. 164, affd. 30 Am. B. R. 176, the court said: "The intent to conceal one's financial condition is a separate fact from the keeping of the books. The reasonable consequences of keeping imperfect books may be a concealment of one's financial condition, if the occasion ever arises when they are scrutinized, and that fact would be enough to charge one with responsibility for that result, if the law forbade keeping imperfect books. The general intent of the criminal law is of this kind, it only means that the actor must be aware of his acts and then charges him with such consequences as would naturally follow them, regardless of whether he had these in mind or not. When, however, as is sometimes the case, the law attaches no responsibility to an act unless the actor does have in mind the specific consequences, it is necessary as an additional element to prove that state of mind. This is such a case. Moreover, since the intent to conceal is different from the intent to keep imperfect books, the objectors must go further than to show merely that the bankrupts intended to keep the kind of books they kept; for they must show also that they intended these books to conceal from somebody—which must be their creditors—their financial condition. That involves not only knowledge of how the books were kept, but some anticipation that at a future time they might be examined by creditors and would then fail to enlighten them upon all the facts." In re Weston (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 30 Am. B. R. 647, 206 Fed. 281, holding that failure of broker to record sales, etc., in books shows intent to conceal financial condition.

Where there was no evidence to show that bankrupts intended to conceal their financial condition by failing to keep sufficient books of account, and it appeared that they employed a thoroughly competent bookkeeper and left the books in his charge without themselves interfering with the manner in which he performed his duties, they should not be refused a discharge, even if their financial condition could not be accurately determined from the books. In re Marcus (C. Where deposits in a bank by a bankrupt, which had been more or less regular, entirely ceased shortly before his bankruptcy, with one exception, which was to pay a note for borrowed money, and there is no written evidence and no evidence at all, except the oral testimony of the bankrupt, as to the money taken in by him during said period, during which time he paid notes and obligations of his relatives and even after petition was filed continued to make preferential payments to such persons and to use money which he then had for gambling purposes, his application for discharge should be denied because of his failure to keep books of account. Matter of Steinburg (D. C., Mass.), 41 Am. B. R. 476, 249 Fed. 960.

^{311.} Matter of Acomb (Ref., D. C., N. Y.), 33 Am. B. R. 854; In re Hodge (D. C., N. Y.), 30 Am. B. R. 522, 206 Fed. 824, in which the court says: "It is quite true that a mere failure to keep books or records or the mere destruction of those kept is not sufficient to justify the court in refusing a discharge. There must be circumstances and conditions from which the inference ought to be drawn and necessarily should be drawn that such failure or destruction was 'with intent to conceal his financial condition.' Here no other inference can reasonably be drawn from the destruction of this stub book and these paid checks. It is evident that the now bankrupt, then bankrupt in fact, destroyed these records, stub books, and checks for the purpose of concealing from his creditors the disposition he had made of this money. There was no other reason for the act. If he paid it out to credisequences of his conduct.³¹³ But it has been suggested that a rule which raises a presumption of intent to conceal from a mere failure to keep books or to keep them properly, is too strict against the bankrupt, and that in every case the intent to conceal should affirmatively appear.³¹³ But no particular system of bookkeeping is required. The books kept may be as faulty and deficient as to in fact deceive creditors, but if they have not been so kept with the purpose to deceive the inhibition of the statute does not apply.³¹⁴ The failure of an illiterate bankrupt, who was engaged in a small business, to keep books of account will not raise the presumption that he intended to conceal his financial condition.³¹⁵ The failure of the superintendent of a mine to keep books of account, which are not required by his personal business, does not indicate a fraudulent intent for which he may be denied his discharge.³¹⁶

c. What constitutes failure, destruction or concealment.—The statute itself indicates what will constitute the offense. "Conceal" includes "secrete, ture, workman, or for material, he knew where the most of it went and he should have shown where it went and for what purpose.

"Under such circumstances, a mere general statement of the bankrupt is not sufficient to show absence of intent to do that which the act itself, under the circumstances shown, necessarily results in. A sane intelligent man is presumed to intend the natural, probable and well-known consequences of his own willful acts."

313. Presumption against bankrupt.—It is not necessary for a creditor to prove the failure of the bankrupt to keep books of account where such books were necessary and proper. When satisfactory evidence of such fact is produced, the law determines the intent to have existed because the bankrupt must be presumed to have intended to conceal his financial conditions if such were the natural and probable consequences of his failure to keep books. Matter of Chase (D. C., Pa.), 37 Am. B. R. 734; Matter of Amster (D. C., Ohio), 41 Am. B. R. 249, 249 Fed. 237.

Inference of intent.—Where it is established that a bankrupt failed to keep proper books of account, the court may infer an "intent to conceal his financial condition" within the meaning of section 14b (3) of the bankruptcy act. It is not necessary to prove that the bankrupt's intent was fraudulent or that his acts were done in contemplation of bankruptcy. Matter of Linker (D. C., N. Y.), 33 Am. B. R. 708, 223 Fed. 173.

Failure to keep books.—A proprietor of a large department store who for two months after a competent bookkeeper had left his employ, failed to have the books kept so that his financial condition could be ascertained, is chargeable with intending the natural and probable consequences of his acts and omissions so as to bar a discharge. Matter of Janavits (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 108, 233 Fed. 676, affg. 33 Am. B. R. 601.

If, in the absence of evidence, to overcome the presumption that a bankrupt intended the natural and probable consequences of his acts and omissions, the court, from all the facts and circumstances, is of the opinion that the bankrupt's failure to keep books and records was not with intent to conceal his financial condition, a discharge should not be refused. Matter of Arnold (D. C., N. J.), 35 Am. B. R. 740, 228 Fed. 75. Compare Sheinberg & Weisberg v. Hoffman (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 34, 230 Fed. 243.

314. Matter of Hindin (D. C., Cal.), 34 Am. B. R. 114, 218 Fed. 638. Citing in re Marcus & Schorr (D. C., N. Y.), 37 Am. B. R. 164, 193 Fed. 743; in re Brockman (D. C., Ky.), 31 Am. B. R. 261, 188 Fed. 1015; in re Brown (D. C., N. Y.), 35 Am. B. R. 72, 260 Fed. 396; Sherwood Shoe Co. v. Wix (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 670, 240 Fed. 622. See cases cited in note 240, supra.

Presumption not inevitable.—Although there are cases where the failure to keep any systematic books or records will, of itself, require the conclusion that it was done with the intent to conceal, such conclusion is by no means inevitable. The inference is one of fact to be drawn from the proofs in a particular case. Devorkin v. The Security Bank, etc., Co. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 728, 243 Fed. 171; Thompson v. Lamb (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 45 Am. B. R. 316, 260 Fed. 61.

Where from certain acts and omissions, two inferences may be drawn, the one pointing to a guilty or bad intent and the other perfectly consistent with honesty and absence of a bad purpose, it is the duty of the court to find in favor of honesty and absence of intent; and where the evidence upon objections to a bankrupt's discharge, on the ground that he failed to keep books of account with intent to conceal his financial condition, will justify a finding either way, the appellate court will not interfere with a finding in favor of the bankrupt made by the referee who had the bankrupt before him, heard him testify and noted his manner. Small business transaction.—Transactions of a building contractor, conducting a small business for a few months examined and held that his failure to keep books or records was not with intent to conceal his financial condition, and that a discharge should not be denied him. Matter of Arnold (D. R. 316, 263 Fed. 61.

316a. Business not requiring accounts.—Where the bankrupt was engaged in the business of promoting mines, which did not require any elaborate accounts, it appearing that he had no office or fixed place of residence where books might be kept, that he had no employees, and that each one of his mining deals was separate and complete in itself, his practice to rely entirely upon pocket memoranda, noting upon these memoranda the deposits and withdrawals from his bank account, and having his bank book balanced each month, was sufficient to disclose substantially the state of his financial affairs and would not warrant a finding that the failure to keep more complete records arose from any intention upon his part to conceal his financial falsify and mutilate.”³¹⁵ The phrasing here is even broader than was that of the law of 1867. Any act or series of acts with relation to business records which may reasonably be held to be within the meaning of “destruction,” “concealment,” “secreting,” “falsifying,” “mutilation,” or “failure to keep” will be within the interdiction of the law. Where a man of business experience and intelligence conducting a business ordinarily requiring books to be kept, fails to keep them, it will be presumed that he intended to conceal his financial condition.³¹⁷ It is not enough for the bankrupt to keep an account of money received, but he must also have an account showing the disposition of his receipts and the absence of entries to that effect is a material omission in keeping books.^{317a} No particular form or method of keeping books is required; it will be sufficient if the accounts are kept in such a way as to show the bankrupt’s financial condition.³¹⁸ The test is this: If a competent accountant can from an examination of the books produced and in the possession of the trustee determine the true condition of the debtor they are sufficient to justify granting him a discharge.³¹⁹ But where a bankrupt, engaged in mercantile business, and carrying a large stock, fails to keep books of account from which a creditor or expert accountant might discover his financial condition and the amount of money which it is conceded he had borrowed, a discharge should be denied.³²⁰ An omission to make entries of payments to or loans from relatives should be explained.³²¹ A claim of mere negligence in bookkeeping will be rejected.³²² A failure to satisfactorily explain what has become of books of accounts kept by the bankrupt during all the time that he was engaged in condition. In re Howard (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 841, 180 Fed. 399; In re McCrea (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 412, 161 Fed. 248.

Failure to keep books.—Where a bankrupt has for some years intermingled his property with that of his wife, having transferred property to her in a manner calculated to stamp the transaction with fraud, and fails, even when he knew or should have known that he was a bankrupt, to keep books of account or any records from which the state of his business relations with his wife might be determined or his financial condition ascertained, sufficient cause exists for the denial of a discharge in bankruptcy. In re Graves (D. C., Pa.), 26 Am. B. R. 633, 189 Fed. 847.

Although the mere failure of a bankrupt to keep ordinary books of account for a cash sales business will not in and of itself be a bar to his discharge, yet this, taken in connection with his failure to make any deposits during the period prior to his bankruptcy, and his payment during this time of money due to relatives, and his utter failure to keep track of money received, and his disposal thereof, is sufficient to prevent his discharge. Insufficient books for mercantile business.—Where it appears that a bankrupt began business in a large commercial center three years prior to his adjudication; that he owes about $7,500; that his trustees found on hand goods inventoried at $4,000, and that the bankrupt made deposits and drew checks but only presented to the trustee on demand a check book and pass book from which it was impossible to determine the actual condition of the estate, and the only explanation of his failure is the loss of several hundred dollars in gambling, his discharge should be refused upon the ground that he failed to keep books “with intent to conceal his financial condition.” Matter of Shrimmer (D. C., N. Car.), 36 Am. B. R. 404, 228 Fed. 794.

Absence of books.—Where it appears that a partnership kept no books at all, that the only record they had for reference was the register record of cash receipts, and the invoices showing the purchases were simply filed for reference, but during the course of the business no record was made of these bills, so that there were absolutely no books by which the condition of the firm could be ascertained or kept, the members should be denied a discharge. business will warrant a denial of his discharge.³²³ A failure to show by the books a large shrinkage of assets during a short period of time may prevent a discharge.³²⁴ Where a person keeps books in such a condition as to be suspicious on their face, a discharge should be refused,³²⁵ as where a partnership purchases goods not of a kind in which it dealt, and failed to make entries of such purchases in its books, there is a presumption of an intent to conceal its financial condition.³²⁶ If the method used is appropriate to the business conducted and indicates the character of the accounts and the identity of persons to whom they refer it will suffice.³²⁷ And where a business of sufficient magnitude to require books to be kept, and the only books found were check books, showing deposits and payments from a bank, some of them fictitious, there is evidence of a fraudulent intent to conceal the bankrupt's financial condition, justifying a denial of a discharge.³²⁸ The destruction of vouchers or other business papers is as fatal as would be the destruction of books.³²⁹ All books and records which are material to a proper understanding of the bankrupt's financial condition are within the protection of the act.³³⁰ The placing of certain books in the cellar as a mere incident of the work of closing out his business has been held

Failure to explain non-production of books of account.—Where bankrupt, who had kept books of account during all the time that he was engaged in business, is requested upon his examination before the referee to produce such books and promises to do so at a subsequent hearing, but, after several adjournments at his request, at a hearing six months later testifies that his wife had kept the books and that they cannot be found, he will be deemed to have concealed or destroyed his books of account with intent to conceal his true financial condition, so as to warrant a denial of his discharge in bankruptcy. In re Wiedman (D. not to prevent the bankrupt's discharge.³³¹ Where the business of a bankrupt is transacted through a corporation, as his agent, the failure of the corporation to keep books showing the transactions committed to such corporation, and of the bankrupt to record such transactions, warrants a denial of the bankrupt's discharge.³³² Where a wife acted as her husband's agent and was in complete control of his business with his consent, he is liable for her failure to keep satisfactory books, the failure to keep proper books being not a crime but merely civil misconduct.³³³ Other cases where this objection has been urged against a discharge will be found in the foot-note.³³⁴ The practitioner is, however, warned against those cases which turn on the existence of a "contemplation of bankruptcy" or a "fraudulent" intent to conceal financial condition. These elements, as has been seen, are no longer the law.

f. Burden of proof.—In this as in other grounds of objection to a discharge the burden is on the objecting creditor, and the act must be shown by a clear preponderance of evidence;³³⁵ but not, it is thought, with the same degree of certainty as in the objections already discussed. It will not be presumed that proper books of account were not kept because books are not found.³³⁶

a. In general.—It is provided in subdivision 3 of subsection a of this section as amended by the amendatory act of 1910 that a bankrupt's discharge may be refused if he has "obtained money or property on credit upon a materially false statement in writing made by him to any person or his representative for the purpose of obtaining credit from such person." This new objection to a discharge was added by the amendment of 1903, and will prove the most valuable only to careful traders.³³⁷ The amendment of 1910 inserted the words "money or," "by him," "or his representative" and "credit from such person."

b. Elements of proof; pleading.—The creditor alleging this objection must prove that the bankrupt (1) obtained money or property on credit, that he did so on (2) a statement of his financial condition relied on by the creditor, that such statement was (3) in writing, that it was (4) materially false, and (5) that it was so made to the creditor or his representative (6) for the purpose of obtaining credit from such creditor. To these should be added the usual elements, that the obtaining of property must have been (7) by the bankrupt or by some one duly authorized by him.³³⁸ The effect of this new objection will be that every tradesman, whose credit is not unquestioned, will be asked to give a mercantile statement as a condition precedent to dealing. The specifications of objections should set out the false representation, and the name of the person alleged to have been defrauded.³³⁹ It has been held that this objection to a discharge may be pleaded by any creditor.³⁴⁰

c. Meaning and effect of the clause.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Nothing like this clause appears in any previous bankruptcy law.³⁴¹ Even the English law has no equivalent, though there, one who at the time of contracting a debt had not a reasonable expectation of paying it, is denied a discharge.³⁴² This ground for denying a discharge was evidently leveled particularly at the practice of making false statements of one's financial condition by a borrower or buyer for the purpose of obtaining from the person to whom such false statement is made, the articles or money derived "on credit."³⁴³ This provision as amended in 1910 would seem to apply to any false statement which has to do with the extension of credit affecting the bankruptcy proceeding. It is the falsity of the statement which controls. If false when made the creditor may interpose it as a bar to the debtor's discharge, and it is immaterial that the indebtedness not included was released prior to bankruptcy, or was omitted in the belief that the persons to whom he was indebted would not press him for payment.³⁴⁴ In effect, Burden of proof.—While the burden of proof is upon the objecting creditor to establish the cause which he claims bars a discharge, yet, when such creditor shows that a materially false statement was known to be untrue when it was made, the burden of proof shifts to the bankrupt to show that it was not made with intent to deceive. In the Matter of Pincker (Ref., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 494, the referee said: "It does not appear that the objecting creditor herein was a subscriber to the mercantile agency to which the bankrupt made his statement, nor sold goods upon the strength thereof, yet under section 14-b (3) as it existed prior to the last amendment, such objection to discharge may be urged by any creditor and is not confined to the person defrauded." Matter of Kretz (D. 343. Purpose of statement.—The false statement in writing which is enough to deny a discharge implies a statement knowingly false, or made recklessly, without an honest belief in its truth, and with a purpose to mislead or deceive, and thereby obtain from the person to whom it is made property upon a credit. Firestone v. Harvey (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 468, 174 Fed. 574.

Although a false statement in order to bar a discharge must have been made for the purpose of obtaining money or credits, it is not necessary that the sole purpose of the statement should have been to obtain money or credits. If that be one purpose, and the statement be knowingly false, it is sufficient to bar a discharge. Matter of Shea (D. C., Mass.), 40 Am. B. R. 175, 245 Fed. 363.

344. Josephs v. Powell & Campbell (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 32 Am. B. R. 222, 213 Fed. 627, revg. In re Josephs (D. C., N. Y.), 30 Am. B. R. 598, 205 Fed. 548, holding that where bankrupt at the time of making a statement in writing for the purpose of obtaining credit owed certain relatives for money loaned, and their debts were not scheduled nor proven in the bankruptcy proceedings, but bankrupt asserted that such loans were made with the understanding that they were not to be paid back if he was unable to do so and were not to interfere with the claims of his other creditors, his discharge will not be refused, provided he obtain releases from such loans or consents that they be scheduled sua pro tunc.

It is the act of issuing the false statement, with fraudulent intent, for the purpose of inducing credit, which constitutes the objection to a discharge. In re Carton & Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 17 Am. B. R. 343, 148 Fed. 63.

Omission of loans to friends.—A bankrupt will be denied a discharge where, in a statement of his financial condition, sent out over his signature, there was no mention of loans made by relatives and friends, although the aggregate amount of said loans would not have materially curtailed the bankrupt's line

the objection means that, where a creditor has been defrauded by the purchaser's material misstatements as to his financial condition given for the purpose of obtaining credit, the creditor has the option of interposing a bar to a discharge affecting all debts, or of permitting the discharge to be granted, and then asserting his claim on after-acquired property, on the ground that his claim is not affected by the discharge.^{344a}

(2) OBTAINING MONEY OR PROPERTY ON CREDIT.—The phrase "obtaining property on credit," as used in the act prior to the amendment of 1910, included a borrowing of money on time. Thus, a bankrupt, who obtained a loan of money from a bank on the faith of a materially false statement in writing, will be denied a discharge,³⁴⁵ even though made prior to the four months' period, if the property was obtained within that time.³⁴⁶ The amendment of 1910 inserted the word "money," and removed any doubt which may have theretofore existed. If the bankrupt obtained pecuniary profit or benefit as a result of the credit which he received by making the false statement, it will constitute a bar to a discharge,^{346a} although made by him in respect to the property of another debtor.³⁴⁷ The quantity or value of the money or property obtained on credit upon a materially false statement in writing is not material. The discharge must be denied if money or property in any amount, not utterly trivial, is thus obtained.^{347a} Credit is obtained within the meaning of the act although the bankrupt gave his promissory note, secured by collateral, as part of the purchase price.³⁴⁸ False statements filed by private bankers with the State Comptroller and the Superintendent of Banks are not grounds for refusing a discharge.^{348a} The giving of a chattel mortgage upon property which the debtor did not own, as security for a loan, does not come within this subsection.³⁴⁹ It has been held that a statement made in an application for an indemnity bond does not fall within the clause, as such a bond is not property,³⁴⁹ but this conclusion may well be doubted because of the evident fact that the statements contained in the application lead to the extension of credit by the surety company to the principal, and if such statements are false, the principal should not be released from his liability by a discharge.³⁵⁰ It is not essential that the bank-

Omission of partnership indebtedness from financial statement.—Where upon the death of one member of a partnership it was agreed among the survivors that on the books of the firm the capital of the deceased should be credited to his estate as a liability due to it, and this indebtedness, so carried on the books, was omitted by the partnership from successive annual statements of its financial condition furnished to banks as a basis for accommodations, the omission of such indebtedness is a bar to the discharge of the partner using the same, although the bankrupts believed that the debt would not be enforced so as to embarrass them. Matter of Waite (D. C., Md.), 35 Am. B. R. 189, 223 Fed. 853.

False statement to secure credit.—Where a bankrupt secured a loan on a written application signed by him which contained a false statement of his present indebtedness, and a creditor took his note therefor, no part of which has been paid, an objection to his discharge based on said ground should be sustained, although said discharge would not operate to relieve the bankrupt from liability on the debt. Matter of Armstrong (D. C., Cal.), 40 Am. B. R. 770, 248 Fed. 202.

^{345.} In re Pfaffinger (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 19 Am. B. R. 809, 154 Fed. 523, revg. 19 Am. B. R. 471; In re Darevski (D. C., Pa.), 22 Am. B. R. 571, 171 Fed. 288; Cleland v. Iowa Loan &

Property has been held to include anything of value, hence money is property within the meaning of the phrase obtaining property on credit. Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co. v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 182 U. S. 438, 5 Am. B. R. 814, 45 L. Ed. 1171.

False statement inducing credit at bank.—A bank which had received a false financial statement from a partnership as a basis for accommodations, whenever a note of the firm fell due, discounted a new note for less than the face of the old, so that when a voluntary petition in bankruptcy was filed by the firm the sum due the bank was considerably less than when the false statement was received. The discount of the new notes was passed to the credit of the bankrupts and they thereafter drew a check for the payment of the old note, so that, in form, there was the payment of an old loan, and the contracting of a new. Held, that the false statement is within the condemnation of section 14b(3) of the bankruptcy act, and the form of the transaction is within its letter and constitutes a bar to a discharge. Matter of Waite (D. C., Md.), 35 Am. B. R. 189, 223 Fed. 853. Followed in Matter of Samet (D. C., Md.), 39 Am. B. R. 632, 243 Fed. 203, which was affirmed in 40 Am. B. R. 450, 247 Fed. 690.

(3) IN WRITING.—Of this term the framers of the amendatory act of 1903 have said: "This objection, as is proper, will be of no avail when a commercial report is obtained in the haphazard fashion of a hasty interview. The statement must be in writing, which, of course, implies the signature of the person to be charged thereby." How far a statement made by an employee will avail depends, of course, on the authority given him by his employer and the latter's acquiescence. Where alleged false statements do not appear by the specifications of objection to have been made in writing they are not within the provisions of this section and the discharge should not be refused.³⁵²

(4) A STATEMENT OF FINANCIAL CONDITION.—A mere letter, if otherwise within the clause, would seem enough. Details are unnecessary, but the statement ought at least to inform the creditor of the net worth of the debtor, or perhaps of the total of his assets and liabilities.^{352a} In a majority of cases, these statements will be made on blanks calling for items, and so phrased as to avoid some of the legal pitfalls noted later. A bankrupt, who issues a statement of his financial condition under his signature and does not mention loans made to him by relatives and friends, will be denied a discharge, although the aggregate amount of said loans would not have materially curtailed his credit.³⁵³ An omission to fill out a blank furnished by the creditor does not constitute a "material statement;" there must be a direct statement, either negative or positive, which is false, to justify the denial of a bankrupt's discharge.³⁵⁴ It has been held that the giving of a check when the drawer has neither money or credit at the bank, is a "false statement" within the meaning of the act,^{354a} but the contrary view has also been taken.^{354b}

(5) INTENT TO DECEIVE OR DEFRAUD.—It has been held that an intent to defraud is essential; the word "false" means more than "erroneous" or "untrue," and imports an intention to deceive, and a materially false statement in writing must have been knowingly or intentionally untrue to bar a discharge.³⁵⁵ Intention to deceive is always material as an element of proof, and, by the weight of authority, it is essential to prove such an intent.³⁵⁶ It must be shown that the bankrupt's alleged false statement in writing was either knowingly false or made so recklessly as to warrant a finding that he acted fraudulently.³⁵⁷ If a debtor was misled into signing the statement by the creditor's agent, who filled it out and gave it to the debtor to sign, leaving certain blanks unfilled, the element of intention is lacking and the debtor's

Intent to deceive.—The word "false" means more than merely erroneous or untrue, but is used in its primary legal sense as importing an intention to deceive; and a statement in writing for the purpose of obtaining credit, in order to constitute a bar to a discharge, must have been knowingly and intentionally untrue. In re Arenson (D. C., N. J.), 28 Am. B. R. 113, 196 Fed. 609.

The word "false," within the meaning of this clause must be construed to mean false with the knowledge of the party making the statement and further with the view of deceiving or misleading. Matter of Josephson (D. C., Ore.), 36 Am. B. R. 505, 229 Fed. 272.

Materially false statement.—A statement in writing to procure credit in order to bar a discharge must be a materially false statement, and the words mean more than simply erroneous or untrue, and import an intention to deceive. A bankrupt will be deemed to intend what he knowingly does. Matter of Smith (D. C., N. Y.), 37 Am. B. R. 230, 232 Fed. 248.

Intentionally untrue.—To constitute a bar to a bankrupt's discharge under section 14-b (3) for obtaining property on credit "upon a materially false statement in writing" for the purpose of obtaining such property on credit, the written statement made by the bankrupt should be knowingly and intentionally untrue, and it is not sufficient that the statement be materially untrue. Peck v. Lowenbein (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 133, 178 Fed. 178.

In re Shaffer (D. C., W. Va.), 22 Am. B. R. 147, 169 Fed. 724, Judge Dayton says: "Creditor must rely upon it (the statement) when parting with his property, and if he did so rely upon it, and it was materially false in fact, it is sufficient to defeat a discharge. If the creditor did not rely on it, or if the debtor did not make the statement for obtaining the property on credit, it will not bar a discharge, no matter how false the statement may be." In the case of Schaffer v. Koblegard Co. (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 898, 183 Fed. 71 (affirming the above case), it was held that to constitute a bar it must appear that the statement made by the bankrupt was "knowingly and intentionally untrue."

Where bankrupts had made repeated false statements in writing to creditors for the purpose of obtaining goods on credit and one statement in particular was made under such circumstances as to preclude any doubt that it was wilfully and knowingly so made, bankrupts' discharge should be denied. In re Taff v. Conyers (D. C., Ga.), 25 Am. B. R. 600, 183 Fed. 899.

Presumption of intent to deceive.—Where bankrupt who was active in the firm's business, knew that it had the previous year sustained great losses, and that inquiries were being made to the commercial agencies concerning the firm, his signature on the statement and his delivery thereof, together with his activity in the business and his participation in the advantages obtained by the deception, raise a presumption of an evil intention; and his mere assertion that he did not know the statement was false will not excuse him. In re Simon (D. C., N. Y.), 29 Am. B. R. 806, 201 Fed. 1004.

Fraudulent intent must be shown.—A statement in writing which overstated a bankrupt's assets and understated his liabilities to an extent sufficient to be material, is insufficient of itself to bar his discharge, but fraudulent intent on the bankrupt's part must be shown; and unless credit is shown to have been actually obtained by means of the untrue statement made with such fraudulent intent, no ground for refusal to grant a discharge is established. In re O'Callaghan (D. C., Mass.), 29 Am. B. R. 304, 199 Fed. 662.

357. Thus, where a bankrupt in preparing a statement in writing of his financial condition for the purpose of obtaining property on credit, in good faith, omitted an existing liability, he discharge is not barred.³⁵⁸ So also if it appear that the statement was signed by the president of a corporation acting under the advice of his financial adviser, believing that the facts stated were true, he is not guilty of an intent to deceive.³⁵⁹ Where a statement contains an error made in good faith by the bankrupt's bookkeeper it is not false within the meaning of the act.³⁶⁰ These principles lead to the conclusion that if the bankrupt had no knowledge of the alleged false statement, or if the facts stated therein were honestly thought by him to be true it does not constitute a bar.³⁶¹

(6) MATERIALITY OF FALSE STATEMENT.—The statement also must be material to the transaction,³⁶² it must have been, if not the moving cause of the sale on credit, a contributing cause, i. e., the seller must to an extent at least have relied on it.³⁶³ The statement must have been made within a reasonable time prior to the extension of credit; for instance where it contains will not be denied a discharge under § 14-b (3). In re Collins (D. C., Ark.), 19 Am. B. R. 688, 157 Fed. 120. There must be knowledge of the bankrupt as to the falsity of the statement. Hamlin v. Radford Grocery Co. (Tex. Civ. App.), 36 Am. B. R. 373, 182 S. W. 716.

But see In re Arenson (D. C., N. J.), 28 Am. B. R. 113, 195 Fed. 609, holding that the fact that a financial statement made by the bankrupt for the purpose of obtaining credit was obtained on a representation that it was a mere matter of form, does not absolve him from the consequences of making a statement which he knows to be absolutely untrue.

Belief that statement was true.—Where a bankrupt, believing himself in a sound financial condition, away from his books, with his sick wife away from home and in a hurry to get back, made a statement as a general estimate rather than an itemized statement of his exact financial condition, he should not be denied a discharge, because he omitted certain of his debts. *Franklin v. lain (D. C., Pa.), 15 Am. B. R. 534, 141 Fed. 463. See Am. Bankr. Dig., §§ 1020, 1022.

Credit induced by statement.—Where a creditor claims goods as against a trustee in bankruptcy on the ground that the bankrupt obtained such goods by false representations, it is not necessary that the false representations should be the sole and exclusive consideration for the credit, but only that they were a material consideration, without which in all probability the credit would not have been given. In re Ganey (D. C., N. Y.), 4 Am. B. R. 576, 103 Fed. 930. In the case of In re O'Callaghan (D. C., Mass.), 29 Am. B. R. 304, 199 Fed. 662, it was held that where the evidence tended to show that credit was extended with knowledge that the bankrupt was in difficulties and with intent to advance only so much as would postpone immediate collapse before an investigation, which would be necessary to justify further credit in any large amount, could be had, an objection to a discharge because of a false statement will not be sustained.

The statement must have been materially false, have been made with intent to deceive and the creditor must have relied upon it when extending credit. In re Mintzer (D. C., N. Y.), 28 Am. B. R. 743, 197 Fed. 648.

Statement relied on; evidence.—Where bankrupt's letter in January ordering goods was accepted a few days after its receipt by the objecting creditor, it cannot be said that in extending credit for goods so ordered, reliance was placed upon a copy of a financial statement furnished the objector by a commercial agency sometime in April following such date. In re Main (D. C., Iowa), 30 Am. B. R. 547, 205 Fed. 421; In re McLellan (D. C., N. Y.), 30 Am. B. R. 325, 204 Fed. 482; Matter of Kean (D. C., N. Y.), 38 Am. B. R. 344, 101 Atl. 968; Matter of Nouman (D. C., Mont.), 40 Am. B. R. 427, 251 Fed. 667.

Statement as to money in bank.—A bankrupt makes a willfully false statement when he represents and states in writing, for the purpose of obtaining credit and property, that he has money in bank, when he has drawn and no reference as to its continuing character it will not be construed as binding the debtor in a transaction eighteen months after its date.³⁶⁴ It is not sufficient to avoid the consequences of a financial statement knowingly false that the amount of credit obtained was small, or that the amount owing at the time of bankruptcy was less than when the statement was made; the main question pertains to the falsity of the statement which induced the credit.³⁶⁵ A fair test would seem to be: was the statement so "materially false" as to warrant a suit for the rescission of the sale? Although it has been held sufficient if the goods were ordered but not actually delivered to the bankrupt.³⁶⁶ Numerous decisions in the State courts determining what are actionable false representations may be consulted with profit.

(7) FOR THE PURPOSE OF OBTAINING CREDIT FROM THE CREDITOR.—This element will presumably always exist where a sale results from the statement. Although prior to the amendment of 1910, omitting the word "such," the false statement had to be made with the intent of obtaining such credit as it was planned at the time to afford a basis for; since such amendment the statute would seem to apply to any false statement which has to do with the extension of credit affecting the bankruptcy proceedings.³⁶⁷ This change in the statute should be noted, where cases involving false statements made prior to said amendment are in question.

(8) STATEMENTS MADE TO MERCANTILE AGENCIES FOR THE PURPOSE OF OBTAINING CREDIT.—The statute provides that the false statement be "made to any person or his representative for the purpose of obtaining credit from such person."³⁶⁸ The words "such person" refer to the previous words "any person," and the statement is "made to such person" whenever it is made by the bankrupt himself or his duly authorized agent; and it is none the less "made," although the statement itself is not delivered when its contents are correctly communicated by the agent.³⁶⁹ The language of the clause does not necessarily import that the statement shall have been made for the purpose of inducing any particular person to rely upon it.³⁷⁰ Thus, a materially false statement in writing, made to a mercantile agency as a basis of credit and relied upon by customers of such agency, is equivalent to a statement made directly to the persons extending credit.³⁷¹ A false statement made to a mer-

The court said: "We think that intention was to deprive any bankrupt of the benefit of a discharge who has obtained property from any person by means of a written statement false in material matters; and within the fair meaning of the clause and statement is made to such person if it was given to an agent for the purpose of using it in obtaining property for the bankrupt, and if its contents were communicated by the agent to such person."

mercantile agency, or an officer thereof, is regarded as having been made to such agency as the representative of the debtor, which becomes his agent for the purpose of obtaining credit.³⁷² It was held, however, prior to the amendment of 1910, that the ordinary statements of financial condition, made to mercantile agencies for general circulation, are not "materially false statements" within the meaning of the statute, but that statements in the form of special reports may be.³⁷³ And in some recent cases it has been held that general statements to mercantile agencies, not specifically asked for by prospective creditors, are not included and a discharge should not be refused because of a false statement furnished to the agent of a mercantile agency so that it might fix the rating.

17 Am. B. R. 343, 148 Fed. 63, 67, manifestly concurs in this view, for he says: "If, however, such a report as is here shown, be obtained from a merchant by a commercial agency at the request, disclosed or undisclosed, of one or more of the agency's customers, it seems to me incredible that the merchant furnishing such report can be supposed to have given it for any other purpose than of enlightening those persons who habitually deal with him on credit as to his true financial condition. The custom of trade is so well known that when an agency applies to a merchant for a specially signed report of his condition, he must know that such report is for the special purpose of enabling those who usually vend him goods to decide upon his financial responsibility."

Where a bankrupt made a materially false statement in writing to a mercantile agency which recited that it was designed as a basis for credit, and later obtained property on credit from a customer of such mercantile agency, who relied on such statement in extending such credit, it was equivalent to a statement made directly to the person from whom the property was received and debarred the bankrupt from the right to a discharge. In re Augspurger (D. C., Ohio), 25 Am. B. R. 83, 181 Fed. 74.

In re Pincus (D. C., N. Y.), 17 Am. B. R. 331, 147 Fed. 21, it was in substance ruled that a written financial statement made by a party to a commercial agency, which shows on its face that it was made as a basis for credit with the associate members of such company, and which is communicated by such agency to members who give credit on the faith of it, is equivalent to one made directly to them, and if materially false, will debar the debtor from the right to a discharge in bankruptcy.

A statement in writing by a bankrupt to a mercantile agency, though false, will not bar his discharge unless the bankrupt referred the prospective creditor to the said statement as being a true statement of his financial condition, made for the purpose of obtaining credit. Matter of Foster (Ref., Miss.), 24 Am. B. R. 368.

When a person makes a statement to a mercantile agency, he makes it for the purpose of having the statement transmitted by the mercantile agency to its subscribers who propose to do business with him, and that as to any person to whom his statement is thus transmitted by the mercantile agency and who becomes a creditor upon the faith of it, the statement has precisely the same effect as though it had been made in person by the debtor to the creditor and relied upon by the creditor. In re Russell & Birkett (Ref., N. Y.), 5 Am. B. R. 608.

In order to make a statement substantially true for the purpose of a mercantile agency, a party need not report his contingent liabilities where there is no fraudulent suppression of the fact. If the subscriber to the mercantile agency desires information in regard to such liabilities he should call for a "special report." So held in a case where a subscriber did not report a mortgage securing certain bonds which were supposed to be entirely good. In re Russell & Birkett (Ref., N. Y.), 5 Am. B. R. 608.

Statement made to mercantile agency "in strict confidence."—Where bankrupt furnished to a mercantile agency, upon request, a written statement of his financial condition "in strict confidence for commercial use only," the fact that the statement was materially false and was relied upon by a creditor in making sales to bankrupt more than a year later, is insufficient to bar a discharge, under § 14-b(3) of the bankruptcy act as it stood before the amendment of 1910, in the absence of proof that such statement was made to the mercantile agency as the agent either of the bankrupt or the objecting creditor. Novick v. Reed & Co. (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 27 Am. B. R. 521, 192 Fed. 20.

Necessity that agency be representative of creditor.—False representations to a mercantile agency are not a bar to a discharge, unless it appear that the agency was, in some sense, the representative of a creditor from whom money or property was obtained, or that the representations made to them were, in some way, communicated to or relied upon by the creditor. in its books and not asked for by any particular customer.³⁷⁴ While within reasonable limits statements made to a mercantile agency are to be regarded as continuing, no invariable rule can be laid down as to the length of time during which the vendor may rely upon the statements made to such agency; each case depends upon its own facts and what is reasonable for a prudent and intelligent business man to do.³⁷⁵

(9) BY THE BANKRUPT.—This follows from the nature of the transactions here, in a sense, interdicted.³⁷⁶ A false statement by one partner, made in the course of the partnership business, will not be a bar to the discharge of a partner who did not participate therein and had no knowledge thereof,³⁷⁷ but will be a bar to the discharge of the partnership.³⁷⁸

375. Continuing statements.—In re Russell & Birkett (Ref., N. Y.), 5 Am. B. R. 608.

Where a person, about a year prior to his adjudication, as an involuntary bankrupt, without solicitation, knowingly made a false and misleading statement to a mercantile agency, to obviate unfavorable reports, with regard to his financial standing, and within ten days attempted to correct said statement by another, which, while not so bad, was nearly so, and referred to it for the purpose of obtaining goods on credit, he will be denied his discharge; such statement, both in its original as well as its corrected form, was a continuing one, and unless recalled was for a reasonable time to be relied upon as stating the truth. In re Kyte (D. C., Pa.), 23 Am. B. R. 414, 174 Fed. 867. Statement made two years prior to extension of credit not sufficient, Matter of Kean (D. C., N. Y.), 38 Am. B. R. 625, 237 Fed. 652.

In re Terens (D. C., Wis.), 22 Am. B. R. 897, 173 Fed. 939, Judge Quarles says: "It is matter of common knowledge that such statements are frequently intended as a continuing representation for indefinite periods of time. I am of opinion that the date of the statement is immaterial, if property has in fact been obtained upon the strength of it within the four-months period, as is the case here. We are not called upon to decide whether under any circumstances the four-months limitation can be read into the third subdivision of section 14-b, and merely hold that, where goods have been furnished and credit has been extended on the faith of such statement within four months of the bankruptcy, the date of the property statement should be held immaterial."

About a year and six months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, bankrupt made a materially false statement in writing for the purpose of obtaining a large bill of goods on credit, which goods were paid for in full. The statement contained a provision that it was to be binding for purchases "now or hereafter made, unless changed by written authority from the undersigned." Subsequently and between six and nine months prior to the filing of the petition, other goods were purchased on credit from the same creditor, which were never paid for. Upon objection to the bankrupt's discharge on the ground that these goods had been obtained on credit by reason of such statement, held, that this was not an obtaining of property on a false statement in writing within the contemplation of section 14-b (3) of the bankruptcy act. R. 597, 200 Fed. 546, in which case a similar statement was under consideration, and the court held that the fact that the first purchase of goods obtained thereunder had been paid for, did not preclude such creditors from urging the falsity of the statement as a bar to the firm's discharge in bankruptcy, it appearing that bankrupt's account was a running account, covering purchases made from time to time for little over one year, on which the credits made at no time left the account fully paid up, and that the statement was relied upon by the creditors in the subsequent credits, as well as the first. IX. FRAUDULENT TRANSFER.

a. In general.—If a bankrupt at any time within the four months' period has "transferred, removed, destroyed or concealed, or permitted to be removed, destroyed or concealed, any of his property with intent to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors," his discharge should be refused. Under the law of 1867, the making of both a fraudulent preference and a fraudulent transfer were objections to discharge. The original draft of the amendatory bill of 1903 was the same.³⁷⁹ Under the definition of transfer,³⁸⁰ it is difficult to conceive of a preference that does not amount to a transfer, and, if fraudulent, either transaction will come within the present clause. The words of subdivision 4 are doubtless a definition or explanation of the words "fraudulent transfer" there used. Hinder, delay or defraud creditors applies to the whole body of the bankrupt's creditors, and not a conversion of property belonging to a single creditor.³⁸¹

b. Elements of proof.—The creditor alleging this objection must show, in substance, the commission of the first act of bankruptcy. The variances between the phrasing here and that of § 3-a (1) are immaterial. "Destroyed" occurs here only, but it adds nothing, as "removed" may include it and "concealed"³⁸² surely does. The words of limitation refer to the four months' bankruptcy period, discussed under section three, ante. How far an adjudication on the first act of bankruptcy will be res adjudicata on an objection to a discharge need not be considered; a court which finds the first will not easily be persuaded to refuse to find the second. Nor is any discussion as to the technical meaning of the words important. Any transfer, destruction, or concealment of property within the inhibition of the statute of frauds, if within the four months' period, will, if seasonably pleaded and duly proven, bar a discharge.^{382a} If the transfer be made within the limited period it will be a bar although not knowingly and fraudulently made.³⁸³ If made prior to the four

Fraud in order to bar a bankrupt's discharge must be a fraud against the estate. Hence, the mere fact that a bankrupt disposed of property on which a creditor had a lien is not a bar to a discharge, where it appears that if the security had remained it would have been insufficient to pay the creditor's claim. Matter of Huber (Ref., D. C., N. D.), 34 Am. B. R. 100.

(C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 40 Am. B. R. 371, 247 Fed. 90.

Transfer for purpose of paying old creditors ratable proportion.—The bankruptcy act recognizes the distinction between intent to defraud and intent to prefer, and while it makes no distinction between intent to delay and intent to hinder, it does distinguish between intent to defraud and intent to delay or hinder. The statute must be construed according to its reasonable intent and only such transfers as not only hinder and delay but also operate as a fraud, i. e., those entered into with actual fraudulent intent or those where from the terms of the agreement or the nature of the transaction itself, the fraudulent intent is presumed to exist as an inference of law, will bar a discharge. A sale and assignment by insolvents, within four months prior to their bankruptcy, of all their property to a corporation formed for the purpose of purchasing the same, a fair consideration being received by the insolvents and turned over by them to an attorney representing them and certain of their creditors with the intent that the same shall be distributed by the attorney ratable among such creditors of the insolvents as would agree to compromise their claim for the amount received, is not such a transfer of property "with intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, as will debar the bankrupt from the right to a discharge. Matter of Julius Bros. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 32 Am. B. R. 800, 217 Fed. 3, reversing 31 Am. B. R. 132, 209 Fed. 371.

months' period it is no bar, even if made for the purpose of defeating a just claim.³⁸⁴ But in New York a conveyance of real estate made by a bankrupt long anterior to the four months' period, with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, may be alleged as a ground for objection to his discharge, where the conveyance is not recorded until within the four months' period;³⁸⁵ and whether such conveyance was made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, is a question of fact.³⁸⁶ A preferential transfer consisting of a payment of money on account of an existing indebtedness, in the absence of evidence that such payment was made in fraud of creditors, is not within the meaning of this clause,³⁸⁷ nor is a transfer of a worthless equity of redemption.^{387a} An assignment of stock by a bankrupt to his wife to repay borrowed

A transfer of the furniture and fixtures of a restaurant by insolvents within four months prior to their bankruptcy to a relative, who does not assume the payment of their debts, is voluntary and without consideration, and is such a transfer of property with intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors, as will bar the bankrupts from the right to a discharge. Matter of Aymo and Barattia (Ref., D. Fraudulent transfer in violation of Bulk Sales Act.—Where a bankrupt within four months preceding the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, transferred his stock of goods, and at the time executed a false affidavit, that he had no creditors in connection with his business, in order to avoid giving his transferee a written list of his creditors and to avoid notifying them as required by the Bulk Sales Act, his discharge should be refused on the ground that he made the transfer with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors. Matter of DeNomme (D. Transfers prior to four months' period no bar.—Where a husband more than four months prior to filing his petition conveyed to his wife for full value certain shares of corporate stock for the purpose of raising money to pay the expenses of an impending suit for breach of promise to marry, it is no ground for denying his discharge. In re Brumbaugh (D. Where a debtor, several months prior to his adjudication, turned over to his assignee for creditors' property which he believed to be amply sufficient to pay all his debts the fact that from eleven to twenty months prior to his adjudication he knowingly and fraudulently lost, disposed of, and squandered large sums is not sufficient grounds for denying him a discharge. In re Boner (D. C., Va.), 22 Am. B. R. 151, 169 Fed. 727. And so where a bankrupt, with fraudulent intent, transferred an insurance policy to his wife, six years before his bankruptcy, it is not of itself a ground for refusing his discharge. In re Schickerling (C. Deeds executed under secret agreement.—If deeds executed by a bankrupt to his father-in-law more than four months prior to adjudication were mere mortgages or if there was any secret agreement by which the bankrupt retained or was to have title, and he did not disclose these facts on his examination or in his schedules he is guilty of a concealment of assets and a discharge should be refused. In re Wakefield (D. money has been held not to defeat his right to a discharge.³⁸⁸ If a trustee fails in his action to set aside a fraudulent transfer, such transfer cannot be set up as a bar to a discharge.³⁸⁹ Cases cited in the proper paragraphs of section three of this work will be found valuable.³⁹⁰ Other cases are collected in the foot-note.³⁹¹

c. General assignments as objections to discharge.—That a general assignment is a transfer is elementary; that it amounts to an intent to hinder or delay creditors is now thought to be well settled.³⁹² It has been held, however, that a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, made under a state statute, and which gives no preferences, cannot be regarded in law as a transfer with intent to hinder, delay and defraud creditors, so as to bar a discharge, where there is an entire absence of fraud.^{392a}

X. PREVIOUS DISCHARGE IN A VOLUNTARY BANKRUPTCY WITHIN SIX YEARS.

a. In general.—The purpose of subdivision 5 is clear. Through oversight, the original law permitted discharges ad libitum, and instances of two and even three discharges to the same person in as many years are on record. The English law does not permit a second application, no matter after what duration of time.³⁹³ The law of 1867 allowed it only when the bankrupt's estate was sufficient to pay seventy per cent., but three-fourths of his creditors in value could consent to a discharge on his paying a smaller amount.³⁹⁴ The present clause is apparently an effort to omit the too harsh provisions of the former, and, at the same time, to escape the dangers lurking in any device which calls for the consent of creditors.³⁹⁵

b. Effect and application.—The amendment of 1903 was not retroactive, but only fixed a new condition of discharge in case of petitions filed after its passage.³⁹⁶ As to its effect where the creditors petition, but the bankrupt either consents to an adjudication or petition, and is adjudicated while the involuntary proceeding is pending, quære? If application for a discharge has been made and it has neither been granted nor refused, the limitation of the clause would not seem applicable. If an application for a discharge had been refused in one proceeding the question of the bankrupt's right to discharge from the same debts in a subsequent proceeding is res adjudicata.³⁹⁷ The rule would seem to be that the failure of a bankrupt to apply for a discharge in the prior proceedings precludes him from procuring a discharge in subsequent proceedings from the debts scheduled and provable in the prior proceedings.³⁹⁸ The discharge in the subsequent proceedings must except all debts provable in the first bankruptcy and which could have been discharged therein.³⁹⁹ And the fact that a debt proved in the first proceeding was put in judgment after a refusal of the bankrupt's discharge, does not create a new debt so as to entitle the bankrupt in the second bankruptcy proceeding to retry his right to a discharge from such debt.⁴⁰⁰ And where a discharge has been granted in voluntary proceedings a second discharge cannot be granted within six years in an involuntary proceeding.⁴⁰¹ An offer of composition by a voluntary bankrupt, which is accepted by the creditors and confirmed by the court amounts to a "discharge in bankruptcy" within this subdivision.^{401a}

c. Measure of time.—The six years unquestionably begin to run from the date of the order granting the discharge; the time is thus to be measured between such date and the application for the second discharge, not the date of filing a second petition in bankruptcy.⁴⁰² Where, within five years of his Refusal res adjudicata.—It is a settled rule of law that, where a bankrupt has failed to apply for his order of discharge within the time limited by the statute, his right to such order is res adjudicata, and he cannot by any subsequent proceedings secure a discharge from the debts provable in the former proceedings. In re Weintraub (D. C., N. J.), 13 Am. B. R. 711, 133 Fed. 1000.

Discharge in second proceeding held pending appeal in the first.—Where bankrupts were denied their discharge upon the ground that their application for a discharge in a former bankruptcy, involving the same indebtedness, though applied for in time, and denied after a year from the date of the adjudication was res adjudicata, but no order was entered, an appeal from the order denying them a discharge in the second bankruptcy proceeding will not be disposed of until they have had an opportunity to enter an order denying the discharge in the first bankruptcy proceeding and take an appeal therefrom. Matter of Elkind & Schwartz (C. This rule seems to be opposed in the case of Matter of Skaats (D. C., Ala.), 37 Am. B. R. 579, 233 Fed. 817, in which it was held that the mere fact that a bankrupt, in a prior voluntary proceeding, failed to apply for a discharge, is not a bar to or res adjudicata on an application made within six years in a subsequent proceeding; it must be shown that there was a discharge granted or denied by the court in the prior proceeding.

XI. REFUSAL TO OBEY A LAWFUL ORDER, OR TO ANSWER A MATERIAL QUESTION APPROVED BY THE COURT.⁴⁰⁴

a. In general.—The nearest equivalent to this new objection is found in the act of 1841, whereby a discharge might be denied a bankrupt who should "wilfully omit or refuse to comply with any orders or directions of such court."⁴⁰⁵ Refusal to obey or to answer are in despite of the court, and the bankrupt may well say he thereby became liable for nothing more than a contempt. The amendatory act has added another consequence. Recalcitrancy is now also an objection to his discharge. But it must be "in the proceedings in bankruptcy."

b. Refusal to obey.—This seems to include failure to answer questions, provided the order requiring the answer is lawful. As has been seen, the words "lawful orders" occur elsewhere in the act. Whether the order is lawful or not will often be the only question. If authorized in words or by implication from the statute, it will be. Contempt of court, provided the order ignored was lawful, under this clause, becomes thus in effect an available objection to discharge. It is suggested, however, that mere neglect, not amounting to refusal to obey, would not be sufficient:

c. Refusal to answer.—This is not essentially different from refusal to obey. On refusal to answer a proper question, the court will usually order the bankrupt to answer. These words were inserted as a means to compel replies where the bankrupt asserts his privilege.⁴⁰⁶ It must appear in the report of the special master that the bankrupt refused to answer "a material question approved by the court."⁴⁰⁷ A bankrupt's refusal to answer a question, upon the ground that it will tend to degrade and incriminate him, will prevent his discharge, although he subsequently signifies his willingness to answer.⁴⁰⁸ But where there is nothing to show that a bankrupt, in giving evasive and disrespectful answers to questions concerning his property, wilfully concealed testimony, preventing his creditors from obtaining the property, his conduct is not ground for refusing to grant him a discharge.⁴⁰⁹ This clause is not in conflict with the fifth amendment to the constitution.⁴¹⁰ change in the text by inserting the words "application for the," is suggested by the court in the case of In re Dunphy (D. C., Me.), 30 Am. B. R. 760, 206 Fed. 680. It seems more reasonable to hold that the period terminates upon the application for the second discharge. In Matter of Rubin (D. C., N. J.), 43 Am. B. R. 729, 259 Fed. 607, it was held that the six years is measured backward from the date of the filing of the application for the discharge in the second proceeding and not from the hearing of the application by the court.

a few days before a referee's hearing on objections to a discharge the objecting creditors serve notice on the bankrupts to produce certain papers, and at the hearing there is a controversy as to the receipt of and compliance with said notice, but the referee was not moved to compel production of said papers, such situation does not constitute a refusal "to answer any material question approved by the court." Matter of Rea Bros. (D. C., Mont.), 40 Am. B. R. 420, 251 Fed. 431.

409. The purpose of the penalties of the bankruptcy statute is to prevent bankrupts from concealing their property and defrauding their creditors. Ordinary questions of contumacy or contempt of court can be disposed of directly and of themselves are not to be corrected by the withholding of a discharge. Matter of Fanning (D. C., N. Y.), 19 Am. B. R. 55, 155 Fed. 701.

d. Effect of withdrawal of objections by creditors.—In determining whether a bankrupt is entitled to a discharge, the fact that creditors, who originally objected thereto, have withdrawn from the case, should have no weight, if the court be clearly convinced that the bankrupt has committed the frauds alleged by them; but if there be doubt as to bankrupt's guilt, that fact may properly be considered.⁴¹¹

XII. THE DISCHARGE.

a. In general.—The granting or withholding of a discharge is within the sound judicial discretion of the judge.⁴¹² But a voluntary bankrupt is entitled to his discharge as a legal right unless the objecting creditors establish his guilt, for the burden is not on the bankrupt to satisfy the court that he has done everything the law requires him to do and is guilty of none of the things which the law condemns.⁴¹³ If the judge sustains the specifications or any of them, an order refusing the discharge is granted and entered; such an order precludes another application in the same proceeding.⁴¹⁴ If he overrules them, an order of discharge follows. A discharge may not be refused because the bankrupt has been dilatory in bringing the matter to a hearing,⁴¹⁵ or because one or more debts will not be released by it.⁴¹⁶ The insanity of the bankrupt does not affect his right to a discharge.⁴¹⁷ The referee's findings are not usually reversed except for palpable error.⁴¹⁸ The findings of the special master or referee should specifically state the grounds for the denial of a discharge.⁴¹⁹ Unlike the certificate under the former law, the discharge of to-day is silent as to the debts affected thereby.⁴²⁰ Its effect can only be determined when it is asserted as a bar elsewhere.⁴²¹ Where a bankrupt has been denied a discharge in one proceeding he cannot in a second proceeding be discharged from debts provable in the former proceeding,⁴²² even though they are barred by the Discretion of bankruptcy court.—Such a denial is discretionary with the bankruptcy court, but only in the same sense in which final orders and decrees in equity are so. Substantial errors in the interpretation or application of the principles and rules of equity jurisprudence governing the matter may be reviewed and corrected. Lindeke v. Converse (C. C. 419. Necessity for pointing out offense.—In order to bar a bankrupt's discharge on the ground of having committed an offense punishable by imprisonment, in that he made false oath in relation to the proceedings in bankruptcy, it must be shown wherein the bankrupt made a false oath, and a finding that (1) in verifying the answer and (2) in giving his testimony, the bankrupt made a false oath "either in one or the other," is insufficient. statute of limitations.⁴²³ A discharge may be amended after the term at which it was granted.⁴²⁴

b. Postponement of discharge.—Cases have arisen where it is appropriate to withhold temporarily or to postpone a discharge pending the determination of a suit or proceeding in which others beside the bankrupt are parties, where a discharge will tend to affect adversely the rights of such parties. As, for instance, where a bond was given to release certain property of the bankrupt from a writ of garnishment, granted in an action on a contract more than four months prior to bankruptcy;⁴²⁵ and so also when questions have arisen in respect to exempt property claimed by the bankrupt but as to which creditors have asserted certain rights.⁴²⁶

c. Costs.—Costs on contested applications for discharge are discretionary, and are often granted;⁴²⁷ but not to the attorney for the bankrupt out of the estate.⁴²⁸ In voluntary cases it has been held that costs may be allowed to the bankrupt's attorney.⁴²⁹ But in no case should such costs be charged against the objecting creditors.⁴³⁰

d. Vacating discharge.—It has been held that when, after discharge granted, it appears that a creditor has been bought off, this is prima facie evidence that the debtor was not entitled to discharge, and his discharge will be vacated.⁴³¹ A discharge will not be vacated on the application of a creditor whose claim will not be affected by the discharge.^{431a} Ignorance of counsel as to a rule of court regarding the time to offer evidence to sustain objections to a discharge is not a sufficient reason for vacating the order of discharge.^{431b}

429. The power to award costs against a creditor who files specifications of objections in opposition to a bankrupt's discharge is inherent in a district court as a court of equity, and may be exercised in proper cases, although such power is not specifically conferred by the bankruptcy act. Such power should, however, not be exercised unless it appears (1) either, on the one hand, that the bankrupt, since his adjudication, has acquired property, out of which costs, if against him, could be paid, or that there were assets in his estate, against which, in a similar contingency, they would have been chargeable; or, (2) on the other hand, those elements being lacking, that the creditors' objection was without merit and intended solely to vex or delay. In re Wolpert (Ref., N. Y.), 1 Am. B. R. 436.

Where references were provoked by the bankrupt and costs were legitimately incurred for referee's compensation in conducting hearings before him of the specifications opposing the discharge of the bankrupt, these costs should be taxed to the losing party. a. In general.—A discharge goes to the remedy; it does not cancel the debt. It destroys the remedy on all debts except those falling within the terms of § 17-a, discussed later.⁴³² It does not affect the estate in bankruptcy, so that proved debts may be charged against unadmisistered assets, delivered to the trustee after the closing of the estate,⁴³³ and the trustee may proceed after a discharge to compel the bankrupt to turn over assets that he has concealed.^{432a} Its effect on partnership debts and the debts of corporations has already been considered;⁴³⁴ its effect on the liabilities of codebtors will be examined later.⁴³⁵ It does not affect in any way the surplus remaining in the hands of the trustee of a bankrupt partnership nor the claims of individual creditors against such surplus,⁴³⁶ nor does it have any effect on the right of a trustee to recover any property of the bankrupt unlawfully or fraudulently conveyed.^{436a} But it discharges the bankrupt's personal liability although it does not affect a lien securing such liability.⁴³⁷ A discharge does not determine whether a particular claim is covered by the discharge or is excepted therefrom, that being a matter for subsequent determination.⁴³⁸ In determining the effect of a discharge decisions of the United States Supreme Court are controlling, since the question is a federal one.⁴³⁹

b. On liens.—A discharge is personal to the debtor. It follows, therefore, that a lien in good faith is not affected thereby;⁴⁴⁰ the effect of a discharge being to release the bankrupt's personal liability only.⁴⁴¹ Neither is a judgment evidencing a lien annulled or extinguished except in so far as it imposes a personal liability upon the bankrupt.⁴⁴² The discharge does not affect the right of the trustee or creditors of the bankrupt to have property previously disposed of by the bankrupt for the purpose of fraud, applied to the payment of his debts.⁴⁴³ This doctrine should not, however, be confused with the other which avoids all liens through legal proceedings if within four months of the bankruptcy.⁴⁴⁴ The bankruptcy law does not continue a dischargeable debt for the purpose of permitting a lien to be created after the adjudication, but only to preserve and enforce a lien in existence at the date of the adjudication.⁴⁴⁵ The discharge, when granted, relates back to the date of adjudication,^{446a} and property acquired by the bankrupt, intervening the filing of the petition and the granting of the discharge, is not appropriated to payment of his debts.^{446b} Thus, an assignment of unearned wages to secure a dischargeable debt creates no lien until the wages have been earned and cannot be enforced, as to wages earned after the date of adjudication, after the bankrupt has been discharged,⁴⁴⁶ and a similar rule has been applied to a mortgage on future crops.^{446a}

exemption.—A discharge in bankruptcy takes away all personal liability for the debt discharged, but does not affect liens acquired against particular property before the discharge, so that a levy upon property exempt in bankruptcy, made after bankrupt's adjudication, but prior to his discharge, under a judgment entered on a warrant of attorney containing a waiver of exemptions, is not affected by the discharge. *Realty Co. v. Fraudulent transfer.—The discharge of a bankrupt does not inure to the benefit of his wife, so as to release property fraudulently conveyed to her from the payment of his debts. Blick v. Nimmo (Md. Ct. of App.), 121 Md. 139, 30 Am. B. R. 770, 88 Atl. 116.

Effect upon community property.—An adjudication against a husband in the State of Washington is also an adjudication against the community property and debts, and his discharge, discharges the community. Gibbons v. Dexter Horton Trust & Savings Bank (D. C., Wash.), 35 Am. B. R. 632, 225 Fed. 424.

*444. See Bankr. Act, § 67-f. A lien on property of the bankrupt, acquired within four months of the time he was adjudged a bankrupt, is not void unless the bankrupt was insolvent at the time the lien was obtained. Thus, in a State court suit, started within four months before bankrupt's adjudication, to set aside a deed to his wife of land alleged to have been paid for by bankrupt, but conveyed to his wife for the purpose of hindering, delaying and defrauding his creditors, in beginning which suit a lis pendens was recorded against the property involved in the suit, a decree had been entered by default declaring complainant's debt to be a lien, as of the date of the recordation of the lis pendens, upon such property, which meanwhile had been conveyed to bankrupt and allowed to him as a part of his homestead exemption. The bankrupt subsequently sought to set aside such decree on the ground that the debt had been discharged in bankruptcy and the right to a lien on the homestead property adjudicated against the complainant by the bankruptcy court. It was held, that in the absence of evidence showing that the bankrupt was insolvent at the time the lien attached, the lien was not affected by the discharge in bankruptcy and that the bankruptcy court had no jurisdiction of the homestead property and therefore could not adjudicate the rights of the parties with respect thereto. Newberry Shoe Co. v. Collier (Sup. Ct. of App., Va.), 111 Va. 288, 25 Am. B. R. 130, 68 S. E. 974.*

Likewise an execution in personam, founded on a debt provable in bankruptcy, cannot be enforced against the property of a bankrupt acquired subsequent to his discharge.⁴⁴⁷ Liens continuing valid, it often becomes necessary to destroy their effect on possible after-acquired property. Garnishment.—An execution issued pursuant to section 1301 of the New York Code of Civil Procedure against a bankrupt's salary more than four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy does not create a specific lien upon income or earnings not yet due until after the discharge and satisfaction of the debt upon which the execution is issued. *Brenen v. 446a. Butler Cotton Oil Co. v. Collins, 40 Am. B. R. 200, 75 So. 975.

In the case of In re West (D. C., Or.), 11 Am. B. R. 782, 128 Fed. 205, the court said: "The theory of a lien upon the earnings of future labor is not that it attaches to such earnings from the moment of contract of pledge or assignment, but from the moment of their existence. It is needless to say that there can be no lien upon what does not exist. A pledge or assignment of future earnings in such a case is said to create an equitable interest in such wages. Stott v. Frany, 20 Or. 410, 23 Am. St. Rep. 132, 26 Pac. 271. This is true of wages earned upon a general employment, as well as those earned upon a definite contract. In this case the railroad company was under no obligation to employ the bankrupt, nor he to work for the company. If future earnings in such a case can be said to have a potential existence, they are the subject of an agreement for a lien; but the lien, or so-called equitable interest, does not attach until the wages come into existence, and until the lien does attach, there is no lien. The discharge in bankruptcy operated to discharge these obligations as of the date of the adjudication, so that the obligations were discharged before the wages intended as security were in existence. The law does not continue an obligation in order that there may be a lien, but only does so because there is one. The effect of the discharge upon the prospective liens was the same as though the debts had been paid before the assigned wages were earned. The wages earned after the adjudication became the property of the bankrupt clear of the claims of all creditors. Collier on Bankruptcy, 809.

These debts cannot escape the operation of the Bankruptcy Law by an agreement for a lien upon what the debtor expected to earn, but did not earn until after the adjudication in bankruptcy."

In Georgia the lien of a judgment obtained within four months of filing the petition in bankruptcy is not barred by the defendant's discharge. McKenney v. Cheney, 118 Ga. 387, 11 Am. B. R. 54, 45 S. E. 433; In re Weaver (D. C., Ga.), 16 Am. B. R. 265, 144 Fed. 229.

Effect in California as to excess over homestead exemption.—Plaintiff recovered judgment against defendant who was thereafter adjudged a bankrupt and subsequently received a discharge in bankruptcy. Plaintiff's claim, evidenced by the judgment, was one provable in bankruptcy. A judgment, under the law of California, is not a lien upon property covered by a valid declaration of homestead, regardless of its value, and the levy of an execution thereon creates no lien, but simply serves as a foundation for statutory proceedings to subject the excess above the statutory homestead exemption to the satisfaction of the judgment. At the time of defendant's discharge in bankruptcy no such proceeding had been initiated. Held, that the judgment was merely a personal liability released by defendant's discharge, so as to bar any proceeding to enforce it and that an execution, levied as a prerequisite to a proceeding to reach defendant's homestead property in excess of the statutory amount should be quashed and set aside. Boggs v. Dunn (Cal. Sup. Ct.), 100 Cal. 283, 26 Am. B. R. 816, 116 Pac. 743.

North Dakota statute.—In Leslie Paper Co. v. Wheeler (Sup. Ct., N. Dak.), 23 N. Dak. 477, 32 Am. B. R. 688, 137 N. W. 412, the court construed chapter 125 of Session Laws 1905 of North Dakota to mean that the legislative intent in the enactment thereof was merely to authorize the cancellation and satisfaction of record of such judgments only as are affected by a discharge in bankruptcy; and held that the legislative purpose was merely to give record notice that judgments extinguished by the bankruptcy proceedings no longer have any vitality to attach as liens to real estate subsequently acquired.

Judgment affecting property of third person.—When it appears that a judgment against a person discharged in bankruptcy may be a lien on property owned by a person not a party to the proceeding for cancellation of the judgment an absolute satisfaction of the judgment should not be ordered. *Olsen v. c. On lien of garnishee execution.—Where it is provided by State statute that an execution under a judgment becomes and continues a lien upon wages, earnings, salary, income from trust funds, and the like, to the amount prescribed, until such execution is fully satisfied,⁴⁴⁹ the earnings and income which become due after the discharge, belong to the bankrupt, and the order directing the levy upon such earnings and income should be modified.⁴⁵⁰

d. Discharge must be pleaded.—Being a bar to the remedy it must be pleaded.⁴⁵¹ The right to plead a discharge is personal to the bankrupt and where he does not rely thereon it cannot be set up by another.^{451a} The better practice is to procure a stay of all pending suits and to stay those that may be brought while the proceeding is pending, and then, when the discharge is granted, to plead it.⁴⁵² It seems, however, that a judgment entered after a petition is filed, but before the discharge, is a mere debt, and the discharge can be used as a bar to proceedings to enforce it. A judgment entered after the discharge, no matter when the suit was begun, is valid even as to the discharge; by not pleading it, the defendant has waived its benefits.⁴⁵³

XIV. EFFECT OF COMPOSITION.

This subject has already been discussed in another place.⁴⁵⁴ A composition in bankruptcy may be pleaded in bar of an action upon a debt discharged, and in order to be available it must be so pleaded.⁴⁵⁵ So long as an order confirming a composition stands, it must have the effect given it by this section, viz., the discharge of the bankrupt from his debts, "other than those agreed to be

The burden of proof is on a judgment creditor to show that his claim is not barred by the debtor's discharge in bankruptcy; and where the question is to be disposed of from the facts alleged in the creditor's pleading, it must be construed in favor of the bankrupt. Where a discharge in bankruptcy is pleaded as a defense to an action, and the plea is traversed, the burden is upon the defendant to prove his discharge; and, to carry this burden, he must put in evidence a certified copy of the order granting the discharge. Williams v. First Nat. Bank (Ga. Ct. of App.), 40 Am. B. R. 449, 94 S. E. 73.

In an action by a subsequent indorser against a prior bankrupt indorser, in which the defendant introduced in evidence a certified copy of the final order of discharge, the burden of proof was upon the plaintiffs to show that the debts were not duly scheduled, and that they had no notice of the bankruptcy proceedings. Effect of § 150 of N. Y. Debtor and Creditor Law.—Where a judgment upon a cause of action ex contractu entered by default has been opened and prior to a second judgment by default the defendant has been discharged in bankruptcy, in which proceeding the plaintiff's claim was scheduled and the plaintiff given notice, the bankrupt is entitled to a discharge of the judgment under this section, and the fact that the bankrupt did not obtain a stay from the bankruptcy court or move to open a default taken subsequently to his discharge is immaterial. DISCHARGES, WHEN REVOKED.

§ 15. Discharges, when Revoked.—a The judge may, upon the application of parties in interest who have not been guilty of undue laches, filed at any time within one year after a discharge shall have been granted, revoke it upon a trial if it shall be made to appear that it was obtained through the fraud of the bankrupt, and that the knowledge of the fraud has come to the petitioners since the granting of the discharge, and that the actual facts did not warrant the discharge.

I. COMPARATIVE LEGISLATION.

a. Revocation under English act.—There is no equivalent section in the English law, though a bankrupt's discharge may be revoked in certain cases as a penalty.¹

b. Under our former laws.—Our law of 1800, in effect, permitted the impeachment of a discharge whenever or wherever pleaded on any grounds which might have been urged against it in the court of bankruptcy. The act of 1841 provided for a like impeachment on a showing of "some fraud or a wilful concealment by him of his property, . . . contrary to the provisions of this act." The law of 1867, for the first time, provided for a direct proceeding to revoke. The sole ground of revocation, as under the present law, was that the discharge "was fraudulently obtained." The practice on such applications was also provided for; and the limitation was two years, instead of one.²

II. JURISDICTION TO REVOKE DISCHARGE.

a. Collateral attack.—The decisions under the law of 1867 on the question as to whether a discharge could be collaterally attacked were not entirely uniform, though the weight of authority was that a discharge once granted was not subject to attack elsewhere.³ There can be little doubt that this is the rule under the present law.⁴ The very nature of the proceeding results in the doctrine that the granting of a discharge is an adjudication between the bankrupt and all parties duly scheduled or with notice, amounting to res adjudicata that no other court will allow to be impeached.⁵ Besides, the present law, like its predecessor, declares that such discharge, "not revoked, shall be evidence of the jurisdiction of the court, the regularity of the proceedings, and of the fact that the order was made."⁶

4. Remedy by statute is exclusive and an order of discharge may not be questioned or attacked collaterally in any court, State or Federal. The bankrupt cannot surrender or vacate his discharge. In re Shaffer (D. C., N. Car.), 4 Am. B. R. 728, 104 Fed. 982; Custard v. Wiggerson, 130 Wis. 412, 17 Am. B. R. 337, 110 N. W. 263.

b. Jurisdiction to revoke is exclusive.—It follows, also, under well-known canons of interpretation, that, this method of revocation being prescribed, it excludes all other methods in other courts,⁷ provided the invalidity of the discharge is based on one or more of the grounds specified in the act.⁸ It also excludes any other method amounting to an actual revocation, even in a court of bankruptcy. It seems, however, that such a court has still the usual jurisdiction, where there is no other remedy, to vary, recall, or annul its orders, including, of course, a discharge if application is seasonably made and justice requires it.⁹ In actual practice, the only difference between such an annulment and a revocation proper is that, in the former, a valid discharge may subsequently be granted; while, in the latter, the determination is final, subject, of course, to appeal.¹⁰

III. MEANING OF SECTION.

a. In general.—The striking similarity between this section and § 13, relative to the setting aside of a composition, both in phrasing and in purpose, should be noted. So also should the fact that the revocation of a discharge lifts the bar as to all debts, while § 17 chiefly has to do with those debts to which a discharge is never a bar.¹¹ This section does not apply where the discharge results by operation of law from the confirmation of the bankrupt's offer of composition.¹² The meaning of the various words and clauses is briefly discussed below.

b. "Parties in interest."—This phrase is used elsewhere in the statute. It has the same meaning as where the phrase is used in § 14, authorizing an objection to a discharge on the grounds therein stated. It may mean more than "creditor," but usually is an equivalent. It includes only those persons whose rights would be barred by the discharge.¹³ Only such persons can apply for a revocation.¹⁴ A creditor is not prevented from being a party in interest because

10. Collateral attack in equity suit.—In order to revoke a discharge, application must be made under section 15 to the bankruptcy court whose jurisdiction is exclusive; and the District Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit brought, not in such court as a court of bankruptcy, but under its general equitable jurisdiction, which collaterally attacks and seeks to set aside an order of discharge. *Atlantic Dynamite Co. v. R. 181, 227 Fed. 1,011, holding that a creditor whose claim is wiped out by the discharge, but who would have the right to proceed against the debtor if the discharge were revoked is a "party in interest" within the meaning of this section.

Creditors who have not been notified of the bankruptcy proceedings are not estopped from asserting their rights by the bankrupt's discharge and, hence, are not "parties in interest." In re Monroe (D. C., Wash.), 7 Am. B. R. 706, 114 Fed. 398.

A wife who has failed to prove her claim for alimony in the bankruptcy proceedings, of which she had notice, is not a "party in interest." Arrington v. Arrington (D. C., N. Car.), 13 Am. B. his claim is barred for failure to prove it within a year from the adjudication as required by § 57-n.¹⁵ It must appear that the creditor was such at the time of the bankruptcy.¹⁶ But the failure of a creditor to file proof of a claim, duly scheduled, has no bearing on his application for a discharge.¹⁷ A bankrupt cannot surrender or vacate his discharge. He may revive a discharged debt by a new promise, or waive his discharge by failing to plead it when sued, but he cannot vacate the order of discharge.¹⁸ It has been held, however, that a bankrupt may be permitted to open his discharge for the purpose of correcting a mistake in the schedules presumably made by his attorney.¹⁹

c. "Undue laches."—The meaning of this phrase, which, however, did not occur in the former law, is indicated by the cases decided under it, some of which are cited in the foot-note.²⁰ Each case turns on its own facts.²¹ It will at once be seen that these words are a limitation on those discussed in the next paragraph. Laches may prove a bar inside the year.

d. "Within one year."—This is a limitation and is strictly construed.²² The year undoubtedly begins to run from the date of the order of discharge.²³ While an application for revocation thus cannot be made after the year has elapsed, it is thought that application to the court to vary or annul the order was included in the schedules, the application for leave to open the discharge and to amend the schedules will be granted.

Where a bankrupt makes a sincere and honest effort to schedule a creditor, and a mistake is made as to the identity of the creditor, the estate should be reopened and the bankrupt given a chance to make his schedules conform to the facts. may be made after that time, though a court will properly refuse such an application when plainly for the purpose of avoiding this limitation.²⁴

e. "Upon a trial."—The right to a jury trial in bankruptcy cases is fully discussed later.²⁵ It is very doubtful whether, under the present law, an application for revocation of a discharge can be submitted to a jury.²⁶ As stated elsewhere, a hearing before the judge or a special master is a trial.²⁷ But the referee, as such, can no more hear such an application than he can one for a discharge.

f. "Obtained through the fraud of the bankrupt."—These words are not essentially different from those in the former law.²⁸ Fraud is the only ground for revoking a discharge, as will appear hereafter.²⁹

g. "Facts did not warrant the discharge."—The section by these words makes it incumbent upon the applicant to plead and prove that the facts did not warrant the discharge.³⁰ These words are new. In actual practice they can mean little more than what is expressed in "obtained through the fraud of the bankrupt."

IV. GROUNDS FOR REVOCATION.

a. Fraud as only ground.—The section authorizes the revocation of the discharge "if it shall be made to appear that it was obtained through the fraud of the bankrupt." Fraud is thus the only ground specified in the statute for which a revocation may be granted.³¹ Coupled with the fraud in obtaining the discharge, grounds which would have originally prevented the granting of the discharge, had they been known and presented in time in the form of objections to its allowance, must be shown.³² If the bankrupt in obtaining his discharge submitted to the court a false affidavit as to giving notice to his creditors of his application therefor, the court would doubtless revoke the discharge.³³

b. What constitutes fraud for such purpose.—It would seem that the fraud required to be shown means fraud in fact,³⁴ as the intentional omission of

R. 437, 177 Fed. 578, holding that the fraud by which the discharge was obtained must have related to fraud theretofore knowingly practiced by the bankrupt. It must have been an actual fraud, such as could have been urged against the granting of the discharge. See also In re Cuthbertson (D. C., So. Dak.), 29 Am. B. R. 823, 202 Fed. 266.

33. Matter of Walsh (D. C., N. Y.), 32 Am. B. R. 521, 213 Fed. 643.

assets,³⁵ or of a creditor,³⁶ from the schedules. Thus, where the omission was due to mistake in law and the trustee was informed of the property,³⁷ or where the fraud complained of was committed years before the bankruptcy;³⁸ revocation will not usually be decreed. It was held under the former law that pleading and proof were limited to such acts as would have been available objections to the discharge.³⁹ It may be, however, that this is not now the law; it would seem that any act which amounts to a fraud committed by the bankrupt while obtaining his discharge is sufficient.⁴⁰ His verified petition for discharge may be so phrased as to make many acts or omissions in the bankruptcy, antedating the discharge proceeding, proper frauds that may be asserted on an application of this character. On the other hand, what might have been objections to a discharge may not prove available grounds for revocation. Thus, cases are possible, though not likely, where false swearing in the proceeding may not be a fraud on creditors; refusal to obey a lawful order is usually but a contempt of court. As a rule, however, through the link of the petition for discharge, objections to discharge are, if discovered after the discharge available in proceedings to revoke. It should also appear that grounds exist which, if presented on the application for a discharge, would have prevented the grant thereof.⁴¹ The buying of a creditor's claim for the purpose of defeating the bankrupt act is a ground for revocation.⁴²

c. Knowledge of fraud.—The section requires that "knowledge of the fraud has come to the petitioner since the granting of the discharge." This is essential,⁴³ and, therefore, jurisdictional. Knowledge of the petitioner's attorney has been held to be his knowledge, and revocation refused where it antedates the discharge.⁴⁴ Similar words will be found in the law of 1867.⁴⁵ The purpose of this limitation is to restrict this process to those frauds which shall be discovered after the discharge.⁴⁶ Otherwise, an application for revocation would be equivalent to a retrial before appeal.

V. PRACTICE.

It should be borne in mind that, under this section, the power of the judge to revoke a discharge is confined and limited. It must be exercised (a) upon application of parties in interest; (b) within one year after it has been granted; (c) upon a trial in which it must be shown by petitioners that they have (d) not been guilty of undue laches; (e) that the discharge was obtained through the fraud of the bankrupt; (f) that the knowledge of said fraud has come to the petitioners since the granting of the discharge; and (g) that the actual facts did not warrant the discharge. In each and every one of these particulars the burden of proof is upon the petitioners, and each requirement of the statute is absolutely essential to be proven.⁴⁷ The act, and also the rules and forms are silent as to the practice. The application should be made to the judge and not a referee. The trial must be had before the judge unless he refers it to the referee as a special master.⁴⁸ If for revocation, it should be by petition. The petition should show that the petitioners had provable claims.⁴⁹ What has been said touching objections to a discharge should be read in this connection.⁵⁰ The grounds on which the application rests should be strictly pleaded.⁵¹ Allegations should be made showing that knowledge of the facts constituting grounds for the revocation came to the petitioner since the granting of the discharge.⁵² Amendments will sometimes be allowed.⁵³ An amendment should not be permitted after the expiration of a year from the date of the discharge, within which period the application for a revocation is required to be made.⁵⁴ Reasonable notice should be given the bankrupt, and, it is suggested, should be by personal service; under the analogies of the statute, also, the usual ten-day notice to creditors by mail would seem wise.⁵⁵ The practice on the hearing and afterward does not differ from that on a contested discharge.⁵⁶ But here the moving creditor, it would seem, should conform more strictly to his pleadings.⁵⁷

VI. EFFECT OF REVOCATION OF DISCHARGE.

a. In general.—The revocation of a discharge makes the discharge a nullity, excepting as to those who have acted on the faith of it while operative. The successful party may recover costs.⁵⁸

b. Application of § 64-c.—It is provided in subsection c of § 64, in effect, that in case the discharge is revoked the property acquired by the bankrupt since the adjudication of bankruptcy shall be applied in payment in full of claims of creditors who sold such property, and the residue, if any, shall be applied to the payment of debts which were owing at the time of the adjudication. A similar effect is given to the setting aside of the confirmation of a composition.⁵⁹ That after-acquired property may be administered in the pending bankruptcy proceeding is one of the anomalies of the statute.⁶⁰ If the trustee is still undischarged, title to property acquired up to the date of the order revoking vests in the trustee, who must thereupon distribute as provided by this section; if there be no trustee, the case may be reopened and one appointed in the usual way.⁶¹ If there be a surplus, it can be paid only to those creditors in the original proceeding whose claims were filed within a year from the beginning of that proceeding.⁶²

I. SCOPE OF SECTION.

a. Declaratory of the law.— This section is declaratory of a general principle of law. It results from two well-settled doctrines: (1) that a discharge in bankruptcy affects only the personal liability of the debtor, and not that liability as to other persons,¹ (2) and that such a discharge is by operation of law and not by consent.² It was well settled under the former law that the principle thus stated applied only to a discharge in bankruptcy,³ and not to any act of the parties affecting a release;⁴ also that, the creditor having still the right to collect from any other person liable on the debt, a pending suit against such other is not affected by the discharge.⁵ The reported cases under that law are thus as applicable now as then.⁶ The section is applicable even though the discharge is effected by the consent of the creditor, as by a composition.⁷ The right to execution or supplementary proceedings against the co-debtor is not affected by the bankruptcy proceedings.⁸

b. Construction.— This section should be strictly construed if in derogation of common-law rights and of the express statutory provision of the State where the question arises.⁹

c. One person as principal and surety.— If the surety is also liable as principal and as such his obligation is discharged in bankruptcy, he will also be discharged as surety; no such anomaly can reasonably exist in the law, as discharging a man who is liable both as principal and surety in one capacity, and not in the other.¹⁰

d. Effect of creditor's acts.— It makes no difference under this section whether the creditor proves his claim and gets his dividend.¹¹ The co-debtor or surety may protect himself by proving the claim, and cannot complain if the debtor does not.¹² When the creditor in effect consents to the discharge — as when he has knowledge of a sufficient objection and does not plead it — the discharge being by operation of law only, the liability of the surety remains.¹³

e. Whether discharged co-debtor is a necessary party.— If one of two or more joint debtors is discharged, and suit is brought on the joint debt, it has been a mooted question whether the discharged joint debtor was a necessary party.¹⁴ Since he can unquestionably be made a party, his discharge being only available in bar, the safer practice is to join him as a defendant.

II. JOINT DEBTS.

a. Of partners.—The question of the debts of partners is discussed elsewhere in this work.¹⁵ The words of the section express the rule of law applicable to discharges granted to members of firms as distinguished from partnership discharges. The analogous clause of the former law was held to imply that an individual partner was entitled to a discharge from partnership debts.¹⁶ The same inference follows from the words of the present section.¹⁷

b. Of co-debtors.—A like rule applies here as where two parties make a note jointly, or are joint obligors on a bond.^{17a} But, where one of two or more joint obligors have been discharged, the others cannot, it seems, insist on contribution, though this doctrine may well be questioned.¹⁸

III. SURETY DEBTS.

a. Of indorsers.—Under the principle stated, the discharge of the maker of a note does not affect the indorser in any way; the holder may proceed and collect the entire debt from him.¹⁹ Familiar principles, however, exonerate the indorser of a demand note, the holder of which is guilty of undue laches in presentment;²⁰ but the liability of an indorser is not discharged even though the creditor accepts payments under a composition agreement.²¹

b. Of obligors on bonds.—The rule as to the obligors of bonds is the same. The obligor continues liable though the principal or a co-obligor be discharged.²² This is peculiarly so where the bond runs to the people, bankruptcy

Upon the dissolution of a corporation the bankruptcy of the defendant does not discharge the surety in the dissolving bond. National Surety Co. v. Medlock (Ct. of App., Ga.), 2 Ga. App. 665, 19 Am. B. R. 664, 58 S. E. 1131.

Guarantor of lease.—A guarantor of the payment of the rent reserved in a lease is not discharged by the bankruptcy of the tenant. Witthaus v. Zimmerman, 91 N. Y. App. Div. 202, 11 Am. B. R. 314, 86 N. Y. Supp. 315.

Appeal bond.—Where the defendant in an attachment suit files a petition in bankruptcy and is finally discharged, his surety on an appeal bond in such an attachment suit is not discharged thereby; and while a judgment may issue against the bankrupt accompanied by a perpetual stay of execution, the surety may be compelled to answer according to the terms of his obligation. Brown & Brown Coal Co. v. Antezak (Sup. Ct., Mich.), 164 Mich. 110, 25 Am. B. R. 896, 128 N. W. 774. See also Chewning v. Knight (Ala. Ct. of App.), 41 Am. B. R. 254, 77 So. 969.

Forthcoming bond.—If a judgment is duly scheduled, the bankrupt debtor is entitled to a discharge, but nothing in section 67f requires an abrogation of the liability of the sureties on the bankrupt's forthcoming bond that had already become fixed in favor of the judgment creditors. Evans v. Rea (Texas Civ. App.), 39 Am. B. R. 333, 193 S. W. 707.

Effect on liability of surety on bond.—The ordinary rule that the release of a principal not, as a rule, affecting such liabilities.²³ A discharge of a principal on a bond given to secure his faithful performance of a building contract, broken prior to his bankruptcy, releases him from his express obligation to indemnify his surety on such bond in case of loss. If the surety pays the loss he is subrogated to the rights of the creditor for the protection of whom the bond was given.²⁴

c. Attachment bonds.—Under the former law, the decisions on this point whether a surety on an attachment bond is released by the bankruptcy of the principal were about equally divided.²⁵ Such bonds being as a rule conditioned to pay a sum of money if the suit should go against the principal, the liability could not arise until the judgment was granted. The bankruptcy intervening, the principal could thus stay the entry of the judgment, and later plead his discharge in bar, and the liability of the sureties thus would never accrue. In these circumstances, the New York rule, resting on the doctrine that the law of 1867 did not dissolve the lien of the attachment and that the bond was a substituted security, held that the plaintiff should be allowed to proceed to judgment, which, if granted, fixed the liability of the sureties.²⁶ The rule under the present bankruptcy act is the same in New York and other States and the creditor is entitled to a special judgment against the bankrupt, execution not to be issued thereon, as a basis for the future action against the surety. And this is so though the attachment was issued within four months of the adjudication.²⁷ On the other hand a rule was adopted in Massachusetts denying the fiction of substituted security and holding that such a bond was a mere personal liability which did not accrue debtor likewise releases the surety relates to a release by the voluntary action of the creditor, and does not apply to a release or discharge by operation of law as in bankruptcy. Failor v. Wehe (Kan. Sup. Ct.), 37 Am. B. R. 311, 158 Pac. 74.

Surety on injunction bond.—Where the liability of a principal and surety on an injunction bond is joint and several, and the liability of the surety does not depend upon the rendition of a judgment against the principal, a discharge in bankruptcy of the principal does not release the surety from liability. Martin Furniture Co. v. Massey (Tenn. Sup. Ct.), 37 Am. B. R. 380, 186 S. W. 451.

Special judgment against bankrupt and action against surety.—In U. S. Wind Engine & Pump Co. v. North Pennsylvania Iron Co., 227 Pa. St. 262, 75 Atl. 1094, in considering the question, "Is there anything in the law or practice of Pennsylvania to prevent or discountenance a special judgment against one discharged in bankruptcy?" the court said: "The appellee has secured its discharge, and its personal liability is gone; but that does not constitute any reason why a judgment against it should not be entered for the special purpose of fixing and enforcing the liability of the surety. The surety took the risk of appellee's insolvency, a risk that the appellant was supposedly protected against by the very bond in question. So it would be most unfair, to allow the substitution of the bond for the goods attached, and then to deny the formal relief necessary in order to enforce its terms against the surety. There is nothing in our laws or practice or in the announced public policy of the State to require such a ruling." See also In re Marshall Paper Co. (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 4 Am. B. Sureties on attachment bonds.—Where in a suit in attachment a claimant of the property attached gives bond with sureties and takes possession of the property, a discharge until judgment in the principal action, by allowing a stay or a plea in bar, relieved the sureties.²⁸ The latter seems to have been the view of the Supreme Court, though its decision is not authoritative.²⁹ This latter view was adopted in a recent decision in Maryland where the attachment was granted within four months of the adjudication,³⁰ and in Louisiana it has been held, where the property of the debtor was attached and released on bond less than four months before he was adjudged a bankrupt, and the debtor was discharged, that the surety on the bond was released from all liability.³¹ A similar result has been reached in reference to a bond given to discharge a garnishment in an action against the bankrupt upon a claim provable in bankruptcy at the time of his discharge, commenced within the four months' period and pending at the time of his discharge.³² In such case the surety is relieved, not because of the discharge of the bankrupt, but because the lien acquired by the garnishin bankruptcy of the claimant before trial of the suit does not release him and his sureties on the bond. Sanderson v. Buckley (Miss. Sup. Ct.), 37 Am. B. R. 379, 72 So. 148.

Where a suit has been commenced more than four months prior to the bankruptcy of defendant by attachment of defendant's personal property, which attachment was discharged upon the giving of a bond conditioned for the payment of any judgment that might be recovered, defendant's discharge in bankruptcy, duly pleaded by him, is not a bar to the prosecution of the suit to judgment, although a judgment therein could not be enforced against defendant and the only effect thereof would be to enable plaintiff to charge the sureties on the attachment bond. In such case the court can render a special judgment, with a perpetual stay of execution against defendant, for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to bring suit against the sureties on the attachment bond. Butterick Pub. Co. v. Bowen Co. (R. I. Sup. Ct.), 33 R. I. 40, 26 Am. B. R. 718, 80 Atl. 277.

Although under a subsequent Massachusetts statute a special judgment is authorized which seems to change the rule laid down in the preceding cases. Rosenthal v. Nove, 175 Mass. 559, 56 N. E. 884.

29. Wolf v. Stix, 90 U. S. 1, 23 L. ed. 146; Hill v. Harding, 107 U. S. 631, 27 L. ed. 493, is a case where the attachment was before the interdicted period.

30. Crook-Horner Co. v. Gilpin (Md. Ct. of App.), 112 Md. 1, 23 Am. B. R. 350, 75 Atl. 1049.

The distinction between the two views is explained in Schunack v. Art Metal Novelty Co. (Sup. Ct., Ct.), 84 Conn. 331, 26 Am. B. R. 731, 80 Atl. 290, as follows: "In New York the attachment is regarded as not only non-existent, but as possessing no other importance in the situation than as if it had never existed. The Maryland court, on the contrary, discovers such a relation between the bond and the attachment by virtue of the office of the former under the statute, and of its compulsory substitution for the attachment by the operation of the machinery of the law, set in motion as a statutory incident of the attachment, as to entitle the bond to be regarded in the eye of the law as dependent for its life and efficiency upon the life and efficiency of the attachment."

31. Windisch-Muhlhauser Brewing Co. v. Simms (Sup. Ct., La.), 129 La. 134, 26 Am. B. R. 714, 55 La. 739, in which the court said: "Section 16 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 merely recognizes this general rule of law. Section 67-f of the same statute, however, strikes with nullity all levies, attachments, or liens obtained through legal proceedings against an insolvent at any time within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy in case he is adjudged a bankrupt. It is difficult to conceive how attachment proceedings thus pronounced null and void can produce any legal effect. The attachment being dissolved by operation of the statute, nothing is left but a suit in personam which is stayed by the pendency of the bankruptcy proceedings. In such a case, the subsequent discharge of the debtor extinguishes the obligation on which the suit was based, and renders it legally impossible for the creditor to recover judgment against his former debtor. Where an attachment is released on bond, the condition is that the defendant will satisfy such judgment, to the value of the property attached, as may be rendered against him in the pending suit. C. P. art. 259. No proceeding can be had against the surety on such a bond until after the judgment has been rendered against the defendant, and execution issued thereon, and a return of nulla bona made by the sheriff. Id. Where no judgment can be rendered and executed against the defendant in attachment, the statutory liability of the surety on the release bond can never arise."

32. Klipstein v. Allen Miles Co. (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 15, 136 Fed. 385, approved in In re Mercedes Import Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 20 Am. B. R. 648.

ment is avoided by the bankruptcy proceedings, which destroyed the remedy by which a judgment can be recovered against the bankrupt.³³

d. Appeal, replevin, and jail bonds.— If the law of the State does not permit the discharge to be pleaded in the appellate court, the discharge of the principal does not relieve the surety of an appeal bond. If it may be pleaded in such court, no final judgment being possible against the principal, the surety is relieved.³⁴ Replevin bonds being merely for the return of a chattel in kind or value, and the trustee having succeeded to the bankrupt's interest, the discharge cannot be pleaded in bar; the liability of the surety may thus ultimately be fixed, and the discharge does not release it.³⁵ In bail bonds, the rule is well settled that, if there has been no breach of the conditions before discharge granted, the sureties will be released, but, if there has, then a liability has accrued which may still be enforced pro tanto against them.³⁶ A like doctrine saves to those interested the liabilities of sureties on administrator's and guardian's bonds, and the like.³⁷ It is thought, however, that a court of bankruptcy will stay proceedings in most of the suits in which any of the bonds mentioned in this paragraph have been given, at least until the creditor has had reasonable opportunity to ascertain and collect his dividend; this that he may apply the same in reduction of the amount due from the sureties before entering up judgment against them.³⁸

e. Of directors of corporations.— Directors are sureties in a qualified sense only. Being such, they are, however, within the intendment of this section of the law, and are not released by the discharge of their corporation from any liability to its creditors given by law.³⁹

Discharge pending appeal.— Where pending an appeal from a judgment of a justice's court against him, the defendant is discharged in bankruptcy, and he pleads his discharge rendered in his favor, the surety upon charge in the higher court, and judgment is the appeal bond conditioned to pay such judgment as may be rendered against the defendant is not liable. Goyer Co. v. Jones, 79 Misc. 253, 8 Am. B. R. 437, 30 So. 651. Compare Bailey v. Reeves (Sup. Ct. Miss.), 102 Miss. 438, 28 Am. B. R. 850, 59 So. 800.

A surety on an appeal bond is liable thereon, although his principal, the judgment debtor, was relieved from the payment of the judgment by his discharge in bankruptcy. Where a statutory bond is given in an appeal to the District Court from a judgment of a city court (Kans. Gen. St. 1909, §§ 6483, 6493), and the appeal is dismissed for want of prosecution, the subsequent discharge of the appellants by virtue of the Bankruptcy Act does not bar an action against the surety on the appeal bond. Fallor v. Wehe (Kan. Sup. Ct.), 57 Am. B. R. 311, 158 Pac. 74.

a. Excepted debts in England and Canada.—The English act of 1883 provided broadly that all provable debts shall be released by the discharge, except, in substance, (a) a recognizance, or (b) any debt to the crown or for an offense or any liability on a bail bond given for the appearance of a person charged with an offense against a statute relating to the public revenues, or (c) any debt or liability incurred by means of fraud or fraudulent breach of trust. The amendatory act of 1890 excepted also any liability under a judgment for seduction, support, or criminal conversation. Save in its silence as to debts not scheduled, therefore, the English statute is not materially different from ours. Useful precedents will be found in the reported cases under the English law.³ In Canada the excepted debts are similar to those just mentioned in England with the addition of debts for necessities of life.⁴

b. Under our law of 1867.—The differences between the analogous clause in the former law and that now under discussion will appear in subsequent paragraphs. The effect of a discharge on the liability of co-debtors has been considered in the previous section. Aside from this, the former law⁵ excepted from the discharge only (a) fraudulent debts and (b) fiduciary debts. Fiduciary debts only were excepted by the law of 1841, though a discharge could be impeached for fraud or wilful concealment of property wherever pleaded.⁶ There were no excepted classes, save debts to the United States, recognized by the law of 1800.⁷ The tendency is clearly to increase the exceptions; this tendency keeping pace with the widening out of the meaning of the word "debt." In both these directions, the present law, as amended in 1903, has gone further than any other bankruptcy law.

c. Scope of section.—(1) IN GENERAL.—This section and section fourteen on "Discharges," and section sixty-three, on "Provable Debts," should be read together.⁸ There are no ambiguous or doubtful words or phrases in this section, nor do its provisions, when naturally and fairly read, clash in any particular with those of § 63-a. While § 17 limits the exception from the operation of a discharge to such of the demands or liabilities as are "provable debts," § 63-a limits provability to the classes of demands or liabilities therein defined.⁸ In view of the well known purposes of the bankruptcy law, exceptions to the operation of a discharge thereunder should be confined to those plainly expressed therein.⁹

(2) PROOF OF NON-DISCHARGEABLE DEBT.—The effect of the discharge is declared by prescribing that only provable debts shall be released, and then that even certain provable debts shall be excepted. It follows, therefore, that dividends may be paid on a debt, and yet it be not affected by a discharge. In this connection, the practitioner should also bear in mind the following familiar rules: The discharge is available as a plea in bar in a suit on the debt, no more; and, therefore, does not affect vested liens on the bankrupt's property. Nor is it material whether the debt was proved; if it could have been proved, it will be discharged.¹⁰ But, the present law containing no provision that the proving of a debt shall constitute a waiver of other remedies, the creditor loses no remedy by proving; and, unless a discharge is granted and pleaded, a subsequent suit can be maintained.¹¹

d. Determining effect of discharge.—The court in which the debt is proceeded on is the only proper forum to determine whether a discharge releases such debt.¹² This was not so under the former law. Nor have the courts under the present law, always recognized this distinction between the two statutes.¹³ Thus, a discharge should be granted even if the only debt scheduled is clearly not dischargeable.¹⁴ But the Federal courts are often asked to pass upon the effect of discharges not yet granted, as where application is made to stay a suit on a debt to which, it is claimed, the discharge will prove a bar. In so doing, such court will usually determine the question in accordance with the law and decisions of the State in which the debt originated, though, if that law conflicts with the bankruptcy law, the latter will control.¹⁵ Where the bankrupt is sued on a debt existing at the time of filing the petition, the introduction of the order of discharge makes out a prima facie defense, the burden then being cast upon the plaintiff to show that, because of the nature of the claim, failure to give notice or other statutory reason, the debt sued on was by law excepted from the operation of the discharge.¹⁶ If the debt has been reduced to judgment, the Federal court, while not bound by the

a. Provable debts.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Only provable debts are dischargeable.¹⁹ If the debt falls within the category of provable debts enumerated in § 63-a, it is quite as clearly covered by the discharge, unless within the excepted classes.²⁰ An unliquidated claim, which might have been liquidated and proved under § 63-b, is discharged.²¹ A surety debt, as in the case of the liability of the bankrupt on a bond to secure the performance of a building contract, is discharged as to the bankrupt principal thereon, and the surety is subrogated to the rights of the creditor.²² Since only provable debts are discharged, none post-dating the petition in bankruptcy are affected by the discharge.²³ The fact that the debtor's sole purpose in going into bankruptcy was to discharge a particular debt will not affect the validity of the discharge when obtained.²⁴ Reference should be made to § 63a and the cases cited thereunder for the purpose of determining whether a debt is dischargeable as provable. It will not be feasible in this place to declare more than a few general principles in respect to provable debts.

(2) DEBTS SUSCEPTIBLE OF PROOF, BUT DISALLOWED.—Provable debts here referred to are not necessarily those which have been proved; debts susceptible of being proved under the act are included.²⁵ A debt which is disallowed because without foundation is not therefore non-provable. The court may determine whether an alleged claim against a bankrupt's estate is valid, and if it is ascertained that there is no basis for the claim it may be disallowed, but this does not mean, necessarily, that the claim is non-provable, and therefore not dischargeable.²⁶ It has been held that a discharge will not be granted where the only claims scheduled by the bankrupt are disputed and not admitted by him to be debts,²⁷ but a claim disputed by the bankrupt may be provable, and if it is it follows by operation of law, regardless of the action of the bankrupt that it is dischargeable.²⁸

(3) JUDGMENT DEBTS.—A debt scheduled in a bankruptcy under a former law, but kept alive by a subsequent judgment, will, because provable, be released.²⁹ This includes judgments entered prior to bankruptcy, provided such judgments are provable and not subject to the exceptions, and all proceedings thereunder are nullified.³⁰ A claim reduced to judgment after the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, although not scheduled, may be discharged, where the creditor had actual notice of the bankruptcy proceedings in time to file and prove his claim.³¹

(4) FINES, PENALTIES AND DEBTS DUE GOVERNMENT.—Broad and ancient principles also exclude obligations to the State or sovereign, and this, too, whether specially excepted by the law or not; thus, fines imposed as penalties for crimes,³² or for contempt of court,^{32a} the obligation of the father of a bastard

31. Release from subsequent judgment.—In the case of Claster v. Sobie, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 631, 10 Am. B. R. 446, it was held that in case a claim is reduced to judgment, as was done in the case at bar, after the bankruptcy proceedings had been commenced, and although the claim was not scheduled, yet, if the creditor has actual knowledge of the pendency of the bankruptcy proceedings in time to file and prove his claim, the bankrupt is nevertheless discharged from all liability on such judgment. The court, in referring to the provisions of section 17 of the bankruptcy act, says: "It is very clear from this provision the plaintiffs having admitted that they had knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy, that the defendant was discharged from all personal liability on the note upon which the judgment was entered. It follows, of course, that the judgment had no validity, and that all proceedings thereunder were absolutely void." Valdosta Guano Co. v. Green & Sutton (Ga. Sup. Ct.), 44 Am. B. R. 562, 101 S. E. 538.

A claim, provable in bankruptcy, was duly scheduled by a debtor in voluntary bankruptcy proceedings instituted in his true name, the correct name and address of the creditor being given, and a discharge in bankruptcy subsequently had. At the time of bankrupt's adjudication, there was pending in justice's court, an action on said claim by the creditor, wherein, because of a mistake, either of the justice or the creditor, bankrupt was sued by a wrong name and judgment recovered. No evidence was given that the creditor had ever dealt with bankrupt under such wrong name. It was held that bankrupt, by his discharge in bankruptcy, was released from the legal obligation sought to be enforced against him under an execution on the judgment obtained in the justice's court action. *Finnell v. child to support it and protect the community from that duty,³³ and, of course, all debts due a state so long as the latter acts in a sovereign capacity.³⁴ Under the earlier acts it was held that all debts due the United States were not dischargeable, although not expressly excepted,³⁵ but it has been held that there was a deliberate change in purpose in the present act with reference to debts due the United States and that they are dischargeable, unless for taxes.^{36a}

b. As dependent on the person claiming.—While, as a rule, the debt of every creditor entitled to prove a claim is dischargeable, yet the effect of such discharge is sometimes limited by citizenship or the claimant's relation to other persons or business entities. Thus, the debt of an alien, whether resident or not, is discharged,³⁶ though the discharge cannot be pleaded in a foreign court. On the other hand, the debt of an alien bankrupt discharged by the courts of this country may still be sued on here.³⁷ This is contrary to the English rule,³⁸ and a bankruptcy agreement between the two countries has often been discussed. If the bankrupt, by the laws of his State, is liable for his wife's debts, as for necessities, his discharge will release them.³⁹ So if a woman marries after filing a petition in bankruptcy and thereafter procures a discharge, such discharge will not only release her but also her husband. The status of the claim is fixed at the time of the petition.⁴⁰ If, on the other hand, she is alone responsible, his discharge will not affect her liability.⁴¹ For the dischargeability of debts already barred by the statute of limitations, and those purely contingent at the time of the bankruptcy, see under section sixty-three, post.

c. As dependent on the nature of the liability.—(1) LIABILITY FOR TORTS.—(I) In general.—Under previous laws, liabilities for torts were not discharged unless in judgment,⁴² and this though liquidation was not essential to bring a debt within the excepted classes. The use of the word "judgment" in the act passed in 1898 seemed to emphasize this rule. It is surely still the law where the wrongs relied on are within the terms of subdivision 2 of § 17.⁴³

(II) Effect of amendment of 1903.—The amendment of 1903 has substituted the word "liabilities" in place of the word "judgments." And the provision as it now stands affords some basis for the claim that the exception from the operation of the discharge of particular liabilities for torts implies that such liabilities in general are not discharged. But this implication does not carry far. The amendment was to an exception in the statute which states what debts shall not be discharged rather than what shall be. A negative provision that liabilities for certain torts shall not be discharged, does not of itself make all other tort liabilities provable debts. Although the language is not wholly in harmony with the other sections of the act, it is apparent that Congress intended by the amendment to preclude the possibility of claims for certain torts being discharged, whether reduced to judgment or not. But there is no evident intention to bring in claims for torts which were never provable under the earlier bankruptcy act.⁴⁴ When, however, the tort grows out of or is the result of consent or a contract, on broad principles and irrespective of the amendment, it will, it is thought, even if not in judgment, be discharged.⁴⁵

(III) Liabilities which are dischargeable.—If a creditor waives his tort and presents his claim with the other creditors of the estate, his debt is dischargeable as one in contract, regardless of the tort.⁴⁶ But this rule would not apply where the claim was based upon a tort coming within the excepted classes.⁴⁷ If a debt is founded on a contract it is a provable debt and dischargeable, although the creditor has elected to bring an action for fraud.⁴⁸ A judgment in an action for a tort, which does not fall within any of the excepted classes, is a provable debt and may be discharged.⁴⁹ When it is necessary to consider whether a judgment is released by a discharge, the fact must be determined by the record, and not by any allegation or proof outside of it.⁵⁰

(2) LIABILITIES FOR CONVERSION.—Under the Bankruptcy Act of 1867 liabilities for conversion were held to be dischargeable.⁵¹ Under the present act such liabilities are dischargeable where the conversion is merely technical, with out actual fraud or malice.⁵² But the liability for a conversion which shows a design or willingness to inflict wrong upon another, or the reckless disregard of the rights of another, is not dischargeable.⁵³ The change from "judgments" to "liabilities" has affected the doctrine only to fix it more firmly. Thus, dischargeability will be decreed in all cases, such as those of agents, brokers,

Action on contract.—A complaint in an action for breach of contract to pay a certain sum in cash and collected profits of a certain company, and a balance of accounts receivable less outstanding debts, does not state an action in tort, where there is no allegation of a wrongful withholding by the defendant other than an allegation that he agreed to act as agent for the plaintiff in collecting the claims, hence, a judgment for the plaintiffs in such an action is discharged by the subsequent bankruptcy of the defendant. *Hanan v. A judgment for a conversion of moneys received by the bankrupt upon sales on commission is not within any of the exceptions created by section 17 of the bankruptcy law and is released by his discharge. In re Benedict, 37 N. Y. Misc. 230, 8 Am. B. R. 463, 75 N. Y. Supp. 165. Stockbrokers who repledge securities deposited with them as collateral for loans, thus misapplying such securities are not guilty of a wilful and malicious injury within the meaning of this section. Wood v. Fisk, 215 N. Y. 233, 35 Am. B. R. 46, 109 N. E. 177.

A debt, due by reason of the failure of the bankrupt to remit money collected by virtue of a mere contract of agency to collect and pay over to his principals money loaned by him for them, is dischargeable. Bracken v. Milner (C. C., Mo.), 5 Am. B. R. 23, 104 Fed. 522. So, where a debt was contracted by the bankrupt under an agreement with the claimant prior to the bankruptcy, whereby the bankrupt was to sell a certain commodity and pay over a proportionate amount of the sale price, and the bankrupt fails to remit, such debt is dischargeable. Bryant v. Kinyon (Sup. Ct. Mich.), 127 Mich. 152, 6 Am. B. R. 237, 86 N. W. 531.

Misappropriation by partner.—The exceptions of a discharge from a judgment for fraud or for a debt for fraud while acting in a fiduciary capacity do not apply to a misappropriation of money by a partner while engaged in the conduct of the partnership business. Gee v. Gee (Sup. Ct., Minn.), 84 Minn. 384, 7 Am. B. R. 500, 87 N. W. 1,116.

A bailee's discharge in bankruptcy is a defense to an action for the conversion of money held by him. Lewis v. Shaw, 122 N. Y. App. Div. 96, 19 Am. B. R. 866, 106 N. Y. Supp. 1012.

Fraudulent conversion of property by commission merchant.—A discharge in bankruptcy is a bar to an action against the bankrupt, based upon the fact that the defendants fraudulently converted to their own use a certain lot of fertilizer, or its proceeds after sale, which was consigned to the defendants to be sold on commission and accounted for by them as agents of the plaintiff; the title to the fertilizer, except after sale in due course, and thereafter to the proceeds, being specifically reserved to the plaintiff. Butler-Kyser Manufacturing Co. v. Mitchell & Co. (Ala. Sup. Ct.), 37 Am. B. R. 195, 70 So. 665.

(3) LIABILITIES FOR BREACH OF PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.—Such liabilities are dischargeable in bankruptcy, except where it appear that the breach of promise of marriage was accompanied by seduction, in which case since the amendment of March 2, 1917, the liability is not dischargeable. The cases as to breach of promise alone are uniform.⁶¹ And it was held that the liability was dischargeable although seduction accompanied the breach of promise.⁶² It was held prior to the amendment that in the absence of proof to the contrary, it will be presumed that a judgment in an action for breach of promise to marry, accompanied by a charge of seduction, was awarded for the seduction, and was therefore non-dischargeable.⁶³

(4) SUPPORT OF WIFE AND CHILDREN.—Contracts and judgments binding a husband to support his wife,⁶⁴ or a father to support his children,⁶⁵ are not released by discharge. To hold otherwise would be giving an effect to the bankruptcy act which was never intended. It is not to be conceived that an act intended for the relief of debtors who are in financial distress will be extended to relieve them from their natural obligations to support their wives and children.

Liability for support of wife.—Audubon v. Shufeldt, 181 U. S. 575, 5 Am. B. R. 832, 45 L. Ed. 1009, which related especially to a claim of alimony, but the reasoning applies equally to any claim arising upon a contract or judgment binding the husband to support his wife; Dunbar v. Dunbar, 190 U. S. 340, 10 Am. B. R. 139, 47 L. Ed. 1084, holding that a husband's obligation to support his divorced wife under an agreement to pay her an annuity "during her life or until she remarries," is not a contingent liability provable under the act, and his discharge in bankruptcy does not release him therefrom.

A note given by a husband to a third person who assigned it to the wife under an agreement between husband and wife that the note and cash transferred at the time would be in full satisfaction for the support, maintenance and alimony that might be awarded to her in pending divorce proceedings, is not dischargeable in bankruptcy. Blackstock v. Blackstock (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 45 Am. B. R. 192, 265 Fed. 249.

Bond of third person.—The liability arising on a bond given by the bankrupt to secure the performance of a contract between a husband and his wife providing for the payment of monthly sums for the support of the wife is a debt which is dischargeable in bankruptcy. Matter of Sullivan (D. C., N. Y.), 45 Am. B. R. 131, 262 Fed. 574.

65. A father's liability under an agreement with his divorced wife to pay to her for the support of his minor children until they respectively become of age, is not a provable debt against his estate in bankruptcy and is not released by his discharge. Dunbar v. Dunbar, 190 U. S. 340, 10 Am. B. R. 139, 47 L. Ed. 1084. In the case of In re Hubbard (D. C., Ill.), 3 Am. B. R. 528, 98 Fed. 710, it was held that a discharge in bankruptcy did not release the bankrupt from the obligation to obey an order made by a State court, requiring him to pay a certain sum for the support of his minor children.

Liability for support of bastard.—In re Baker (D. C., Kan.), 3 Am. B. R. 101, 96 Fed. 954, it was held that a judgment in a bastardy proceeding against the putative father, adjudging him to pay a certain sum to the mother of the child for its maintenance, was not such a debt as would be released by the discharge of the father in bankruptcy, and it was put upon the ground that by virtue of the judgment and bond given thereon, the father became liable for the maintenance of the illegitimate son, the same as if he were his legitimate offspring, and that the bankruptcy law was never intended to affect the liability of the father for the support of his children. But in McKittrick v. Cahoon, 89 Minn. 283, 10 Am. B. R. 139, 95 N. W. 223, it was held that where by an order in bastardy proceedings the putative father of a natural child was

(5) LIABILITY OF FACTOR.—The liability of a factor to his principal for the proceeds of all goods consigned to him and sold before a demand by the principal for a return of all goods unsold is dischargeable in bankruptcy.⁶⁶ But the refusal of the factor upon grounds not legally tenable and imposed in bad faith to return goods unsold, after demand, renders his liability therefor a debt not dischargeable.⁶⁷

(6) LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS, DIRECTORS, AND PARTNERS.—A stockholder's liability for the debts of a corporation declared by a decree which established the amount chargeable is a provable debt and is released by his discharge.⁶⁸ The liability of the director of a discharged corporation has already been discussed.⁶⁹ Partnership debts may also be discharged,⁷⁰ but the effect of the individual discharge of a partner on his partnership debts depends on circumstances.⁷¹ It has been held that a judgment against a partnership is not released by the discharge of a member of the firm.⁷²

III. DEBTS NOT DISCHARGEABLE.

a. Taxes.—The first exception from the dischargeability of debts includes debts of the bankrupt which "are due as a tax levied by the United States, the State, county, district or municipality in which he resides." This follows from the doctrine that the liabilities to the sovereign will not be affected, unless he by express words extends the provisions of a statute to himself.⁷³ Indeed, it is thought that taxes would be excepted from the general dischargeability of provable debts, even were the statute silent. There is hardly enough in § 64-a, giving them priority of payment, to warrant the claim that the sovereign intended to waive his exemption here. Besides, the words used in § 63-a seem to take taxes out of the class known as "provable debts," and thus they could not be discharged in any event. Local assessments are, of course, "taxes" in the sense here used, so long as they are levied by one of the governmental entities indicated.⁷⁴ And State franchise taxes imposed on corporations under a State statute are taxes within the meaning of this exception.⁷⁵ required to pay a monthly stipend for its support, and upon refusal a final money judgment was obtained for the total amount due, the rights of the person entitled to recover under the order of filiation were merged in the judgment, and the debt evidenced thereby was not excepted from the operation of section 17 of the bankruptcy act.

Goods consigned for sale.—The provisions of section 17(4), excepting from discharge debts created by the bankrupt's fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation or defalcation while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity, do not embrace a debt arising from the sale of goods consigned to the bankrupt for sale upon commission, and upon an alleged contract to return the goods or their specific proceeds. In re Basch (D. b. Liabilities for certain specified acts.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The second subdivision of this section excepts from discharge debts which are based upon “liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations, or for wilful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another, or for alimony due or to become due, or for maintenance or support of wife or child, or for seduction of an unmarried female, or for criminal conversation.” This subdivision is exceedingly comprehensive in its character, although in some respects it is not as broad as before the amendment of 1903.⁷⁶

(2) EFFECT OF AMENDMENT OF 1903.—Some important changes were made in this subdivision by the amendment of 1903. The most vital is the substitution of the word “liabilities” for the words “judgments in actions” at the beginning of this subdivision. This is a substantial return to the phrasing used in the former law,⁷⁷ departed from, it is thought, by the framers of the present statute because of uncertainty whether the word “debt” there used included a “judgment.” This doubt now being removed,⁷⁸ the unwisdom of the change made by the original statute becomes apparent.⁷⁹ To be sure, it will stimulate litigation, but no bankruptcy law should free debtors of fraudulent liabilities or moral duties, merely because a court has not measured them up in terms of dollars; the use of the phrase “judgments in actions” made this more than likely. The words in the English law are, as to fraudulent and fiduciary obligations, “debt or liability”⁸⁰ (the latter of which words is carefully defined⁸¹), and as to alimony and affiliation obligations, “judgments.”⁸² The distinction thus made between moral duties, which must be liquidated, and debts for fraud, which need not be, is narrow and unwise; a bankrupt who is also a moral delinquent should not complain if he is harassed by suits to enforce duties. It is thought, therefore, that the opening of the door accomplished by the amendatory act of 1903 will prove the part of wisdom. It has, at any rate, put an end to the elasticity of construction evidenced by those cases which perforce have already overlooked the literal meaning of “judgment” and construed it to mean “liability.”⁸³

(3) LIABILITIES FOR FRAUD.—Before the amendment a bankrupt might have been released from a debt contracted in fraud unless the fraud had been determined and a judgment therefor had been rendered. As the law now

79. Thus, note the unwillingness of the courts in the cases set out in the foot-notes, post, in this section, to construe the words “judgments in actions” strictly, and observe the confusion and delays and, in some cases, denials of justice, which would result, if bankruptcy proceedings must be halted while the holder of one out of perhaps a hundred liabilities proceeds to liquidate his claim and thus intrench himself against a discharge.

Law 487, 11 Am. B. R. 252, 55 Atl. 88, holding that the words “judgments in action,” as used in the act before amendment, refer to judgments exclusively and not to mere debts. Compare also In re Rhutassel (D. C., Iowa), 2 Am. B. R. 697, 96 Fed. 597; also Morse v. Kaufman (Sup. Ct., Va.), 4 Va. Sup. Ct. 172, 7 Am. B. R. 549; Howe v. Noyes, 47 N. Y. Misc. 338, 15 Am. B. Under the act prior to the amendment of 1903, the United States Supreme Court held that only a judgment for damages based upon actual as distinguished from constructive fraud is not discharged by the discharge of the defendant bankrupt. Bullis v. O'Beirne, 195 U. S. 606, 13 Am. B. R. 108, 49 L. Ed. 340; Tindle v. Birkett, 183 N. Y. 267, 15 Am. B. R. 179, 76 N. E. 25, affd. 205 U. S. 183, 51 L. Ed. 762.

stands the frauds which will bar discharge are those connected with the obtaining of property by "false pretenses or false representations,"⁸⁴ Only those liabilities strictly within subdivision 2 are now not affected by a discharge. Such frauds as well as those included within the original section are frauds in fact involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong.⁸⁵ As to what is and what is not fraud, each case turns on its own facts.⁸⁶ When a judgment has been entered, the record considered as a whole will determine whether the debt is in fraud.⁸⁷ In order that a judgment may be one recovered for fraud so as to prevent its discharge, the record in the action must show that fraud and deceit was the "gist and gravamen" of the action.⁸⁸

The character of the fraud necessary to save a demand or judgment, from the operation of the act, is positive fraud, or fraud in fact, involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong, and not implied fraud, or fraud in law, which may exist without imputation of bad faith or immorality. Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Bryant (Ky. Ct. of App.), 149 Ky. 359, 28 Am. B. R. 867, 149 S. W. 830.

The term "fraud," as employed in the bankrupt act of 1867, received a definite construction by the Supreme Court of the United States in Neal v. Clark, 95 U. S. 704, 24 L. Ed. 586. Mr. Justice Field, speaking for the court, said: "The fraud referred to in that section means positive fraud, or fraud in fact, involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong, as does embezzlement, and not implied fraud, or fraud in law, which may exist without the imputation of bad faith or immorality. Such a construction of the statute is consonant with equity and consistent with the object and intention of Congress in enacting a general law by which the honest citizen may be relieved from the burden of hopeless insolvency. A different construction would be inconsistent with the liberal spirit which pervades the entire bankruptcy system." As the term "fraud" is expressed in the same connection, with the term "embezzlement" in the act of July 1, 1898, it must receive the same construction as given in the act of 1867. Western Union, etc., Co. v. Hurd (C. C., Mo.), 8 Am. B. R. 633, 116 Fed. 422.

Intentional fraud necessary to bar operation of discharge.—Frauds which will bar the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy are those connected with the obtaining of property by false pretenses, or "false representations," involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong; implied fraud, or fraud in law, which may exist without the imputation of bad faith or immorality, is insufficient. Cooper Grocery Co. v. Gaddy (Civ. App., Tex.), 27 Am. B. R. 422, 141 S. W. 823, quoting text.

Claim by customer against brokers.—Where a customer of a firm of stock brokers deposited bonds as collateral security for the price of stock which he directed them to purchase, and they, subsequently without the knowledge of the customer pledged the stock and bonds, on which they had been charging him interest and crediting dividends, with a bank for a loan of their own, which was later called and the stock and bonds sold in partial satisfaction thereof, and the brokers were declared bankrupts, the claim of the customer was a provable debt, within the meaning of section 63a (4), released by the discharge in bankruptcy, and was not a fraudulent debt within the meaning of subdivisions 2 and 4 of section 17 of the bankruptcy act. Pitcairn v. Scully (Common Pleas, Pa.), 62 Pittsb. Leg. J. 507, 33 Am. B. R. 870.

The transfer of property used as basis of credit after the credit was given does not amount to such fraud as to make the debt non-dischargeable. Gregory v. Pierce (Ia. Sup. Ct.), 44 Am. B. R. 36, 172 N. W. 288.

Fraudulent liabilities per se should be sharply distinguished from fiduciary liabilities, discussed later; though the latter class of liabilities always involves fraud. Under the former law, it was held that the fraud must exist at the inception of the debt.⁸⁹ Though the words there were "created by the fraud," the same doctrine is probably applicable now, provided the liability is within subdivision 2. Proving such a claim in the bankruptcy proceeding does not amount to a waiver of the exception.⁹⁰ Vested liens on property fraudulently kept from creditors in the bankruptcy proceedings are not discharged or abrogated.⁹¹ The burden of proof is upon the creditor who claims that his duly scheduled debt is excepted from the operation of the discharge in bankruptcy because of fraud.^{91a}

(4) PROPERTY OBTAINED BY FALSE PRETENSES OR FALSE REPRESENTATIONS.—Where a bankrupt has committed fraud consisting of obtaining property by "false pretenses or false representations," his discharge is barred. "Property" as here used has the meaning usually accorded to the word in similar statutes; it means something of substance;⁹² it includes money;⁹³ it does not judgment against a bankrupt which recites that the recovery was because of his fraud in obtaining certain goods is not discharged.

Fraud gist of action.—The New York Court of Appeals, in discussing the question of fraud, said: "As we interpret subdivision 2 of section 17 of the Bankruptcy Law, it does not limit the exception to common-law actions of fraud or deceit. The gist and gravamen of the action must have been the positive and intentional fraud of the bankrupt. The record presented must clearly show that such misconduct was the pith of the action, and it may not be dependent upon oral proof or other evidence outside of the record." O'Beirne v. Allegheny & Kinzua R. Co., 151 N. Y. 384, 43 N. E. 873.

Conclusiveness of judgment.—It should distinctly appear that the verdict upon which the judgment was based was the result of evidence showing the fraudulent transaction as alleged in the petition; and where there is no evidence in the record of fraudulent representations, and there has been a trial by jury, upon evidence and instructions presenting issues that did not necessarily involve fraud, it can not be presumed that the judgment was obtained in an action for fraud. Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Bryant (Ky. Ct. of App.), 149 Ky. 359, 28 Am. B. R. 867, 149 S. W. 830.

Deceit and fraud, in inducing the sale of a farm, for which a judgment was obtained in a State court, renders such judgment non-dischargeable. Matter of Shepardson (D. C., Vt.), 34 Am. B. R. 284, 220 Fed. 186; Forsyth v. Vehmeyer, 177 U. S. 177, 3 Am. B. R. 807, 44 L. Ed. 723.

able liens, do not purposely ignore or violate the terms or the spirit of the bankruptcy law, and no unlawful preference among creditors is sought by those asking such equitable relief, it may be afforded in appropriate proceedings." Robinson v. Tischler, 69 Fla. 77, 34 Am. B. R. 187, 67 So. 566.

^{91a} Burden of proof.—When under the pleadings and charge the creditor's judgment might be based upon contract or upon fraud, or upon both, and there is nothing but the pleading and charge from which to determine the fact, the creditor does not sustain the burden. Guindon v. Brusky (Minn. Sup. Ct.), 43 Am. B. R. 263, 170 N. W. 918.

⁹² See definition of "Property," under § 1, ante, p. 20.

Property includes things of substance and not services.—In the case of Gleason v. Thaw (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 782, 185 Fed. 345, the court said: "The language used in the seventeenth section of the Bankruptcy Act, to which we have already referred, by which liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses are exempted from the provable debts discharged in bankruptcy, are the usual and most general words for describing a specific crime. Their use in this connection dates back as far as the Statute of 30 George II, c. 34 (1757), and they have since then, so far as they define the crime, remained unchanged. 19 Cyc. 387. The same language, in substance, has been used in the statutes in this country, and where departed from, it is only by way of enumeration of certain kinds of property that may be included under the general designation. These enumerations all refer to substantive things—to a res—and in no case to which our attention has been called is anything included in the enumeration which approaches, in its description or definition, services rendered. Certainly under no proper and strict administration of the criminal law could any one be indicted under the general language of obtaining property under false pretenses, on the ground that services, whose performance has been induced by a false pretense, are property, within the meaning of the Act." The decision of the court in this case was followed by the second circuit in considering a case between the same parties involving the same facts. Gleason v. Thaw (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 473, 196 Fed. 359, affd. 236 U. S. 558, 34 Am. B. R. 177, 59 L. Ed. 717.

The acceptance and discount of a note of a defendant, even if induced by false representations, is not an obtaining of property, within the meaning of section 17. Carville v. Lane (Me. Sup. Ct.), 40 Am. B. R. 344, 101 Atl. 963.

include professional services.⁹⁴ It has been held that obtaining an indemnity bond by false statements or representations, is obtaining "credit" within the meaning of the rule, and a debt is created which is not dischargeable.⁹⁵ This provision includes positive fraud, or fraud in fact, as in other cases, involving moral turpitude or intentional wrong; implied fraud, or fraud in law which may exist without the imputation of bad faith or immorality is insufficient.⁹⁶ This bar will usually be available where the sale of goods on credit is brought about by false statements,⁹⁷ and cases arising under the new objection to discharge, based on the giving of materially false statements in writing, will be found valuable.⁹⁸ It must appear, however, that such representations were knowingly and fraudulently made,⁹⁹ and that they were relied on by the other party. It need not be shown that the false representations were made in writing.¹⁰⁰ A debt contracted under such circumstances as to render the bank-

Vehmeyer, 177 U. S. 177, 3 Am. B. R. 807, 44 L. Ed. 723, holding that a representation as to a fact, made knowingly, falsely, and fraudulently, for the purpose of obtaining money from another, and by means of which such money is obtained, creates a debt by means of a fraud involving moral turpitude and intentional wrong, and is not dischargeable in bankruptcy.

94. The exceptions to the operation of a discharge should be confined to those plainly expressed; and while much might be said in favor of extending these to liabilities incurred for services obtained by fraud, the language of the bankruptcy act does not go so far. Gleason v. Thaw, 236 U. S. 558, 34 Am. B. R. 177, 59 L. Ed. 717, affg. 28 Am. B. R. 473, 196 Fed. 359.

Ed., 723, the court held that "a representation as to a fact, made knowingly, falsely, and fraudulently, for the purpose of obtaining money from another, and by means of which such money is obtained, creates a debt by means of fraud involving moral turpitude and intentional wrong."

Implied fraud insufficient.—In order that a debt may not be released by a discharge because of fraud, it must be actually founded on the fraud. The mere fact that incidentally to the collection of a debt a sale of property is set aside as fraudulent, does not make the debt one created by fraud, nor prevent its being released by a discharge in bankruptcy. The mere fact that the defendant procured credit and promised to pay for ordinary current purchases of goods and subsequently failed to meet his obligation prior to the time he voluntarily went into bankruptcy will not bar a discharge. Brooks v. Pitts (Ga. Ct. of App.), 44 Am. B. R. 437, 100 S. E. 776.

Purchase of goods without intention to pay.—A false representation may consist in the purchasing of goods with no present purpose of paying for them, and in contemplation of a fraudulent insolvency. To buy goods without a present intention to pay is a false representation of one's intention. Therefore to buy goods without a present intention to pay will avoid a discharge. Atlanta Skirt Co. v. Jacobs (Ct. of App., Ga.), 8 Ga. App. 299, 25 Am. B. R. 895, 68 S. E. 1077. Where the sale of a flock of sheep is induced by the false and fraudulent representation of the buyer that he would receive a check by mail that day, which he would deliver to the seller, but did not, and never paid for the sheep which he converts to his own use, his discharge in bankruptcy does not release him from the debt. Rowell v. Eicker (Sup. Ct., Vt.), 79 Vt. 552, 18 Am. B. R. 651, 66 N. E. 569.

R. 708, 179 Fed. 676, holding that section 17-a of the bankruptcy act, providing that a discharge shall release a bankrupt from all of rupt liable to arrest upon the charge of obtaining money by false statements of facts will not be discharged.¹⁰¹ If suit is brought to recover on a contract, and an answer is interposed setting up a discharge, a reply alleging that the contract was based on "false pretenses and false representations," is inconsistent with the complaint and will not affect the discharge.¹⁰² A fraudulent representation by one partner will by law be imputed to the others, and the debt as to them will not, therefore, be discharged.¹⁰³ Where a liability against a bankrupt has been prosecuted to judgment, the record is decisive as to the character of the claim upon which the judgment is founded, and cannot be affected by oral evidence except in case of ambiguity.¹⁰⁴

(5) WILFUL AND MALICIOUS INJURIES TO THE PERSON OR PROPERTY OF ANOTHER.—(I) In general.—Here subdivision 2 stopped, prior to the amendatory act of 1903. Under it, much doubt arose as to whether certain judgments founded on moral delinquencies were dischargeable. The former conflict concerning the effect of a judgment for breach of promise of marriage accompanied by seduction is an instance.¹⁰⁵ Unaccompanied by seduction such a judgment is dischargeable.¹⁰⁶

(II) Wilful and malicious.—This provision contemplates something more restricted than malice in the broadest sense, and covers all cases in which the facts of intent and malice are judicially ascertained, however the act may be characterized by the allegations.¹⁰⁷ An injury to person or property is a malicious injury within this provision if it was intentional, wrongful and without just cause or excuse, even in the absence of hatred, spite or ill will.¹⁰⁸ The word "wilful" as here used means nothing more than inten-

his provable debts except such as are "liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses or false representations," is not affected by section 14-b(3), which makes the obtaining of property by means of a materially false statement in writing a ground for refusing a discharge. *Affid. sub. nom. 103. A false representation by one partner, by means of which property was obtained by the partnership, will in law be imputed to the other partners to the extent of holding them civilly liable for the debt and their discharge in bankruptcy will not discharge their liability as to such debt. *Frank v. The form of the action is immaterial. The court may resort to the entire record to determine the wrongful character of the act. Barbery v. Cohen (N. Y. App. Div.), 42 Am. B. R. 226, 183 App. Div. (N. Y.), 424.

Judgment by default for negligence.—Judgments by default entered upon a declaration in trespass charging that the defendant assaulted the plaintiff's wife by recklessly, carelessly and negligently running into her and knocking her down without alleging that the act was intentional, willful or malicious, are barred by the defendant's discharge in bankruptcy. Matter of Grout (Sup. Ct., Vt.), 13 Vt. 318, 33 Am. B. R. 789, 92 Atl. 646.

Liability for fraudulently receiving payment of note.—A claim by the payee of a note to whom the maker had transferred another note as security, based upon the fact that the maker of the first note failed to notify the maker of the collateral note of tional, while the malice here intended is nothing more than that disregard of duty which is involved in the intentional doing of a wilful act to the injury of another.¹⁰⁹ A wrongful act, done intentionally, without just cause or excuse is malicious, although actual malice involving ill-will or hatred of the person injured was not apparent.¹¹⁰ Thus the disposal of another's property without his knowledge or consent, done intentionally, in disregard of what one knows to be his duty, to the other's injury, is a wilful and malicious injury within the meaning of the subdivision.^{110a} It must be shown that the injury was wrongful and intentional.¹¹¹ Under this subdivision, as it now stands, it has been held that a court of bankruptcy may not determine for itself whether the injuries complained of were wilful and malicious, but is estopped by the judgment of another court on this question.¹¹²

the transfer thereof, but falsely represented that he still held it and received the payment thereof, is not one for obtaining property by false pretenses, and it cannot be said that the liability arose from wilful and malicious injuries to the property of the payee, within the meaning of section 17 of the bankruptcy act. First National Bank v. Bamforth (Vt. Sup. Ct.), 37 Am. B. R. 315, 96 Atl. 600.

109. "Wilful and malicious injury," in the bankruptcy act and everywhere in the law, does not necessarily involve hatred or ill will as a state of mind, but arises from "a wrongful act, done intentionally, without just cause or excuse." "In order to come within that meaning as a judgment for a wilful and malicious injury to person or property it is not necessary that the cause of action be based upon special malice, so that without it the action could not be maintained." *Tinker v. Conversion of stocks.—Where brokers hold stocks bought for a customer, as security for a balance due on the purchase price, and from time to time sell them to third persons without the knowledge of the owner, and continue to do so after they have realized enough to pay the balance due and apply the avails to their own purposes so that their acts constitute larceny, a claim for such conversion is not released by the broker's discharge in bankruptcy. *Kavanaugh v. (III) Judgments for personal injuries.—A judgment obtained for the alienation of a husband's affections is for a wilful and malicious injury to the person and property of another, and is not dischargeable;¹¹³ nor is a judgment in an action for negligent treatment by a surgeon;¹¹⁴ nor a judgment for slander;¹¹⁵ nor a judgment for a libel;¹¹⁶ nor a judgment for an assault and battery.¹¹⁷ A judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action for false imprisonment is not a "liability for wilful and malicious injury to the person," where the complaint contains no allegation of malice on the part of the defendant.¹¹⁸ A judgment entered upon a recognizance given by the bankrupt upon taking a poor debtor's oath after being arrested upon a judgment against him for assault is not released by his discharge in bankruptcy;¹¹⁹ nor is a judgment for costs awarded the defendant in an action for slander.¹²⁰ A judgment against a bankrupt for damages based on the value of an unexpired term of a lease to premises, the possession of which was retained by the bankrupt, the owner being wrongfully deprived of possession by force, threats and fear inspired thereby, is a liability for a "wilful and malicious injury to property," and is not dischargeable.¹²¹ A judgment for damages arising out of an automobile accident is dischargeable,^{121a} unless it is shown that it was caused by the wilful and intentional act of the defendant in reckless disregard of the rights of the plaintiff.^{121b}

(6) ALIMONY DUE OR TO BECOME DUE.—A discharge in bankruptcy does not release a bankrupt from liability for the payment of "alimony due or to become due."¹²² There were many cases prior to the amendment of 1903. Some held that alimony due or to grow due was dischargeable;¹²³ others that alimony due before the bankruptcy was barred by the discharge;¹²⁴ some implied that alimony to accrue was not; while the majority of cases held to the broader view that alimony, whether due or not, was not a debt at all, but a duty, liquidated in terms of money for convenience only, and, therefore, neither provable nor dischargeable.¹²⁵ In its ultimate analysis, the question

What is alimony?—A decree of divorce awarding a wife $50 per month, as alimony, payable monthly, or en masse, at the option of the husband, in the sum of $5,000, is an allowance for alimony and a claim therefor is not barred by the husband's discharge. Egbers v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co. (Wash. Sup. Ct.), 40 Am. B. R. 380, 167 Pac. 1073.

Effect of prior contention by wife that award was not alimony.—The fact that a wife, in a proceeding to modify a decree awarding her alimony, took the position that the award was not alimony but was a part of a property settlement, and was a fixed award or judgment, does not estop her from subsequently contending that it was not discharged in bankruptcy. Egbers v. Northern Pacific Ry. Co. (Wash. Sup. Ct.), 40 Am. B. R. 380, 167 Pac. 1073.

In New York alimony in arrears and unpaid before the filing of a petition was not covered by the discharge. Malsner v. Malsner, 62 N. Y. App. Div. 296, 6 Am. B. R. 295, 70 N. Y. Supp. 1107. But a judgment recovered in this State for alimony due under a decree of divorce granted in another State, is simply a money judgment, and was held a provable and dischargeable debt. In re Williams' Estate (Surr. turned on what alimony is, a debt or a duty, and reference was usually had to the decision of the State granting the decree. Thus, it was thought, prior to the amendment of 1903, the Kentucky rule, which declared alimony both past and future merely a debt,¹²⁶ was not affected by Audubon v. Shufeldt,¹²⁷ wherein the Supreme Court held a judgment of the local courts of the District of Columbia awarding alimony not affected by the defendant's discharge.¹²⁸ Indeed, the national scope of this opinion was questioned, both the court below and the Supreme Court being, it was thought, without jurisdiction to determine the effect of the discharge in the proceeding in which it was granted.

(7) MAINTENANCE OR SUPPORT OF WIFE OR CHILD.—The broad principle that obligations to the sovereign are not discharged seems to exempt support or bastardy orders from the general rule that all provable disabilities are discharged. A husband's obligation to support his divorced wife under an agreement to pay her an annuity, "during her life, or until she remarries," is not a provable debt against the husband's estate in bankruptcy, and is not released by his discharge.¹²⁹ This clause refers only to the involuntary liability under the common law for support of wife and children, and to any one who relieves their want. It does not refer to liabilities for goods purchased by a husband or parent and used by wife or child;¹³⁰ nor does it apply to medical attendance furnished upon the express or implied contract of the husband or parent to pay therefor, provided there is no breach of duty on the part of the husband or parent.¹³¹ The reported cases are few,¹³² but the

A judgment for alimony included in his schedules is not discharged by a husband's discharge in bankruptcy, and the wife is not precluded from objecting to the cancellation of such judgment, upon the ground that a discharge has been granted, merely because she may have other remedies which she may pursue in the State court upon the order awarding alimony. Maier v. Shufeldt, 181 U. S. 575, 5 Am. B. R. 829, 45 L. Ed. 1009, and held that a final judgment for alimony entered in another State upon a decree for an absolute divorce is a provable and dischargeable debt. It was contended that the United States Supreme Court based its decision upon the fact that a decree for alimony is not a final judgment or decree; but a decree for alimony entered in a court in another State, being held final by the courts of North Carolina, the reasoning of the United States Supreme Court is not conclusive in that State. In Wetmore v. Wetmore, 196 U. S. 68, 13 Am. B. R. 1, 49 L. Ed. 390, the Supreme Court in effect held that the amendment of 1903, excepting alimony from a discharge in bankruptcy, is merely declaratory of the law as it previously existed.

efficacy of the principle is not to be doubted, even without the affirmative declaration of the amendatory act of 1903. Since then, such obligations are not affected by a discharge in bankruptcy.

(8) SEDUCTION OF AN UNMARRIED FEMALE.—There was sharp conflict of authority under the law as it existed prior to the amendment of 1903 in respect to whether in such a case a judgment was barred. It seemed to turn on whether, under the laws of the State, the gravamen of the suit was loss of services or wilful wrong.¹³³ Thus, in New York, the father is the suitor, and the injury can hardly be termed wilful and malicious as to him.¹³⁴ In other States, the daughter may sue, and, though it is always doubtful whether that which is consented to can be wilful and malicious, the weight of authority was against discharging liabilities to her of this character.¹³⁵ Were there nothing in the statute that seemed to refer to this class of wrongs, the broad principle that mere liabilities resting entirely in tort are not affected by bankruptcy would probably save them from the effect of a discharge, though the same question seems to have arisen under the English act of 1883, which was silent on the point.¹³⁶ Each country has been forced to remedial legislation. Our amendatory law of 1903, like the English act of 1890,¹³⁷ has now settled the question. Such liabilities, whether to father or to daughter, are hereafter excepted from the effect of a discharge.¹³⁸ But liabilities of this character need not be reduced to judgment to be within this exception, as in England.

(9) CRIMINAL CONVERSATION.—Here the same difficulty existed. It is only by a stretch of meaning that a judgment of this character can be held "an injury to the person or property" of the husband, however heinous be the wrong.¹³⁹ However, the law was settled in New York in favor of the non-dischargeability of such a judgment, and by the court of last resort.¹⁴⁰ On principle, this conclusion is eminently right; as an interpretation of mere words, it may be doubted. The question has, however, been determined, the country over, by the amendatory act of 1903. Liabilities of this character are not barred by a discharge. As the law now stands no liability growing out of breach of moral duty, whether in connection with the domestic relations or otherwise, save breach of promise of marriage, is affected by the judgment debtor's discharge.

(10) OTHER WILFUL AND MALICIOUS INJURIES.—It is well settled that, aside from the liabilities excepted by the amendatory act of 1903, obligations claimed to be within this subdivision must be (a) both wilful and malicious injuries and (b) to the person or property of another.¹⁴¹ Such, it is thought, would be a slander or a libel, and probably a malicious prosecution or an assault, and the cases contra under former laws are no longer controlling;¹⁴² but a liability for trespass or for arrest due to negligence, even if after liquidation, is not. Each case will depend on its own facts. However, as this subdivision tends to impair the bankrupt's remedy, the statute being highly remedial, these exceptions should be so construed as to affect that remedy only so far as is necessarily required by its express terms.

c. Debts not scheduled.—(1) IN GENERAL.—There is a notable departure in the provisions of subdivision 3 of this section from the weight of authority under the former law. Jurisdiction of the creditor now depends, not on the petition and the adjudication,¹⁴³ but on the facts, either that the debt was "duly scheduled in time for proof and allowance,"¹⁴⁴ or, if not, that the "creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy." The cases thus far are uniform in interpreting the words of this subdivision to mean what they say.¹⁴⁵ The Supreme Court has also impliedly sustained the constitutionality of these provisions.¹⁴⁶

(2) NAME AND ADDRESS OF CREDITOR.—Extreme exactness must be used in describing the creditor by name, or he will not be "duly scheduled;"¹⁴⁷ the judgment note with a waiver of exemption, does not present it in bankruptcy proceedings, although he has knowledge of such proceedings, he cannot thereafter enforce judgment on the note. Claster v. Soble, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 631, 10 Am. B. R. 446.

The purpose of this subdivision was to remedy a defect in the previous bankruptcy act by which a debt was discharged, even though the name of the creditor was omitted from the schedules, provided such omission was not willful nor fraudulent, even though the creditor had no notice nor knowledge of the proceedings. Broadway Trust Co. v. Mannheim, 47 N. Y. Misc. 415, 14 Am. B. R. 122, 95 N. Y. Supp. 93; Tyrrel v. Hammerstein, 33 N. Y. Misc. 505, 6 Am. B. R. 430, 67 N. Y. Supp. 717.

More want of notice or knowledge will not prevent the discharge becoming operative if the debt was duly scheduled. Travis v. Sama (Ga. Ct. of App.), 43 Am. B. R. 557, 93 S. E. 239.

An indorser of a note not scheduled is subrogated to the rights of the payee after he pays the note. Calmenson v. Moudry (Sup. Ct. Minn.), 39 Am. B. R. 624, 162 N. W. 1078.

What constitutes "duly scheduled."—The claim of a creditor named "Custard" is not duly scheduled under the name of "Castard," and is not affected by the bankrupt's discharge. Custard v. Wigerson (Sup. Ct., Wis.), 130 Wis. 412, 17 Am. B. R. 337, 110 N. W. 263. Where a creditor's address in the schedules was given "Leader Building, 5th avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.," instead of "Maeder Building, 5th avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.," which is his proper address, it was held to be insufficient. Reed v. Dippell (Ct. of Common Pleas, Pa.), 61 Pa. Dist. 126, 17 Am. B. R. 371. Where the schedule gives the address of creditors as "317 Main street, New York city," there is no presumption that notices so addressed reached them at "317 Main street, Cincinnati, Ohio." Wertheimer v. Howard, 47 N. Y. Misc. 145, 14 Am. B. R. 547, 98 N. Y. Supp. 518. Where a surviving partner schedule of the residence of a creditor as "unknown," when it could have been ascertained by the exercise of reasonable diligence, would prevent a discharge of the debt.¹⁴⁸ A failure to use due efforts to learn the street number of a judgment creditor, will deprive the petitioner of the right to a discharge of such judgment.¹⁴⁹ The act itself does not require the street number to be inserted. The cases holding this essential were decided under bankruptcy rules in force in the district where the bankruptcy occurs. Both as to the use of initials and the omission of a street address the act must be given a general construction, as in the light of the fact that letters directed to persons by their initials are constantly, properly and promptly delivered in the largest cities of the country, even when the street number is not given.¹⁵⁰ It is clear also that where the failure to schedule the actual owner of the debt is correctly described in the schedules as the creditor, and had actual notice, although his residence was incorrectly stated in the schedules, his debt will be discharged. Kaufman v. Schreier, 108 N. Y. App. Div. 298, 17 Am. B. R. 314, 95 N. Y. Supp. 729.

In Liesum v. Krauss, 35 N. Y. Misc. 376, 71 N. Y. Supp. 1022, the creditor's name was Liesum, but he was scheduled as Liesman, and his debt was held not discharged. See also Columbia Bank v. Birkett, 9 Am. B. R. 481, 174 N. Y. 112; affd. sub nom Birkett v. Columbia Bank, 195 U. S. 345, 12 Am. B. R. 691, in which case the bankrupts had scheduled a debt represented by their promissory note in the name of the payee, when they knew it was held by a discount bank, which had no notice or actual knowledge of the bankruptcy proceedings prior to the bankrupt's discharge; it was held that the bank was not bound thereby and could recover on the note against the bankrupts.

Where a bankrupt in his schedule of creditors, in scheduling a debt, gave as the name of a creditor, "C. Ferger," instead of "Charles Ferger," and his residence merely as "Indianapolis," and the proof showed that the information furnished in the schedules did not result in the creditor's receiving notice of the bankruptcy proceedings, the debt was not duly scheduled so as to be discharged. Kreitlein v. Ferger (Ind. App. Ct.), 52 Ind. App. 199, 28 Am. B. R. 908, 97 N. E. 819, 98 N. E. 1005, revd. in 238 U. S. 21, 34 Am. B. R. 862, 59 L. Ed. 1184, holding that the failure to give the street address was not fatal to the validity of the schedules.

As to failure to schedule name and residence of receiver of corporation appointed in action to enforce liability of stockholder, where names of creditors are scheduled, see Longfield v. Minnesota Sav. Bank, 95 Minn. 54, 14 Am. B. R. 413, 103 N. W. 706.

The use of ditto marks to indicate the residence of a creditor is ineffectual. Haack v. Theise, 51 N. Y. Misc. 3, 16 Am. B. R. 699, 99 N. Y. Supp. 905. The listing of the name of a creditor by an initial instead of the full Christian name is not such a defect as to deprive the bankrupt of a discharge of the debt. Kreitlein v. Ferger, 238

U. S. 31, 34 Am. B. R. 862, 59 L. Ed. 1184, revd. 52 Ind. App. 199, 28 Am. B. R. 908, 97 N. E. 819.

Failure to schedule equitable assignee.—A discharge in bankruptcy will bar an action on a judgment by an equitable assignee thereof, though said equitable assignee was not scheduled in the list of creditors, where it appears that the original judgment creditor was scheduled and received notice and that the assignee did not inform the debtor that he had acquired the judgment creditor's interest in the judgment. Morency v. Landry (N. H. Sup. Ct.), 45 Am. B. R. 43, 108 Atl. 853.

148. Schiller v. Weinstein, 47 N. Y. Misc. 622, 15 Am. B. R. 183, 94 N. Y. Supp. 763.

Failure to state that address was unknown.—A debt arising on a promissory note is not discharged where the schedules failed to state the name and address of the holder of the note or that the address was unknown and the addresses of the persons who were accommodated and the place where the debt was contracted and whether the liability was joint, several or individual. Hazard Mfg. Co. v. Brown (Ct. of Common Pleas, Pa.), 25 Am. B. R. 903.

Judgment creditor scheduled as unknown.—Where a bankrupt in scheduling a judgment set forth the residence and occupation of the judgment creditors as "Unknown—California," though he had actual knowledge of their residence and post-office address, and the judgment creditors did not learn of the bankruptcy proceedings until long after bankrupt's discharge, the judgment was not properly scheduled so as to come within the terms of bankrupt's discharge, and a motion to cancel said judgment because of the discharge should be denied. Miller v. Guasti, 226 U. S. 170, 29 Am. B. R. 201, 57 L. Ed. 173, affg. 203 N. Y. 269, 26 Am. B. R. 797, 96 N. E. 418.

149. Cagliostro v. Indelli, 53 N. Y. Misc. 44, 17 Am. B. R. 685, 102 N. Y. Supp. 918, holding that where a bankrupt schedules the residence of judgment creditor as "Mulberry street, New York City," and, owing to failure to give the street number, the creditor, who had resided in one house in said street for more than ten years last past, receives no notice of the bankruptcy proceedings, and denies any knowledge thereof, the claim will not be discharged.

150. Failure to give street and number.—The act itself does not require the street number of a creditor to be given, and an omission thereof is not in itself sufficient to withhold the privilege of discharge in respect to the creditor's debt. Kreitlein v. Ferger, 238 U. S. 31, 34 Am. B. R. 862, in which the court discusses the improper scheduling in debts as follows: "There are was intentional, such debt will not be discharged,¹⁵¹ but not if there was actual notice.¹⁵²

(3) NOTICE OR KNOWLEDGE; PROOF.—A written notice need not be served upon the creditor, but actual knowledge is sufficient, and facts occurring before or after the commencement of the proceedings are competent to establish such knowledge.¹⁵³ "Actual knowledge of the proceedings" contemplated by this section is a knowledge in time to avail a creditor of the benefits of the law—in time to give him an equal opportunity with other creditors—not a knowledge that may come so late as to deprive him of participation in the administration of the affairs of the estate or to deprive him of dividends;¹⁵⁴ and it has been held that actual knowledge of an attorney employed to collect a judgment against the bankrupt is sufficient.¹⁵⁵ Knowledge obtained from reading the newspapers and from verbal communication has been held to be sufficient.¹⁵⁶ Mere casual conversation with a disinterested party in which a mortgagee is informed that the mortgagor has gone into bankruptcy, does not constitute notice so as to relieve the mortgagor of his obligations under the mortgage, where it appears that the claim was not scheduled.¹⁵⁷ It has been held that the burden of proof is upon the bankrupt to establish the fact that the debt was duly scheduled or that the creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings.¹⁵⁸ But the Supreme Court in a recent case has stated only a few instances, under the Bankruptcy Act, in which the courts have had occasion to deal with the subject, or to construe section 7(8),—requiring claims to be duly listed,—in connection with section 17, which provides that a discharge shall release the debtor from all provable debts 'except such as . . . (3) have not been duly scheduled in time for proof and allowance, with the name of the creditor if known to the bankrupt, unless such creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy . . .'

"It has been held that a claim is not duly scheduled if the name of the creditor is improperly spelled, Custard v. Wigderson, 180 Wis. 416, 17 Am. B. R. 337, 110 N. W. 263, 10 Ann. Cas. 740; or if the street number is given, but the name of the city of his residence is omitted, Troy v. Rudnick, 198 Mass. 563, 85 N. E. 177; or if the creditor is listed as residing in one city when he actually lives in another, Marshall v. English-American Loan & T. Co., 127 Ga. 376, 56 S. E. 449; or if the creditor's name is given, but the schedule falsely recites 'Residence unknown,' Birkett v. Columbia Bank, 195 U. S. 345, 12 Am. B. R. 691, 49 L. Ed. 231; Miller v. Guasti, 226 U. S. 170, 29 Am. B. R. 201, 57 L. Ed. 173; Parker v. Murphy, 215 Mass. 72, 31 Am. B. R. 646, 102 N. E. 86. These decisions, however, were based on extrinsic proof and on a finding that, as a matter of fact, the name was misspelled, or the creditor's residence was improperly listed, or that the bankrupt knew the creditor's address and falsely stated that the residence was 'unknown.' None of them holds that, as a matter of law, the discharge was rendered inoperative merely because the street number was not given in the schedule."

Burden of proof.—A bankrupt has the burden of proving a debt was duly scheduled and that the creditor had either statutory or other actual notice of the bankruptcy proceedings, and if there is no evidence of scheduling the debt, and the creditor had no actual notice of the bankruptcy proceedings, the bankrupt is not discharged. *Bogart v. 160. Kreitlein v. Ferger, 238 U. S. 21, 34 Am. B. R. 862, 50 L. Ed. 1184. It may be doubted whether the court in this case intended to lay down the rule that where a schedule omitted the creditor's name, the burden rests upon the plaintiff to show that he had no notice, for the

that where the bankrupt is sued on a debt existing at the time of filing the petition, the introduction of the order of discharge, containing a recital that the bankrupt has been discharged from all provable debts, "excepting such as are by law excepted from the operation of a discharge in bankruptcy,"¹⁵⁹ makes out a prima facie defense, the burden being then cast upon the plaintiff to show that, because of the nature of the claim, failure to give notice or other statutory reason, the debt sued on was by law excepted from the operation of the discharge.¹⁶⁰

d. Fiduciary debts.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The language of the present bankruptcy acts as to debts created while acting in a "fiduciary capacity" is not materially different from that of the act of 1867, and the same rules of construction should be applied.¹⁶¹ Manifestly the words "were created by his fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation, or defalcation while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity" refer to such technical trusts as were included in the phrase "fiduciary debts" so frequently used in cases under the former law,¹⁶² and not trusts which the law implies from the contract.¹⁶³ Fraud of officers or of persons in a fiduciary capacity is what is here meant, and not the ordinary fraud of an ordinary debtor in so disposing of his property as to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors.¹⁶⁴ The distinction between court says: "The authorities, however, differ as to whether, under section 17 (3), the burden is on the plaintiff to show that he had no notice, or on the bankrupt to show that the creditor had notice in time to have proved his claim and had it allowed. Steele v. Thalheimer, 74 Ark. 518, 86 S. W. 306; Van Norman v. Young, 228 Ill. 430, 81 N. E. 1060; Alling v. Straka, 118 Ill. App. 184; Hallagan v. Dowell, 139 N. W. 883; *Parker v. In view of the scope of his testimony that he did not know of the bankruptcy, it is not necessary in this case to discuss that mooted point, unless it must be held that, because of the failure to set out the number of Ferger's house in Indianapolis, his claim was not duly scheduled." See also Morency v. Laundry (N. H. Sup. Ct.), 45 Am. B. R. 43, 108 Atl. 855. Compare Smith v. Hill (Mass. Sup. Ct.), 43 Am. B. R. 186, 122 N. E. 310, wherein the court said: "A discharge in bankruptcy under the terms of section 17 of the Bankruptcy Act is a bar to debts because creditors have had an opportunity to be heard in the bankruptcy courts upon the various matters there in litigation, have had the privilege of proving their claims and of sharing in the distribution of the assets of their debtors. Their claims thus have become res judicata. This result ensues from the basic proposition that the bankruptcy court acquired jurisdiction of the creditor, who thus has had his day in court. But if the creditor, through no fault of his own, but wholly through the fault of the debtor upon whom is cast that duty by the law, has no notice or knowledge of the opportunity afforded him to appear in the bankruptcy court, there appears to be no natural justice in holding him bound by its adjudications. He is a stranger to the proceedings. Ordinarily one who asserts the binding force of a judgment by any court must show jurisdiction by that court over the person sought to be charged with the force of the judgment. He assumes the burden of proof on this point.

Since the discharge is for the benefit of the debtor and not of the creditor, there would seem to be a defect in the law if the burden of proving negative consequences arising from the default of the debtor should be borne by the creditor, and not by the debtor. We think a correct construction of the law does not lead to such a result.

There is nothing in Kreitlein v. Ferger, 238 U. S. 21, 34 Am. B. R. 862, 35 Sup. Ct. 635, 59 L. Ed. 1184, as we understand it, at all inconsistent with this conclusion."

mere frauds in fact and wrongs committed by private or public trustees was not so clearly indicated in the former law. Subdivision 2, with the limitations already indicated, now has to do with the one; subdivision 4 with the other. The words used in the act of 1841, "debts contracted in consequence of a defalcation as a public officer or executor, administrator, guardian or trustee, or while acting in any fiduciary capacity" are very similar to and illuminate those in the present law.

(2) CONSTRUCTION OF WORDS "WHILE ACTING AS AN OFFICER OR IN ANY FIDUCIARY CAPACITY."—Some difficulty formerly existed as to the construction of the qualifying words "while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity." It was held in a number of cases that such words only applied to a "defalcation," and did not limit "fraud," so that under this subdivision any debt created by fraud could not be discharged.¹⁶⁵ But the Supreme Court in the case of Crawford v. Burke,¹⁶⁶ has established a contrary doctrine, and the true interpretation is that such words qualify and limit each of the words "fraud," "embezzlement" and "misappropriation," as well as the word "defalcation."¹⁶⁷

¹⁶⁷. The limitation of the application of this subdivision to fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation, or defalcation of the bankrupt while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity is not according to the decision in some jurisdictions. For instance, in the case of Crawford v. Burke, 201 Ill. 581, 11 Am. B. R. 15, 66 N. E. 833, it was held that the exception contained in the fourth subdivision applied to debts fraudulently created where no judgment had been obtained, or to those created by the embezzlement of the bankrupt regardless of the fact that he was not acting as an officer or in a fiduciary capacity. This case has been reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States, reported 195 U. S. 176, 12 Am. B. R. 659, 49 L. Ed. 147. In the case of Watertown Carriage Co. v. Hall, 176 N. Y. 313, 11 Am. B. R. 15, it was held that a complaint alleging that the defendant wrongfully and fraudulently embezzled and misappropriated the plaintiff's money stated a cause of action to which the discharge of the defendant in bankruptcy was no defense; the court cited in support of its contention the case of Crawford v. Burke, 201 Ill. 581, 11 Am. B. R. 15, 66 N. E. 833. In the case of Frey v. Torrey, 79 N. Y. App. Div. 166, 8 Am. B. R. 196, 75 N. Y. Supp. 40; affd. on opinion below, 175 N. Y. 501, it was held that the words "While acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity," do not qualify the words "fraud,"

"embezzlement," and "misappropriation," but only the word "defalcation." This case was in effect overruled by Crawford v. Burke, 195 U. S. 176, 12 Am. B. R. 659, 49 L. Ed. 147, which held that such words qualified "fraud," "embezzlement" and "misappropriation," as well as "defalcation." Tindle v. Birkett, 183 N. Y. 267, 15 Am. B. R. 179, affd. 205 U. S. 183, 18 Am. B. R. 121, 51 L. Ed. 762; First Nat. Bank v. Bamforth (Vt. Sup. Ct.), 37 Am. B. R. 315, 96 Atl. 600.

The words "embezzlement" or "misappropriation" may not be construed independently of "in a fiduciary capacity." In re Ennis & Stoppani (D. C., N. Y.), 22 Am. B. R. 679, 171 Fed. 755.

The word "defalcation" is broader than "embezzlement" or "misappropriation," and neither class of debts so created should be construed out of the section. In re Butts (D. C., N. Y.), 10 Am. B. R. 16, 120 Fed. 960.

Fiduciary capacity.—An indebtedness of a bankrupt arising from the embezzlement or misappropriation of the funds of a national bank, while he was an officer thereof, is incurred in a "fiduciary capacity." Harper v. Rankin (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 15 Am. B. R. 608, 141 Fed. 626, affg. 13 Am. B. R. 430, 133 Fed. 970. In Hyde & Sons v. Lesser, 95 N. Y. App. Div. 320, 12 Am. B. R. 659 (note), 87 N. Y. Supp. 878, it was held that a discharge is not a release from liability for fraud, though such fraud was not perpetrated while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity.

C., N. Y.), 16 Am. B. R. 690, 153 Fed. 910, holding that there may be some doubt as to whether the term "officer" applies to any officer, including an officer of a corporation.

Meaning of word "officer."—In the case of In re Harper (D. C., Va.), 13 Am. B. R. 430, 133 Fed. 970, the court said: "While the question has not, so far as I am advised, been decided, it seems to me that the change in phraseology from 'public officer' to 'officer' shows an intent to change the meaning of the law in this respect. For authority in supporting this view, we need go no further back than to the language so recently used by the Supreme Court in the case of Crawford v. Burke: Our own view, however, is that a change in phraseology creates a presumption of a change in intent, and the Congress would not have used such different language in section 17 from that used in section 33 of the Act of March 2, 1867, c. 14, Stat. 533, without thereby intending a change of meaning. The substitution of the word 'officer' for the phrase 'public officer' cannot properly be considered unintentional. The exact phraseology of such legislation is of too great importance to justify such a presumption. The change of language, therefore, evidenced some change of meaning, and I have been unable to ascribe to it any other change of meaning than to include officers of private corporations. The word 'officer' is clearly of broader meaning than the words 'public officer.' That a director and vice-president of a private corporation, such as a national banking association, is an 'officer' of such corporation not only in popular language, but in the language of almost countless judicial decisions and law text books, and the acts of Congress will not be disputed."

clearly refers to wrongs committed by such private trustees as attorneys,¹⁷⁴ executors and administrators,¹⁷⁵ guardians,¹⁷⁶ and trustees in general.¹⁷⁷ The debt, however, should be due from the trustee, executor, administrator, or guardian in his official capacity.¹⁷⁸ It has been held that the "fiduciary capacity" here referred to relates to that of a trustee of an express trust.¹⁷⁹ It relates to a technical trust, only, and has no reference to an implied trust.¹⁸⁰ In order to bring a debt within this exception the fiduciary relation must have existed previously to or independently of the particular transaction from which the debt arises;¹⁸¹ it does not embrace debts arising out of a particular transaction conducted by an agent.¹⁸² When a partnership is dissolved by the death of one of the partners the survivor becomes a trustee and holds the partnership moneys in a "fiduciary capacity" for the representatives of the deceased.¹⁸³ But it is well settled that the sureties on the bonds of such

R. 690, 163 Fed. 910, in which Holt, District Judge, says: "The authorities establish that the phrase 'while acting as an officer or in any fiduciary capacity' qualify all the preceding words 'fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation or defalcation,' and do not simply refer to the last word 'defalcation,' and that the 'fiduciary capacity' referred to in this section relates to that of a trustee of an express trust."

Agent to collect funds.—A discharge in bankruptcy does not release an agent from liability to account for moneys collected upon certain notes and mortgages entrusted to him in a fiduciary capacity for collection. Williams v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. (Ala. Sup. Ct.), 182 Ala. 413, 31 Am. B. R. 64, 62 So. 755.

But see American Agri. Chemical Co. v. Berry (Me. Sup. Ct.), 110 Me. 528, 31 Am. B. R. 142, 87 Atl. 218, holding that where a bankrupt has failed to pay or account for fertilizer shipped to him for sale under a contract providing that he would hold the proceeds of sales and goods remaining unsold "in trust" and separate for the settlement of his account, his liability is not created "in a fiduciary capacity" so as to be excepted from his discharge.

180. First National Bank v. Bamforth (Vt. Sup. Ct.), 37 Am. B. R. 315, 96 Atl. 600.

The term "fiduciary capacity," as used in the bankruptcy act, applies to technical trusts, and not to those arising by implication of law from the contract of parties. Martin v. Starrett, 97 Nebr. 653, 34 Am. B. R. 220, 151 N. W. 154.

182. Mere agency insufficient to show fiduciary relation.—An agent intrusted by his principal with beer to deliver to laborers under his supervision, and, after deducting the purchase price thereof from their wages, to turn the same over to such principal, does not act in a "fiduciary capacity" so as to except from his discharge in bankruptcy a claim for money so collected by him and converted to his own use. In re Camelo (D. C., N. Y.), 28 Am. B. R. 353, 195 Fed. 632; Knott v. Putnam (D. C., Vt.), 6 Am. B. R. 80, 107 Fed. 907; Bryant v. Kenyon, 127 Mich. 152, 6 Am. B. R. 237, 86 N. W. 531, 53 L. R. A. 801. "In all cases of agency there is trust and confidence reposed, as indeed there is in all sales on credit; but the bankruptcy law refers to those technical trusts such as grow out of the relation of executor, administrator, guardian, trustee and the like." trustees are not bound to a fiduciary obligation, and a discharge of the surety will be an available bar.¹⁸⁴ On the other hand, partners¹⁸⁵ and bankers,¹⁸⁶ like agents, factors,¹⁸⁷ and commissionmen, do not usually act in a fiduciary capacity. After a discharge in bankruptcy the burden of proving that the debt was created by fraud, or by one acting in a fiduciary capacity, is on the plaintiff.¹⁸⁸

IV. PLEADING DISCHARGE.

a. In general.—This subject is discussed elsewhere.¹⁸⁹ A discharge being only available in bar, it must be regularly pleaded.¹⁹⁰ Under the former law, the method was prescribed.¹⁹¹ Now, though there is no certificate, any form of plea corresponding to the practice of the court in which it is entered will be sufficient. A certified copy of the order of discharge or confirming the composition, with brief allegations identifying it and fixing the time, is the usual method.¹⁹² A reply or replication to an answer setting up a discharge, as that the debt sued on is for fraud, is not necessary in the code States; proof of that fact may be made without such a plea.¹⁹³ It must appear that the liability pleaded against existed at the time of the bankruptcy. A discharge can only be pleaded by the bankrupt or his privies in title.¹⁹⁴

b. As dependent on time.—If the suit is pending at the time of bankruptcy, it may be stayed until the discharge is granted.¹⁹⁵ If not stayed and a judgment is entered before discharge, the discharge may be availed of as a bar to further remedies on the judgment.¹⁹⁶ The same is true if the action is begun

42, holding that, where complainant's intestate, immediately after having deposited with defendant the sum of $500, as and for his share of the capital of a proposed partnership between them, was taken ill and died within a few days, and pending his sickness defendant deposited the money to his own credit in the bank and, after the death of the intestate, converted the money to his own use, the defendant held the money in a "fiduciary capacity."

The implied trust relation existing between partners, under which their liabilities to each other must be determined, does not bring their affairs within the definition of the excepted term "fiduciary." Gee v. Gee, 84 Minn. 384, 7 Am. B. R. 500. The words "fiduciary capacity" as used in this subdivision refer to technical or express trusts, and exclude the relationship of agents, brokers and partners to funds held generally by them in such capacities. *Karger v. Stay of further proceedings under judgment.—A judgment recovered against a bankrupt after proceedings in bankruptcy and before his discharge is annulled thereby.

after the bankruptcy. If the suit is commenced after the discharge, a stay cannot be granted, and the discharge itself must be pleaded.¹⁹⁷ Where, however, the cause is on appeal when the discharge becomes available, it usually will not act as a bar, though this depends on the practice and law of each State.¹⁹⁸ The usual method of pleading where the discharge was not available in time is by motion to open default and for leave to interpose a plea in bar by answer original or supplemental.¹⁹⁹ Such an application is addressed to the discretion of the court and may be denied, if there has been a long delay in making it,²⁰⁰ or on jurisdictional grounds. It will not be granted where the judgment antedates the bankruptcy and then resulted in a vested lien.²⁰¹

V. REVIVAL OF DISCHARGED DEBT BY NEW PROMISE.

This is the converse of failure to assert a discharge in bar. A debt discharged is not a debt paid. The moral obligation remains, and is a sufficient consideration for a new promise to pay,²⁰² but such promise must have been made after the discharge in bankruptcy and not in conformity to a prior and secret agreement.^{202a} An oral promise will be sufficient, unless a written promise is required by local statute.²⁰³ Whether oral or in writing, it must be definite, express, distinct, and unambiguous.²⁰⁴ It would not be sufficient to make a and he has the absolute right, if not guilty of laches, to have further proceedings thereon perpetually enjoined, for he had no opportunity to plead in bar a discharge which had not then been granted. On the other hand, where the judgment is recovered after the discharge has been granted, no matter when the action was begun, it is valid and enforceable, for the bankrupt has had his opportunity to plead in bar his discharge. Crocker v. Bergh, 118 Minn. 316, 34 Am. B. R. 190, 136 N. W. 737.

A discharged bankrupt may be relieved of a judgment rendered against him prior to his discharge: (1), by motion in the court rendering the judgment for a perpetual stay of execution; (2), by motion to quash any process issued thereon. Therefore, the bankrupt has the right to reasonably move to quash a writ of garnishment, but the garnishee has not. Alabama Great Southern Ry. v. Crawley (Miss. Sup. Ct.), 43 Am. B. Fraud of plaintiff.—It is a good defense to show that the new promise was induced by fraud on the part of the plaintiff. Brashears v. Combs (Ct. of App. Ky.), 39 Am. B. R. 98, 192 S. W. 482.

New promise to pay; consideration.—Although the moral obligation of a bankrupt to pay a discharged debt is a sufficient consideration for a promise to pay, a cause of action rests upon the new promise, and not upon the old debt; the statute of limitations against joint obligors is not affected by a new promise of the bankrupt, because they are only liable on the old debt. Polk v. Stephens (Ark. Sup. Ct.), 118 Ark. 438, 35 Am. B. R. 186, 176 S. W. 689.

principal, does not remain in effect after the agent's discharge in bankruptcy from such previous indebtedness, so that its continued compliance could be thereafter enforced; but so long as the parties, by subsequent acquiescence in its terms and performance of its conditions, elect to treat the contract as still subsisting, they are bound by its provisions. *Fairmount Creamery Co. v. SECTION EIGHTEEN.

PROCESS, PLEADINGS, AND ADJUDICATIONS.

§ 18. Process, Pleadings, and Adjudications.—a Upon the filing of a petition for involuntary bankruptcy, service thereof, with a writ of subpœna, shall be made upon the person therein named as defendant in the same manner that service of such process is now had upon the commencement of a suit in equity in the courts of the United States, except that it shall be returnable within fifteen days, unless the judge shall for cause fix a longer time; but in case personal service cannot be made, then notice shall be given by publication in the same manner and for the same time as provided by law for notice by publication in suits¹ *to enforce a legal or equitable lien in courts of the United States, *except that, unless the judge shall otherwise direct, the order shall be published not more than once a week for two consecutive weeks, and the return day shall be ten days after the last publication unless the judge shall for cause fix a longer time.

b The bankrupt, or any creditor, may appear and plead to the petition within† five days after the return day, or within such further time as the court may allow.

c All pleadings setting up matters of fact shall be verified under oath.

d If the bankrupt, or any of his creditors, shall appear, within the time limited, and controvert the facts alleged in the petition, the judge shall determine, as soon as may be, the issues presented by the pleadings, without the intervention of a jury, except in cases where a jury trial is given by this act, and make the adjudication or dismiss the petition.

e If on the last day within which pleadings may be filed none are filed by the bankrupt or any of his creditors, the judge shall on the next day, if present, or as soon thereafter as practicable, make the adjudication or dismiss the petition.

f If the judge is absent from the district, or the division of the district in which the petition is pending, on the next day after the last day on which pleadings may be filed, and none have been filed by the bankrupt or any of his creditors, the clerk shall forthwith refer the case to the referee.

g Upon the filing of a voluntary petition the judge shall hear the petition and make the adjudication or dismiss the petition. If the judge is absent from the district, or the division of the district in which the petition is filed at the time of the filing, the clerk shall forthwith refer the case to the referee.

XI. Order of Reference and Effect, 485I. PRACTICE IN GENERAL.

The practice under the present law differs so much from that under the law of 1867, that any extended reference to the latter would but confuse. Practice in bankruptcy is regulated largely by the General Orders and Forms,² supplemented by local rules and sometimes additional forms, and, tions as may be necessary to suit the circumstances of any particular case. See also Supplementary Forms, post, and Hagar and Alexander's Bankruptcy Forms (2d Ed.), Part I.

where none of these apply, by the equity practice in the United States courts.³ The equity practice of the Federal courts is independent of, and unaffected by State laws as to procedure in State courts.⁴ Throughout this work, an effort is made to explain the practice suggested by each section of the law and the paragraphs on "practice" found elsewhere should always be consulted. It may be suggested, however, to practitioners in the code States, that the technical observance of rules and formulas, there made so much of by both the bar and the bench, will generally not be necessary in bankruptcy practice. A clear understanding of the remedy desired and a common sense method of seeking it will usually be sufficient, even though there be modal slips or omissions. Numerous forms supplementing the official forms will be found in "Supplemental Forms," post.

II. SCOPE AND LIMITATION OF SECTION.

a. Scope.—This section has only to do with such practice as is incident to a proceeding in bankruptcy from the moment a petition is duly filed to the moment that the petition is either dismissed or results in an adjudication coupled with a reference to the referee. In voluntary cases this time is inappreciable. In voluntary cases it may extend through months. Further, though thus limited, § 18 is silent as to certain procedure usually availed of in involuntary cases, as that on stays and seizure of assets; and the succeeding section is controlling on jury trials.

b. Limitation of section.—For convenience of reference the limitations of § 18 are here set forth.

It does not have to do with:

1. Who may and who may not file a voluntary petition; for that, see §§ 4-a, 59-a; or

2. Who may and who may not file an involuntary petition; for that, see § 59-b; or

3. Against whom and when an involuntary petition may be filed; for that, see §§ 3-b, 4-b; or

4. In what court a petition must be filed; for that, see § 2 (1); or

5. Whether and, if so, how petitions may be filed by or against partners or corporations; for that, see §§ 4-b, 5-a; or

6. The jurisdictional allegations in voluntary petitions; for that, see §§ 2 (1), 4-a, 5-a, and, for the schedules to accompany the same, § 7 (8); or

7. The jurisdictional allegations in involuntary petitions; for that, see §§ 2 (1), 3-a-b, 4-b, 5-a, 59-b; or

3. Equity rules.—In proceedings in equity to carry into effect provisions of bankruptcy act, or to enforce rights and remedies given by it, rules of equity practice are to be followed as near as may be. See Gen. Order, XXXVII; Equity Rules, post.

Bankruptcy proceedings are purely equitable in their character and within the limits prescribed by the bankruptcy acts and the special rules of practice prescribed by the Supreme Court are to be administered in accordance with the general principles and practice of equity. Westall v. Avery (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 22 Am. B. R. 673, 171 Fed. 626. A proceeding in bankruptcy is a proceeding in equity, and the taking of evidence and the review by appeals of hearings therein are governed by the practice in suits in equity, except where otherwise specified. First Nat. Bank of Philadelphia v. Abbott (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 436, 165 Fed. 852.

4. Westall v. Avery (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 22 Am. B. R. 673, 171 Fed. 626.

The rules prescribed by the State codes of practice cannot be applied in equity cases in the United States courts, although such codes are largely applied in common law cases. Matter of Brown (D. C., Ky.), 35 Am. B. R. 826, 228 Fed. 533.

8. The office for filing and the number of copies to be filed; for that, see § 59-a in voluntary cases, and § 59-c in involuntary cases, and, for schedules, § 7 (8); or

9. The answer and procedure thereon when less than three creditors petition; for that, see § 59-d-e; or

10. The intervention of creditors other than the petitioning creditors; for that, see § 59-f; or

11. The dismissal of petitions other than on the merits; for that, see § 59-g; or

12. The (a) interference with the alleged bankrupt's property pending adjudication; or (b) stays other than against suits; or (c) stays against suits; for these, see §§ 2 (7) (15), 11; or

13. The appointment of receivers or the custody of the bankrupt's property before adjudication; for that, see §§ 2 (3) (15), 3-e, 69.

III. PETITIONS.

a. In general.—The allegations in and the manner of drawing petitions are further discussed under sections three, four, five and fifty-nine of this work. The specific allegations to be made to meet the requirements of such sections are there more fully considered. Petitioning and intervening creditors should be bound by the allegations of their petition.⁵ It will only be necessary at this place to consider those rules which are of general application.

b. Framing petitions.—General Order V provides that "all petitions and the schedules filed therewith shall be printed or written out plainly, without abbreviation or interlineation except such abbreviation or interlineation may be for the purpose of reference."

c. Forms to be used.—The official forms should, where possible, be used; in some districts it is the practice to refuse to consider petitions unless they are on the prescribed printed forms.⁶ The simple forms of bankruptcy practice found in the general orders and forms prescribed by the Supreme Court should be followed without unnecessary departure therefrom.⁷ The caption should properly refer to the proceeding, but if the body of the petition is sufficient a defect in the caption is not material.⁸ Blanks printed without ruling and of such size as to permit use in typewriting machines will be found most convenient. Forms Nos. 1, 2, and 3 are suggestive of the petitions by individuals, by partners, and in involuntary cases. That in partnership cases is not entirely reliable;⁹ and that for involuntary cases is less so.¹⁰

5. Harris v. Tapp (D. C., Ga.), 37 Am. B. R. 564, 235 Fed. 918.

6. Mahoney v. Ward (D. C., N. Car.), 3 Am. B. R. 770, 100 Fed. 278. Compare In re White (D. C., Penn.), 14 Am. B. R. 241, 135 Fed. 199.

7. Gage & Co. v. Bell (D. C., Tenn.), 10 Am. B. R. 696, 124 Fed. 371; Sabin v. Blake-McFall Co. (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 179, 223 Fed. 501, holding that the provisions of the bankrupt act and the procedure promulgated thereby should be closely followed in the preparation of petitions and all other papers.

An answer which does not admit or uneasively deny upon oath the material facts of the petition may be stricken from the files for non-compliance with the Supreme Court orders prescribing the form for answers.

Bradley Timber Co. v. White (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 10 Am. B. R. 329, 121 Fed. 779.

8. Matter of Gorman (D. C., Hawaii), 2
U. S., D. C. Hawaii 439, 15 Am. B. R. 587, holding that the caption of a petition in the matter of the bankruptcy of a firm and of a member thereof does not necessarily render the petition insufficient where such caption contains only the name of the individual.

9. See criticisms and suggestions under Section Five, ante. See also "Supplementary Forms," post. For additional forms, see Hagar and Alexander's Bankruptcy Forms
(2nd Ed.) Nos. 1-9, inclusive.

10. Consult Section Three, ante, for allegations as to acts of bankruptcy; Section Four, ante, for allegations as to the excepted

If a partner does not join in a petition for involuntary bankruptcy, that fact should be stated, his address given, and the prayer of the petition ask for a subpoena to him as though he were an alleged involuntary bankrupt.¹¹

d. Facts alleged.—(1) JURISDICTIONAL FACTS.—All facts essential to the exercise of jurisdiction should be alleged with definiteness and certainty, as in the case of other pleadings in law or equity.¹² The purpose of a pleading is to advise the opposing parties and the court of the facts constituting the cause of action; all these facts should be set forth plainly and without equivocation.¹³ A disjunctive statement states neither one fact nor the other and, if one or the other fact is jurisdictional, the petition is insufficient.¹⁴ The necessary allegations in both voluntary and involuntary petitions are discussed at length in other places.¹⁵

(2) ACTS OF BANKRUPTCY.—General averments as to acts of bankruptcy are insufficient.¹⁶ The allegations should not be made in the language of the statute, without details in respect to the particular act relied upon.¹⁷ The classes; Section Fifty-nine, post, for allegations as to number of petitioning creditors, the amount of their claims, etc.

Adjudications of firm.—A petition to adjudge a partnership a voluntary bankrupt which is made by some of the partners without giving notice of the filing of the petition to the non-joining partners is irregular and will not warrant the adjudication of the firm as bankrupts. In re Altman (D. C., N. Y.), 2 Am. B. R. 407, 95 Fed. 263.

12. Clarke v. Hehne & Meyer (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 11 Am. B. R. 583, 594, 127 Fed. 288; In re Plotke (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 171, 175, 104 Fed. 964, where the court said: "The essential facts must appear affirmatively and distinctly, and it is not sufficient that jurisdiction may be inferred argumentatively." Matter of McGraw (D. C., W. Va.), 43 Am. B. R. 38, 254 Fed. 442.

The existence of provable claims to the requisite amount is jurisdictional in an involuntary proceeding. Doty v. Mason (D. C., Fla.), 40 Am. B. R. 53, 244 Fed. 557.

Where a petition alleges that the bankrupt "owes debts" this allegation must be taken as making a prima facie case, entitling the prisoner to be adjudged a bankrupt. Matter of Hargadine-McKittrick, etc., Co. (D. C., Mo.), 39 Am. B. R. 142, 239 Fed. 155.

13. In re First Nat. Bank of Belle Fourche (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 265, 270, 128 Fed. 630.

14. In re Laskaris (Ref., N. Y.), 1 Am. B. R. 480, holding that a voluntary petition in bankruptcy which states disjunctively that the petitioner has had his principal place of business, or has resided, or has had his domicile for the greater portion of six months next immediately preceding the filing of the petition, in a place stated, is insufficient upon its face to confer jurisdiction.

17. In re Cliffe (D. C., Penn.), 2 Am. B. R. 317, 94 Fed. 354; In re Bellah (D. C., Del.), 8 Am. B. R. 310, 116 Fed. 69; In re Stone (D. C., Pa.), 30 Am. B. R. 392; Matter of McGraw

(D. C., W. Va.), 43 Am. B. R. 38, 254 Fed. 442. See cases cited under section three.

Language of statute.—Acts of bankruptcy should not be charged in the language of the statute. In re Deer Creek Water & Power Co. (D. C., Pa.), 29 Am. B. R. 358, 205 Fed. 205. General averments that the alleged bankrupts within the four months' period, while insolvent, committed an act of bankruptcy by transferring "a certain portion of their property to one or more of their creditors with intent to prefer," and that they have transferred and concealed large sums of money and valuable securities with intent to hinder, delay and defraud creditors, which concealment was and is continuous, are insufficient to sustain the petition. In re Rosenblatt & Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 401, 193 Fed. 638.

Insufficient allegations.—In re Cliffe (D. C., Penn.), 2 Am. B. R. 317, 94 Fed. 354, a petition averred that the defendant was insolvent and charged an act of bankruptcy that he "on the 27th day of January, 1899, suffered, while insolvent, other creditors to obtain a preference through legal proceedings, and not having at least five days before sale or final disposition of his property affected by such preference vacated such preference." There were no further details of the preference alleged. The petition was deemed insufficient.

In re Nelson (D. C., Wis.), 1 Am. B. R. 63, 98 Fed. 76, the petition alleged that the defendant had within four months next prior to the filing of it "transferred, while insolvent, large amounts and value of his property to one or more of his creditors, with an intent to prefer said creditors over his other creditors." This was held insufficient.

A petition, alleging that execution had been issued and levy made, and that the judgment creditor threatens to sell, and that the judgments were obtained more than five days before the filing of the petition, is insufficient, in the absence of an allegation that a sale had been authorized or fixed for any time or proposed for a day not five days distant, or for any time. Matter of Herlihy Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 41 Am. B. R. 171, 247 Fed. 369.

Sufficient allegation.—An averment in a petition in involuntary bankruptcy that the defendant at a certain time received a specified sum of money from a specified source, which sum "he has ever since concealed and secreted with intent to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors," is not defective for want petition in involuntary proceedings may set forth several and distinct acts of bankruptcy.¹⁸

(3) NATURE OF CLAIMS.—The petition should set forth the nature of the claims of the petitioning creditors,¹⁹ but it has been held that where the petition shows on its face, and there is established on the trial, a sufficient petitioning creditor, the absence of a statement of the amount of his claim may be disregarded.²⁰ No specific method of setting forth a claim is provided by the Bankruptcy Act, the only requirement necessary is that the language used be of sufficient definiteness to identify the claim in the mind of the alleged bankrupt.²¹ If filed by an agent the authority to act should be set forth.²² Legal conclusions, as an allegation that the petitioner has a provable claim, will not suffice.²³ Where the claim of a petitioning creditor is based upon an assignment it is not necessary to annex a copy of the assignment to the petition.^{23a}

(4) DUPLICATE PETITIONS.—The schedules, and presumably the petition in voluntary cases, must be drawn and verified in triplicate.²⁴ In involuntary cases, in duplicate.²⁵ The failure to file duplicate petitions is waived by answer without presenting the objection.²⁶

e. Petition to be filed.—A petition should not be sent directly to a judge but should be filed with the clerk of the court.²⁷ Where a petition is delivered to the clerk outside of his office and not during office hours and he takes the same and marks it filed, it will be deemed duly filed.²⁸ It must be accompanied by the fees of the officers, or, in lieu thereof, by a pauper affidavit.²⁹

f. Petition confers jurisdiction.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The moment the petition is filed, jurisdiction begins. This is the commencement of the proceeding, even though the subpoena does not immediately issue,³⁰ or, if issued, is not served of particularity; the manner and details of the concealment being matters of evidence, and not of averment. In re Bellah (D. C., Del.), 8 Am. B. R. 310, 116 Fed. 69. Allegation as to suffering or permitting preference held sufficient although failing to allege that debtor failed to vacate within five days prior to "final disposition." Ravenna Nat. Bank v. Curtiss (D. C., Ohio), 30 Am. B. R. 818.

18. Bradley Timber Co. v. White (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 10 Am. B. R. 329, 121 Fed. 779, affg. 9 Am. B. R. 441.

19. In re White (D. C., Penn.), 14 Am. B. R. 241, 135 Fed. 199, holding that an involuntary petition defective in failing to state the nature of the claims of the petitioners is amendable.

Requisite amount of claims.—Since the existence of provable debts due to each of the petitioning creditors, or at least to the number required by the bankruptcy act, is necessary to give the bankruptcy court jurisdiction of an involuntary proceeding the existence of such debts or claims and their nature should be alleged with such particularity and definiteness as will enable the court to find from the petition the essential jurisdictional fact. In re Farthing (D. C., N. Car.), 29 Am. B. R. 732, 202 Fed. 557.

Definiteness of allegations as to amount.—An allegation in an involuntary petition in bankruptcy that a claim of one of the petitioning creditors is for a certain sum due on open account from the alleged bankrupt, upon a stated account rendered on a certain date, is sufficient. *Sabin v. within the time limited.³¹ The filing of a petition in bankruptcy is an assertion of jurisdiction with a view to the determination of the status of the bankrupt and a settlement and distribution of his estate.³²

(2) FILING OF PETITION AS NOTICE.—As has been stated in a recent case:³³ "Indeed, the condition at the time of the filing of the petition measures the extent of the estate, and the rights of all creditors of the bankrupt and all parties interested in the property throughout all the provisions of the law." So far as the jurisdiction of the court is concerned the filing of the petition operates as a lis pendens and is notice to all the world; this is in recognition of the often repeated maxim that "the filing of the petition in bankruptcy is a caveat to all the world and in effect an attachment and injunction."³⁴ How-

Bankr. Dig., § 236.

Notice to creditors.—Thus the filing of a petition in involuntary proceedings is notice thereof to all the creditors of the alleged bankrupt. In re Billing (D. C., Ala.), 17 Am. B. R. 80, 145 Fed. 395.

Property in another district.—It is immaterial that the property affected by the filing of the petition is in another district. In re Granite City Bank (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 14 Am. B. Lis pendens.—In Matter of Zotti (Ref., N. Y.), 23 Am. B. R. 60, affd. 23 Am. B. R. 812, 178 Fed. 304, the court said: "The filing of a bill in equity in the United States court is considered the same as the filing of a lis pendens in a state which requires such filing. * * * The filing of the petition was a command to all having possession of property which the bankrupt at that moment owned, to hold the same subject to the orders of the court. The 'rem' was reached by the filing of the petition, no matter where it was."

Effect on property in possession of bankrupt.—The exclusive jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court is so far in rem that the estate is regarded as in custodia legis from the filing of the petition. Bailey v. Baker Ice Machine Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 239 U. S. 268, 35 Am. B. R. 814, 60 L. Ed. 275; Matter of Continental Coal Corp. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 38 Am. B. The filing of an involuntary petition in bankruptcy brings into custodia legis all property then in the possession of the bankrupt or its common law assignee, although a replevin suit by a vendor against the assignee is pending. ever, according to several recent cases, the application of this maxim is limited.³⁵ Its effect upon the jurisdiction of a court of bankruptcy in respect to the bankrupt's property, as dependent upon possession, is considered under § 23, post.

g. Amendments of petitions.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendment of a petition in bankruptcy is permissible as in the case of pleadings in other actions and proceedings. The general rules of pleadings and practice relative to amendments apply to petitions in bankruptcy.^{36a} The amendment of a petition³⁶ is a matter of discretion.³⁷ This general power of amendment is not abrogated or Caveat and injunction.—The filing of the petition in bankruptcy and the adjudication themselves constitute a caveat and an injunction by the court against any interference with the property of the bankrupt by all persons who have no liens upon, title, or debatable claims to it at the time the petition is filed, and the taking and disposition of it by any of them violates that injunction. Darrough v. First National Bank of Claremore (Okla. Sup. Ct.), 37 Am. B. R. 75, 156 Pac. 191.

Effect of filing petition in involuntary proceeding as staying sale by sheriff.—The filing of a petition in bankruptcy is sufficient notice to a sheriff, if brought to his attention, to prevent the sale of the bankrupt's property, advertised to take place soon after filing the petition. Matter of Miles Paint Mfg. Co. (D. C., Pa.), 32 Am. B. R. 793.

Effect of levy after petition filed.—The court cannot be ousted of its jurisdiction by any officer seeking to make a levy upon the bankrupt's property by virtue of process issued out of a state court. Matter of Schou (D. C., Conn.), 32 Am. B. R. 494, 213 Fed. 614.

A bank cannot lawfully pay a note, after a petition in bankruptcy has been filed against the maker. Matter of Midland Motor Co. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.) 37 Am. B. R. 364, 244 Fed. 368.

Bankrupt as trustee for creditors.—The filing of a petition in bankruptcy, while not divesting the bankrupt of title to his property, constitutes him in effect a trustee for the benefit of his creditors from that time until adjudication. Matter of Sternberg (D. C., Mass.), 41 Am. B. R. 476, 249 Fed. 980.

35. Limitation of application of doctrine.—This maxim was stated in Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 7 Am. B. R. 224. Subsequently the Supreme Court said: "The remark made in Mueller v. Nugent that the filing of the petition [in bankruptcy] is a caveat to all the world and in fact an attachment and injunction was made in regard to the particular facts in that case." York Mfg. Co. v. Cassell, 201 U. S. 344, 15 Am. B. R. 638, 50 L. Ed. 782. And in Matter of Mertens (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 15 Am. B. R. 362, 369, 144 Fed. 518, the court said: "While the filing of a petition in bankruptcy is a caveat to all the world, the notice ought not to have the effect of paralyzing all business dealings with the debtor, or to prevent the lenders or pledgees from enforcing their contracts." In re Rathman (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 246, 261, 183 Fed. 913, the court, speaking of this maxim, said: "The later decisions of the Supreme Court adjudge that this statement applies only to parties who have no substantial claim of a lien upon or a title to the property of the bankrupt, and that against those who have such claims of existing liens or titles when the petition in bankruptcy is filed, that filing is neither a caveat nor an attachment, that it creates no lien and that until the bankruptcy court by some act of one of its officers takes actual possession of the property, or makes such claimants parties to the proceeding by some order or process, or notice of the proceeding comes to them, their liens, titles and remedies are unaffected thereby and they are strangers to the proceeding." But in the case of Acme Harvester Co. v. Beekman Lumber Co., 222 U. S. 300, 27 Am. B. R. 262, 58 L. Ed. 208, the Supreme Court reaffirmed the doctrine of Mueller v. Nugent, supra, and stated that "The exclusive jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court is so far in rem that the estate is regarded as in custodia legis from the filing of the petition." See also Matter of Zotti (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 234, 186 Fed. 84, affg. 23 Am. B. R. 812, 178 Fed. 304; Christopherson v. Harrington (Minn. Sup. Ct.), 118 Minn. 42, 32 Am. B. R. 842, 136 N. W. 289; Tube City Mining & Milling Co. v. Otterson (Aris. Sup. Ct.), 16 Ariz. 305, 35 Am. B. R. 500, 146 Pac. 203; Coppard v. Gardner (Tex. Civ. App.), 40 Am. B. R. 777, 199 S. W. 650; Houston v. Shear (Tex. Ct. of Civ. App.), 43 Am. B. R. 462, 210 S. W. 976.

Sufficiency of notice to sheriff of filing.—The orders of a State court cannot be nullified or countermanded by a private individual notifying a sheriff, an officer of the court, that he intends to file a petition in bankruptcy. Notice of such filing must come through official channels and can be of no effect when issued by a citizen clothed with no authority. Coppard v. Gardner (Tex. Civ. App.), 40 Am. B. R. 777, 199 S. W. 650.

The mere filing of a petition in involuntary bankruptcy does not give jurisdiction, nor establish facts upon which jurisdiction may depend. Matter of Pennington & Co. (D. C., Ky.), 35 Am. B. R. 832, 228 Fed. 388.

36. Consult Bankr. Act, § 7, for amendments of schedules. For amendment of petitions generally, see Am. B. R. Dig., § 231.

37. Discretion to amend.—In the case of Armstrong v. Fernandez, 208 U. S. 324, 19 Am. B. R. 746, the court said: "The power of a court of bankruptcy over amendments is undoubted and rests in the sound discretion of the court." Wilder v. Watts (D. C., S. C.), 15 Am. B. R. 57, 138 Fed. 428, to the effect that the amendments are usually allowed if the acts of justice will be promoted, but as they are not matters of right the court must exercise its discretion in permitting them. The privilege of amending a petition in involuntary bankruptcy is a matter resting in the discretion of the court, not to be reviewed, except when such discretion has been abused. In re Rosenblatt & Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 401, 193 Fed. 638; Sabin v. Blake-McCall Co. (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 179, 223 Fed. 501, confirming its amendment of an involuntary petition filed after expiration of time fixed for that purpose; Matter of Frank (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 38 Am. B. R. 674; Matter of McGraw (D. C., W. Va.), 43 Am. B. R. 38, 254 Fed. 442.

The exercise of jurisdiction to amend an involuntary petition is within the sound discretion of the court, having in mind the in-restricted in any sense by the provisions of General Order XI which relates to the amendment of petitions and schedules.³⁸ A petition may be amended to bring it within the terms of an amendatory act.³⁹ The permitting or refusal of an amendment, being within the discretion of the court, will not be interfered with unless there is an abuse of such discretion. An amendment will not be allowed unless it clearly appear that the ends of justice will be promoted thereby.⁴⁰ It will be denied if the application is made after an unreasonable delay⁴¹ or when the allegation in effect will become the basis of a new and independent proceeding.⁴²

(2) WHEN ALLOWED.—(I) To conform to evidence.—If evidence is adduced without objection, the petition, if deemed insufficient, may be amended to conform thereto, and when so amended it relates to and takes effect as of the date of the filing of the original petition.⁴³ An amendment for the purpose of conforming the pleadings to the facts proven is frequently permitted, even on the coming in of a special master's report.⁴⁴ There must be in the record as it stands, the substance of that which is to be supplied by amendment.⁴⁵ An amendment of an original petition may be allowed before proceeding to a new trial where it is necessary because of evidence adduced upon a former trial.⁴⁶

(II) Correction of mistakes or defects.—It will usually be granted to cure an error due to mistake of counsel,⁴⁷ or one purely clerical.⁴⁸ Where the defect does not pertain to the jurisdiction of the court, either in respect to the parties or the subject-matter, an amendment will usually be permitted.⁴⁹ But if the defect goes to the jurisdiction of the court, the right thereto is not so clear.⁵⁰

Thus, where an involuntary petition shows upon its face that the claims of the petitioners in the aggregate are less than $500, the petition is fatally defective and may not be amended by joining others as creditors.⁵¹ But Federal courts have the power to permit amendments of pleadings by the insertion or correction of jurisdictional as well as other averments.⁵² Thus, a petition may be amended to cure defects, such as those which pertain to the averments of the residence or place of business of a bankrupt,⁵³ especially where rights of creditors have accrued which would be affected by its dismissal.⁵⁴ An involuntary petition may be amended so as to show that the alleged bankrupt is subject to the act.⁵⁵

(III) As to number of creditors and amount of claims.—An amendment is permissible by the insertion of an averment that all the bankrupt's creditors are less than twelve.⁵⁶ An insufficiency in the allegations of the petition as to the number of the creditors⁵⁷ or the nature and amounts of their claims⁵⁸ is not to be regarded as an incurable jurisdictional defect, and may be supplied by amendment.

(IV) As to status of bankrupt.—The petition may be amended so as to aver that the alleged bankrupt is not a wage-earner or a person engaged chiefly in farming or the tillage of the soil.⁵⁹ If there is an error in the name of the alleged bankrupt the petition may be amended so as to correct it.⁶⁰

Error to deny amendment.—In Conway v. German (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 577, 166 Fed. 67, it was held error to deny a motion for an amendment in this respect. The court said: "Such an averment so far as this case is concerned, is a mere negative one, and not of a jurisdictional character. There is no contention made here by the defendants that they belong to the inhibited class, and hence cannot be adjudicated bankrupts, and as a matter of fact they do belong to that class. Were they seeking to come within the inhibited class, it would be essential for them to make proof of their averment, but they are not, and while technically speaking it should have been stated in the petition, that they were not persons coming within that class, still it was not essential so to do, and in no sense affected the merits of the case, and the amendments desired should have been permitted."

(V) As to existence of partnership.—Where one member of a firm has not made the other members parties to a petition in a voluntary proceeding he may amend his petition so as to bring in such partners.⁶¹ And a petition against two persons alleging that a partnership existed may be amended by striking out all reference to one of them when it appeared that such partnership did not exist.⁶²

(VI) Defective verification.—A defective verification to an involuntary petition may be amended.⁶³ But an involuntary petition, which has not been verified in compliance with section 18-c of the act, may not be amended by filing nunc pro tunc another petition reciting the same facts and properly verified.⁶⁴

(VII) Insertion of new act of bankruptcy.—As a general rule an involuntary petition cannot be amended by setting out therein an act of bankruptcy not referred to in the original petition and occurring more than four months before application for the order allowing the amendment.⁶⁵ But such an amendment may be permitted if clearly in furtherance of justice, and if its omission from the original petition is properly excused.⁶⁶ Even if the court has power to allow an amendment to a petition setting up a new, separate, and independent act of bankruptcy which occurred more than four months before the application to insert it in the petition, it ought not to do so, except upon a showing that the petitioner was duly diligent and that the interests of justice require such action.⁶⁷ The tendency of the decisions is toward a more liberal practice in granting amendments and in some of the later decisions it has been held that it is discretionary with the court to permit the petitioner to insert by amendment additional acts of bankruptcy.⁶⁸ Where the amendment offered shows

A liberal policy in regard to the allowance of amendments to pleadings, both at common law and in equity is to be encouraged, where the amendments proposed tend to prevent a failure of justice through acts of bankruptcy of like character as the one attempted to be shown in the original petition, the amendment should be allowed.⁶⁹ Thus, where an involuntary petition alleges the giving of a preference as an act of bankruptcy, an amendment will be allowed so as to permit the petitioner to set up the giving of another preference.⁷⁰

(VIII) Amended petition filed after four months.—An amended petition may be filed after four months have elapsed since the commission of the act of bankruptcy charged, especially where the same act is relied on, and it is alleged in substantially the same words; the amended petition relates back to the date of the original petition.⁷¹ But the doctrine of relation back is not applicable where the amendment sets up a new cause of action, or where to cause it to relate back would have the effect of depriving an adverse party of a substantial right on which no attack was made in the original pleading.⁷²

(2) PRACTICE.—General Order XI provides that "amendments shall be printed or written, signed and verified, like original petitions and schedules. In the application for leave to amend, the petitioner shall state the cause of the error in the paper originally filed." This provision is not exclusive of the power to permit amendments inherent in the court.⁷³ Failure to verify an technicalities, and where their allowance does not affect injuriously any just right of the opposite party." Hark v. Allen Co. (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 17 Am. B. R. 3, 146 Fed. 666.

Insolvency when act was committed.—The court has power to amend a petition in involuntary bankruptcy, which alleges insolvency only at the date of filing the petition, so as to show insolvency at the date the act of bankruptcy alleged was committed, where the facts disclosed by the schedules filed show the existence for several years previous of all debts except one, the assertion of such other debt on that date, and also indicate that the statement of assets runs back over that period. Where essential facts are alleged.—An insolvent who confesses judgment to his wife in an amount equal to the value of his only assets, and withholds execution, does not commit an act of bankruptcy within the meaning of section 3a (3) of the Bankruptcy Act; but an involuntary petition stating such facts may be amended so as to allege the acts of bankruptcy defined in clauses (1) and (2) of the same section. Matter of Irish (D. Where the alleged preferential payments relied on as acts of bankruptcy occurred more than four months prior to the filing of an amended petition which asserts them, and were charged for the first time in that petition, and are new and independent preferential acts charged by way of substitution for the acts alleged in the original petition, and not mere enlargements and amendments to the alleged acts of bankruptcy set out in petitions filed within the proper four months' period, then and in that case the transactions have not arisen within the four months' period immediately preceding the filing of the petition and cannot be relied on as acts of bankruptcy. Where in an original petition in involuntary proceedings it was alleged that certain preferential payments were made to a bank within four months, an amended petition, which shows that said payment to the bank was in fact a payment made to creditors through the medium of the bank, is a mere explanation of the first act of bankruptcy charged and not substituted or new items. Matter of Brown Commercial Car Co. (C. amended petition as required by such general order may be corrected subsequently.⁷⁴ Amendments before adjudication can, it is thought, be granted only by the judge, and not by a referee sitting as a special master, though there is authority for the opposite view.⁷⁵ The practice varies. The application to amend may take the form of an oral motion on the trial.⁷⁶ The application to amend is not absolutely required to be in writing, although it is better practice to submit a written application. Notice of the application to amend may be waived by an express written consent to the amendment.⁷⁷ Usually it is made on a petition or affidavits, accompanied by a copy of or including the proposed amendments,⁷⁸ on due notice to the other parties. If granted, it relates back to the time the petition was filed and has the same effect as if included in the original petition.⁷⁹ The amendment does not advance the date of filing the petition so as to affect the four months' period as to preferences.⁸⁰ In conformity with this General Order a petition or application for leave to amend should show why the allegation proposed to be set forth by the amendment was not included in the original petition.⁸¹ An amendment which introduces new matter should be met by an answer, or it will be taken as admitted.⁸² It is thought that Equity Rules XXVIII to XXX suggest a good practice where amendment of an involuntary petition is desired. General Order VI has been held to imply a limitation on amendment.⁸³

IV. PROCESS AND SERVICE.

a. In general.—There is no need of process in voluntary cases; an adjudication usually follows and a reference is forthwith made to the referee. On the filing of an involuntary petition, the clerk must at once issue a subpoena. The failure to make timely service of a subpoena does not terminate the proceeding.⁸⁴

b. When returnable.—Subsection a provides that the process "shall be returnable within fifteen days, unless the judge shall for cause fix a longer time."⁸⁵ Intervening Sundays should be counted.⁸⁶ This time is shorter than in the equity practice. An effort was made by the framers of the Ray amendatory bill to reduce the period to ten days. The Senate thought otherwise, and the law, therefore, remains as originally passed, viz.: "within fifteen days."

c. Form of subpoena.—Forms in Bankruptcy, No. 5, is that ordinarily used as a subpoena to the alleged bankrupt. Form No. 4, being an order requiring the alleged bankrupt to show cause why the prayer of the petition should not be granted, is clearly an inadvertent inheritance from the practice under the former law, and, to say the least, confusingly superfluous. Under the present law, the subpoena has taken its place; the order to show cause is no longer required, and should be ignored as contrary to the law. Equity Rule XII requires a memorandum to be placed at the bottom of the subpoena, that the defendant is to enter his appearance in the suit in the clerk's office, on or before the day at which the writ is returnable. It has been held, however, that this memorandum is not essential.⁸⁷ A power of attorney to appear in response to a creditors' petition is not necessary. The duties of the clerk on the entry of appearances and pleas are prescribed in the General Orders. General Order III requires the subpoena to issue out of the court, under the seal thereof, and be tested by the clerk. A defect in this regard will be waived by an appearance without objection.⁸⁸

d. Service of process.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Service of the petition and writ of subpoena is to be made in the same manner that service of similar process is had upon the commencement of a suit of equity in the courts of the United States. This reference to the equity practice seems in effect to have enacted Equity Rule XIII into the law.⁸⁹ In case service cannot be made upon the bankrupt, it may be made under this rule by leaving the papers with an adult member of his family at his home.⁹⁰ Under the act as amended it has been held that service of a copy of an involuntary petition with a subpoena upon the clerk of the hotel of which the alleged bankrupt was proprietor and where he usually resided, is valid without publication.⁹¹ Personal service out of the district is unavailing.⁹²

(2) SERVICE BY PUBLICATION.—Where personal service, or service as authorized by Equity Rule XIII may not be made, notice must be given by publication in the same manner and for the same time as provided by law for notice by publication in suits to enforce a legal or equitable lien in courts of the United States. The section should be read in connection with section 8 of act of Congress of March 3, 1875 (now § 57 of Judicial Code), to the effect that when the alleged bankrupt is not an inhabitant of nor found within the district, and shall not voluntarily appear, it shall be lawful for the court to make an order directing such alleged bankrupt to appear to answer the petition

by a day to be fixed, which order shall be served on such absent alleged bankrupt "if practicable, wherever found."⁹³ The amendatory act of 1903 added the exception that "unless the judge shall otherwise direct, the order shall be published not more than once a week for two consecutive weeks, and the return day shall be ten days after the last publication unless the judge shall for cause fix a longer time."⁹⁴ The proper basis for service by publication is an affidavit showing that personal service of process upon the bankrupt is impracticable, because he is absent from the jurisdiction or cannot be found.⁹⁵ The order for service by publication should designate the day upon which the defendant is required to appear, and demur, answer or plead.⁹⁶

(3) SERVICE ON CORPORATIONS, INFANTS, LUNATICS, ETC.—The statute makes no special provision relative to service on such parties. In the absence of controlling Federal rules of practice, the method prescribed by the State law may be followed, but, it seems, service cannot usually be made within the district on the officer of a non-resident corporation, temporarily therein.⁹⁷ The better practice in all cases not covered by Federal rules, is to secure an order directing how service shall be made.

(4) SERVICE ON NON-JOINING PARTNER.—Where one of two or more partners does not join in a voluntary petition for the bankruptcy of the firm, the proceeding is voluntary as to the petitioning partners and involuntary as to the non-joining partner; before an adjudication can be had, a subpoena must issue, and, with a copy of the petition, be served on the latter; and he may defend as though an alleged involuntary bankrupt.⁹⁸ If the petition be against a partnership, one of whose members is an absentee, he must be brought in by publication as if the petition were against him solely.⁹⁹

(5) SERVICE ON ABSENTEES.—An absconding debtor may be proceeded against in bankruptcy; the present law does not deny him a discharge although most previous laws, here and elsewhere, have. Cases of abscondence are frequent, and the method of service in such cases, especially where the debtor has left the country, differs in different districts.¹⁰⁰ That such method might be uniform and existing doubt be cleared up, the amendatory act of 1903 has provided a summary means of serving such a debtor by publication. It may have been that the words "as provided by law for notice by publication in suits in equity," in the original statute referred to § 738 (now Judicial Code, § 57)¹⁰¹ of the Revised Statutes, a bankruptcy proceeding being in the nature of a creditor's bill to assert an equitable lien. Still, there was doubt. There can be none now. Thus, absentee bankrupts can, in fact must, be served hereafter in the way prescribed by the section of the Revised Statutes above referred to, save that, unless the judge shall otherwise direct, the publication shall be

¹⁰¹. As modified concerning the time of publication by the act of March 3, 1875, now Judicial Code, § 57.

"not more than once a week for two consecutive weeks,¹⁰² and the return day shall be ten days after the last publication." In other words, service on absentees under the amendment, will take less than two weeks longer than personal service within the district.¹⁰³

(6) EFFECT OF SERVICE ON JURISDICTION IN PERSONAM AND IN REM.—It is not thought that that portion of § 738 (now Judicial Code, § 57) which, in cases of service by publication, limits the jurisdiction thus acquired to the property of the bankrupt within the district, is applicable to a proceeding in bankruptcy. The whole theory of that proceeding is against such a view. On adjudication, the trustee becomes vested with the bankrupt's property, wherever it is, and, subject to the orders of the court whose officer he is, may take possession of it and dispose of it as freely as the bankrupt could before the petition was filed.¹⁰⁴ Even should the opposite view prevail, ancillary proceedings in the other districts will supply the necessary jurisdiction.¹⁰⁵

(7) MEANING OF AMENDMENTS OF 1903.—The changes made by the amendatory act probably mean that (a) service must hereafter be either personal under the rules in equity¹⁰⁶ within the district or by publication, (b) that, in either event, the return day shall be, in the one case, not more than fifteen, and in the other case not more than ten days after the last publication, while (c) the jurisdiction, both in personam and in rem, at least remains as it was before the amendments.¹⁰⁷

(8) EFFECT OF DELAY IN SERVICE.—The provision of subsection a relative to the time within which a subpoena is returnable do not necessarily affect the time within which a subpoena must be served. The subsection should be deemed to be directory merely, and intended to secure system, uniformity and dispatch in the conduct of public business.¹⁰⁸ It therefore follows that the jurisdiction of the court is not affected by a failure to serve the subpoena within fifteen days subsequent to its issue.¹⁰⁹

(9) DEFECTS IN SUBPOENA OR SERVICE.—Any objection as to the sufficiency of the subpoena or the regularity of its service is waived by the appearance of the bankrupt.¹¹⁰ If such defects exist, the bankrupt should move either to quash the subpoena or to set aside the order of publication.¹¹¹

(10) PROOF OF SERVICE.—If the subpoena is served by the marshal or his deputy, return is made by the usual certificate duly indorsed. If served by some other designated person, by affidavit thereof.¹¹²

rupt" here means the alleged bankrupt.¹¹³ The term "creditor" includes any one who owns a demand or claim provable in bankruptcy, and may include his duly authorized agent, attorney or proxy.¹¹⁴ Under the former law, creditors, even if secured or preferred, and even attachment creditors, could resist an involuntary petition.¹¹⁵ Under the present law the right to resist is limited to a creditor who owns a demand or claim provable in bankruptcy. The authority thus conferred upon a creditor to plead to the petition is in recognition of the interest which he may have in permitting his debtor to continue a business where such debtor is not insolvent and if left alone may be able to meet his obligations.¹¹⁶ Some doubt has arisen as to whether an attachment creditor may plead to the petition. The definition of the term "creditor," it has been held, should not be so construed as to preclude a creditor from resisting an adjudication where the issues raised by his answer establish per se, not strictly a provable claim but rights as a creditor in fact which entitle him to the protection of the court.¹¹⁷ And in a carefully considered case it has been stated that from the fact that this section makes express provision for the exercise by the bankrupt or by any creditor of a right to appear and resist an adjudication of involuntary bankruptcy does not preclude the court from permitting participation in the proceedings by other parties shown to be interested in the result thereof, as, for instance, in the case of a judgment creditor who obtained a judgment for a personal injury, not "wilful and malicious," subsequent to filing the petition but before adjudication.¹¹⁸ It is held that an attaching creditor may be a party to a proceeding in involuntary proceedings.¹¹⁹ A

118. Others interested in proceedings.—In the case of Jackson v. Wauchula Mfg. & Timber Co. (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 36 Am. B. R. 408, 230 Fed. 409, the court said: "Obviously, as the plaintiff is the owner of the judgment he had recovered, he was vitally concerned in the question of the estate of the judgment defendant—which was the thing brought under the sole control of the bankruptcy court by the filing of the involuntary petition—being subjected to the diminishing process of a bankruptcy administration, outcome to be expected being a lessening of the chance of his demand being satisfied out of the estate in existence, and a discharge of the judgment defendant, operating to release its liability under the judgment. From the fact that the Bankruptcy Act (§ 18b) makes express provision for the exercise by the bankrupt or by any creditor of a right to appear and plead to a petition for involuntary bankruptcy, it does not follow that it was a purpose of the Act to withhold from the court of bankruptcy the power of permitting participation in the proceedings by other parties shown to be interested in the result of them. Nothing in the Act stands in the way of the conclusion that the court of bankruptcy has the power to permit an involuntary petition to be resisted by one other than the debtor or a creditor within the meaning of the Act, who shows that he has an interest in the estate in the court's charge which would be prejudicially affected by an adjudication of bankruptcy on that petition and the consequences which might be expected to follow from such adjudication. Blackstone v. Everybody's Store (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 30 Am. B. R. 497, 207 Fed. 752; Altonwood Park Co. v. Gwynne (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 31, 160 Fed. 448, 87 C. C. When such an interest is shown by an applicant for leave to take up a valid defense which the alleged bankrupt made in due time, but subsequently unwarrantably abandoned, the application may not properly be denied upon the ground of a lack of power in the court to permit the applicant to participate in the proceeding."

Where the attachment creditor is the petitioner he may be required to surrender his preferred creditor or one who is secured and stands alone on his security should not be permitted to oppose an adjudication of involuntary bankruptcy.¹²⁰ This doctrine excludes resistance to involuntary proceedings by creditors who are secured in full. It has been held that a receiver of a corporation in possession of its property may contest the adjudication of the corporation as a bankrupt, on the ground that it is his right and duty to see that the jurisdiction of the court which appointed him is not improperly ousted.¹²¹

b. Effect of voluntary appearance by bankrupt.—A voluntary appearance by the bankrupt is equivalent to personal service, but only so far as to confer jurisdiction of the person.¹²²

c. When to appear and plead.—Subsection b provides that the appearance must be within five days after the return day or within such further time as the court may allow. The amendment of 1903 changed the time within which to appear and plead from ten to five days. The time does not expire until the last day limited.¹²³ As the creditors are entitled to resist the petition, an adjudication should not be made before the expiration of the full time, even though the bankrupt voluntarily appears and consents to the adjudication.¹²⁴ But the adjudication is not necessarily null because it is made before the expiration of the time for creditors to appear and contest it, and it will be sustained when not directly attacked by a creditor.¹²⁵ The provisions of § 59-f providing that

120. Creditors of bankrupt.—In the case of In re Columbia Real Estate Co. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 7 Am. B. R. 441, 112 Fed. 643, the court referred to the definition of the term "creditor" contained in §§ 1(9), and 59-b to the effect that petitioners for the adjudication shall be "creditors who have provable claims against" the alleged bankrupt, and said: "We are of the opinion from these provisions and their consistency with the general tenor of the act that the intention clearly appears that the only claimants who are entitled to hearing on the issue of involuntary bankruptcy, aside from the bankrupt, are the creditors of the bankrupt; that creditors having security or priority are excluded therefrom to the extent of their security or priority, and can be recognized only in that issue for unsecured or unpreferred amounts; that even as a creditor one who is secured and stands alone on his security can neither invoke nor oppose an adjudication of involuntary bankruptcy."

Objection to jurisdiction.—Entire want of jurisdiction over the subject-matter may be taken advantage of at any time. It is never too late to make such an objection, and the jurisdiction may be attacked collaterally. But where the objection goes merely to a want of jurisdiction of the person or the thing, there may be a waiver of the objection, or restriction as to the manner and time of making it. A creditor cannot prove his claim, participate in the election of the trustee and distribution of the assets, and then, upon the application for a discharge, object to the jurisdiction on account of the bankrupt's non-residence. creditors other than the original petitioners may at any time enter their appearance and file an answer was not intended to permit creditors to come in at any time, but such provisions are limited by and should be construed with subsection b of this section.¹²⁶ The absolute right of a creditor to answer or demur ceases upon the expiration of such time and an appearance or pleading thereafter is within the judicial discretion of the court.¹²⁷ Appearance or pleading, or both, may be permitted "within such further time as the court may allow," and a meritorious pleading filed late may be considered, if so ordered by the judge.¹²⁸ Where the answer or demurrer is not simply for the purpose of delay, the time to plead or answer may be extended in proper cases.¹²⁹ But the court will not usually grant long extensions, or those for which good reasons are not given.¹³⁰ A mere stipulation, not brought to the attention of the court or resulting in an order, is, in the absence of rules to the contrary, not sufficient.¹³¹

d. How appearances are made.—The statute does not prescribe the manner of making appearances. A practice is suggested in General Orders IV and XXXII, and Equity Rule XVII. There is no form prescribed, but those used in the equity practice may be followed.¹³² Appearances may be in person or by attorney; if the latter, the attorney must be one admitted to practice in the district court of the district.¹³³ But the proceedings will not be set aside upon the ground that the attorney appearing for a voluntary bankrupt has not been admitted to practice in the Federal courts.¹³⁴ The appearance in of the bankruptcy act which precludes a waiver of process, a voluntary appearance of the bankrupt, and an answer admitting bankruptcy on the day the petition is filed. An adjudication on a voluntary appearance and an answer admitting the averments of the petition would certainly conclude the bankrupt who entered the appearance and filed the answer. It may be when an adjudication has been made without service of process, and before the expiration of 15 days that the creditors might, upon reasonable application, procure an order vacating the adjudication so far as to allow them to plead and be heard in opposition to the petition. But such right must be exercised with reasonable promptness after actual or constructive notice of the adjudication."

Revision of adjudication.—There is no time fixed in the bankruptcy act within which a petition for revision of an adjudication in bankruptcy shall be presented, but as an appeal from adjudication is required to be taken within ten days, by analogy it would seem that a petition for revision ought to be taken within a similar time, unless there are circumstances excusing the delay; but courts have generally held that a petition for revision must be presented within six months. Blanchard v. Ammons (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 590, 183 Fed. 556.

Appearance and pleading by creditors.—Where it is sought to put in default all persons who have a right to appear and plead to an involuntary petition, the usual subpoena limiting the time in which to appear to five days should be issued; otherwise the adjudication will not be binding on those who do not consent to it if they appear within a reasonable time and ask to plead. B. R. Electric & Telephone Mfg. Co. v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 30 Am. B. R. 424, 306 Fed. 865.

Motion to dismiss.—A court of bankruptcy is a court of equity, and in the equity court a motion to dismiss made in good faith and raising substantial questions vitally affecting the merits, may be entertained by the court within a reasonable time, and may be made even on its own motion. Mat- court of an attorney-at-law licensed to practice there carries with it the presumption of authority to appear and act for his client in the proceeding in which he seeks to represent him. His mere appearance is prima facie evidence that he is duly authorized to represent and act for his client, and this presumption is conclusive in the absence of countervailing evidence.¹³⁵ The authority of an attorney to appear cannot be questioned by the answer of the defendant debtor.¹³⁶

e. Pleadings which may be entered.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The pleadings which may be entered in a bankruptcy proceeding are those fixed by the equity rules established by the Supreme Court.¹³⁷ Since the adoption of the new equity rules every defense in point of law arising upon the face of the bill, which might heretofore have been made by demurrer or plea, must be made by motion to dismiss or in the answer;¹³⁸ But the judge may modify these rules in "any particular case so as to facilitate a speedy hearing."¹³⁹ Cases arising before the changes in the equity rules are cited in the footnote.¹⁴⁰

(2) AMENDMENTS.—Amendments to all pleadings, other than the petition, and perhaps even amendments to involuntary petitions, should be made in accordance with the practice outlined in the equity rules.¹⁴¹ If a jury trial is desired, it should be applied for when the answer is entered, but in a separate paper.¹⁴² Where the creditor shows no proposed amended answer, no newly discovered facts, and no information as to what new defenses he desires to set up, he should not be permitted to amend.¹⁴³

(3) ANSWER AND REPLY.—The form of the answer is suggested by Form No. 6; but "the denial of bankruptcy" may also contain any available defense or counterclaim.¹⁴⁴ The form prescribed by the Supreme Court is not exclusive in its provisions.¹⁴⁵ If the answer is prolix and admixed with supposed grounds of demurrer, and does not admit or unequivocally deny the material facts of the petition, it may be stricken out.¹⁴⁶ If it requires argument to show that an answer is frivolous it may not be overruled on that ground.¹⁴⁷ When a petition does not show all the jurisdictional facts, as that the alleged bankrupt is not within the excepted classes, the proper plea is a motion to dismiss.¹⁴⁸ In such a case, however, as in all cases where the defense goes to the jurisdiction, the objection may be taken by answer,¹⁴⁹ or special defense to the jurisdiction of the court.¹⁵⁰ Where an involuntary petition charges as an act of bankruptcy a preferential transfer within the four months' period, a denial of the commission of the act of bankruptcy is sufficient as a denial of insolvency, where it is so regarded by the practitioners and the parties proceed to the taking of proof.¹⁵¹ Where the answer is multifarious and in response to a multifarious petition, leave will be granted to amend and file as of the day the original petition was filed.¹⁵² If no replication is filed to the answer, the latter is taken as true, and, if it alleges jurisdictional defects and no proofs are taken, a dismissal must result.¹⁵³ Unless the answer assert a set-off or counterclaim, no reply shall be required without special order of the court or judge, but the cause shall be deemed at issue upon the filing of the answer, and any new or affirmative matter therein shall be deemed to be denied by the answer.¹⁵⁴ Useful precedents will be found in the numerous cases on equity rules and practice in the Federal courts. VI. VERIFICATION OF PLEADINGS.

a. In general.—Subsection c provides that “all pleadings setting up matters of fact shall be verified under oath.” Such verification must be had before one of the officers designated in § 20. This requirement applies to specifications of objections to the discharge of a bankrupt, such specifications being deemed pleadings within the meaning of the word as used in this subsection.¹⁵⁴ But it does not require verification of a motion to dismiss a petition.^{155a} All pleadings setting up matters of fact must “be verified under oath.” By analogy to this requirement, district rules often also require petitions in a proceeding subsequent to the adjudication to be under oath. Under the former law, each of the petitioning creditors was obliged to verify the petition,¹⁵⁶ and this is probably so now; but, in case the petition is not verified by one of several petitioning creditors, a motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction¹⁵⁶ will be overruled, and an opportunity given to supply the omission.¹⁵⁷ The defect of want of verification may be waived by failure to object.¹⁵⁸ A defect in the verification is not jurisdictional and answering on the merits waives it.¹⁵⁹ The filing of an answer without special objection to the failure of verification will constitute a waiver.¹⁶⁰ A verification made before a notary public is defective in the statement of the venue if it does not show the verification to have been taken within the jurisdiction of the notary.¹⁶¹ Where the petitioning creditor or pleader is a partnership, the oath should be by one of the partners; where a corporation, by an officer, in each case acquainted with the facts.¹⁶² The verification of an involuntary petition is not subject to the rules of competency with respect to hearsay testimony, and hence a statement in the verification that the petitioner believed the matter alleged in the petition on information and belief to be true is not sufficient ground for the dismissal of the petition, although such statement should not be used and is mere surplusage.¹⁶⁷

167. Matter of Ball (D. C., N. Y.), 19 Am. B. R. 609, 156 Fed. 682.

A verification made by the petitioning creditors that the statements contained in an involuntary petition were true, “according to the best of their knowledge, information and belief,” is defective, as not complying with the official form, but since the verification is not jurisdictional, such defect is not fatal, so as to work a dismissal of the petition, and may be cured by amendment. In re Farthing (D. C., N. Car.), 29 Am. B. R. 732, 202 Fed. 557.

Verification on knowledge and belief.—The verification of an involuntary petition, by a statement that “the facts contained in the foregoing petition are true,” as the petitioners “verily believe,” is insufficient, where there is nothing in the petition showing or

If it appear upon the trial that the petitioners who verified the petition had no knowledge of any of the acts alleged therein, and that they did not make oath to the notary public who attached his jurat thereto, the verification is inadequate, and the petition should be dismissed,¹⁶⁸ and in such a case it may not be amended by filing nunc pro tunc another petition reciting the same facts and properly verified.¹⁶⁹ A verification is defective if made before a notary public who is one of the attorneys for the party making the verification.¹⁷⁰ But a verification may be made before an attorney, as notary public, who is not yet the attorney of record of the affiant.¹⁷¹

b. Verification by attorney.—There is some conflict among the authorities whether an attorney in fact may verify a petition where the facts are within his knowledge. The weight of authority seems to be in favor of the proposition that he may verify the petition.¹⁷² Though, when the creditor is present and the facts are within his knowledge, he doubtless ought to make the verification.¹⁷³ General Order IV requires no other evidence of an attorney's authority than the fact of his admission to practice in the circuit or district court.¹⁷⁴ The affidavit should be positive, based upon actual knowledge of the attorney.¹⁷⁵ The right of an attorney to verify specifications of objection to bankrupt's discharge are treated elsewhere in this work.^{176a}

VII. TRIALS IN INVOLUNTARY CASES

a. Without a jury.—Subsection d provides in effect that if the facts alleged in the petition are duly traversed by an answer, the judge must "determine, as soon as may be, the issues presented by the pleadings, without the interven-tending to show that the qualification as to the petitioners' belief was necessary to suit the circumstances of the particular case. Although a verification of a petition in involuntary bankruptcy upon belief is insufficient, the defect is not jurisdictional and may be cured by amendment. Sabin v. Blake-McFall Co. (C. C. R. 674], in which case the court said "The filing of a petition in bankruptcy is not a matter to be recklessly undertaken. The business, the credit, the financial standing, the property and reputation of the person against whom the petition is filed are at stake. The filing of the petition is frequently followed by the appointment of a receiver, which results in taking away from the alleged bankrupt all of his property, closing up and ruining his business and destroying his credit. Thus irreparable damage may result from an honest mistake. Stringent as the provisions of the Act are, they do not contemplate that creditors may invoke the jurisdiction of the court where, without knowledge of the facts, they recklessly subscribe to a petition setting out acts of bankruptcy without even the so-called 'formality' of having appeared before a notary public for the purpose of making oath to the petition, and where the notary public falsely certifies that oath was made before him. Such a certificate is not a verification. It is a falsification."

Positive terms.—In re Vastbinder (D. C., Penn.), 11 Am. B. R. 118, 126 Fed. 417, the court said: "There can be no doubt tion of a jury, except in cases where a jury trial is given by this act." The trial is brought on on the notice required by the practice of the district court in which the proceeding is, or under the district bankruptcy rules. Customarily, the consent of the court to setting the issue for trial on a day certain, other than during a regular term, is necessary. The burden of proof is on the petitioners, save, in certain circumstances, where the issue is solvency.¹⁷⁶ Thus, creditors must prove that their claims aggregate $500 over securities, or an adjudication will be refused.¹⁷⁷ The proof must be confined to the acts of bankruptcy alleged in the petition,¹⁷⁸ though, it seems, if the evidence shows the commission of an act of bankruptcy not alleged, the court may allow an amendment.¹⁷⁹ On the other hand, where the proof shows domicile where domicile is not alleged, the petition will be considered amended in accordance with the proof.¹⁸⁰ The practice on the trial itself is like other civil trials in the Federal courts, including the taking and reading of depositions.¹⁸¹

b. Trial by jury.—The trial of the issues may be without the intervention of a jury except in cases where a jury trial is given by the act. Section 19 of the act prescribes when the alleged bankrupt is entitled as a matter of right to a trial by jury. This right pertains solely to the question of his insolvency or whether or not he has committed the alleged act of bankruptcy. In such cases when a jury trial is demanded it must be granted. If no demand is made the court may, in its discretion, submit any specified issue of fact to a jury, in which case the verdict of the jury will be advisory merely and not binding upon the court,¹⁸² and the same is true where the demand for a jury trial is afterwards withdrawn.^{182a} This is in recognition of the equity jurisdiction possessed by the court.¹⁸³

c. Trial by referee or special master.—Subsection d of this section provides that if the facts alleged in the petition are controverted, the judge shall determine as soon as may be the issues presented by the pleadings, etc. As the term "judge" does not include a referee, it is evident that there is no authority to refer the issues to a referee. The testimony must be weighed and considered by the judge and his personal judgment exercised in the determination of each issue.¹⁸⁴ Though a reference to a special master or like ministerial officer may be ordered, to hear and report the testimony (with or without advisory findings thereupon), when the issue involves extended testimony and its hearing in open court appears to be impracticable.¹⁸⁵ However, such a reference should not be granted to determine issues of the place of residence and principal place of business of the alleged bankrupt; jurisdictional issues of that nature should be determined by the judge as a condition precedent to a reference of other issues.¹⁸⁶ The powers of such a special master, his compensation, and the method of bringing on and conducting a trial before him are in all respects similar to that on like references on contested discharges.¹⁸⁷ The master's report is brought up either by exceptions or on motion to confirm,¹⁸⁸ and the judge then enters the order of adjudication or dismissal, in accordance as the facts shall warrant.¹⁸⁹ He is, of course, not bound to follow the master's conclusions.

VIII. ADJUDICATION OR DISMISSAL.

a. In general.—Subsection d requires the judge "as soon as may be" to determine the issues, and make the adjudication or dismiss the petition. When a creditor's petition has once been filed, there must be either an adjudication or a dismissal.¹⁹⁰ If the former, the order is entered substantially as in Form No. 12. If the bankruptcy is that of a partnership and the individuals composing it, the form should be so changed as to amount to an adjudication of the partnership as such and of each member, all as distinct entities.¹⁹¹ Under the former law, it was held that a mere memorandum of the adjudication was not sufficient.¹⁹² An order must be entered and recorded. So also of the dismissal, which should be substantially in the words of Form No. 11. Both the statute and the general orders provide for costs to the prevailing party.¹⁹³ If petitioning creditors move for an adjudication upon the pleadings, they admit the facts properly pleaded in the answer, and a denial of the motion is in effect a determination that the answer is sufficient in law to defeat the petitioners' application.¹⁹⁴ Where the petition is sufficient an adjudication must be granted unless the answer is responsive to the averments of the petition.¹⁹⁵ When a debtor waives its demand for a jury trial, confesses its insolvency and the commission of one of the acts of bankruptcy alleged and formally admits the essential allegations of the creditors' petition, it is the duty of the bankruptcy court to promptly enter an adjudication of bankruptcy.¹⁹³

b. Adjudication on voluntary appearance.—An adjudication on a voluntary appearance by the bankrupt and an answer filed by him admitting the averments of the petition will conclude the bankrupt.¹⁹⁷ But, if such appearance is made and answer filed prior to the expiration of the time for answering, the rights of the creditors to plead to the petition are not affected.¹⁹⁸ On a hearing upon a petition and answer the averments of the answer must be taken as true.¹⁹⁹

c. Dismissal after trial.—If it appears from the pleadings or upon the trial that the court has no jurisdiction, either of the person or subject-matter, the petition should be dismissed.²⁰⁰ The court should direct such dismissal as soon as the want of jurisdiction appears.²⁰¹ If the petition is not sustained by the proof, dismissal will follow as a matter of course. Even if the petition contains a prayer for the appointment of receivers, selected by collusion between the alleged bankrupt and petitioning creditors, the adjudication should be ordered and the prayer for such receivers disregarded.²⁰² The fact that a suit is begun, after a petition in bankruptcy is filed, for the foreclosure of a mortgage on a portion, or on all, of the bankrupt's property, even if the value of the property is less than the amount claimed to be due on the mortgage, is not a sufficient reason for denial of an adjudication of bankruptcy. While it is necessary that a person owe debts in order to be adjudicated a bankrupt, it is not necessary that he have assets.²⁰³ The petition should be dismissed where it is shown that an adjudication would be a fraud upon the bankruptcy court and upon a State court.^{203a}

d. Dismissal by consent.—Where a dismissal is directed by the consent of parties, and not on the merits, the creditors are entitled to at least ten days' notice by mail, as will appear hereafter in the discussion under § 58-a and § 59-g. Some doubt has arisen as to the necessity of notice to all the creditors owing to a decision to the effect that the court may at any time before adjudication dismiss a petition upon the bankrupt's motion, without notice to those creditors who have not intervened or appeared in the proceeding.²⁰⁴ It seems

Consent after previous resistance.—It was never the intention of the Bankruptcy Act to permit a bankrupt, who has resisted an adjudication for nearly two years, to suddenly change his attitude, and to obtain an adjudication as of the date of filing the petition, upon application, upon securing a substantial property, which cannot be applied to the payment of his debts if his application is granted. Matter of Weidenfeld (D. C., N. Y.), 44 Am. B. R. 62, 257 Fed. 872.

198. Rights of creditors on voluntary appearance of bankrupt.—In the case of In re Humbert Co. (D. C., Iowa), 4 Am. B. R. 76, 100 Fed. 439, the court said: "A waiver on the part of the bankrupt of this period of time cannot deprive creditors of the right to appear in opposition to the petition, and until that time has elapsed it cannot be known whether a contest will or will not be made on behalf of creditors." In re Woods (D. C., Penn.), 13 Am. B. R. 240, 133 Fed. 82.

Method of review.—An adjudication in a voluntary proceeding in bankruptcy can be contested by creditors only in the manner provided by the Bankruptcy Act, which is either by a petition for review or appeal. Matter of Greer (D. C., Ky.), 40 Am. B. R. 797, 248 Fed. 753.

more in accordance with the statute, however, to apply the broad rule of law that, since every creditor has, once a petition is filed, the right to intervene, a petition should not be dismissed without notice to him.²⁰⁵ A petition certainly cannot be dismissed without the consent of all the petitioning creditors,²⁰⁶ and the provisions of the statute above referred to seem clearly to require that notice to the creditors be given. There are exceptions to the rule, as, where there are no assets, no claims proven, and no trustee appointed; though in such a case the petition is withdrawn, not dismissed.²⁰⁷ The practice of omitting such notice is dangerous, however, and the courts will usually decline to grant dismissals without proof of the names and addresses of creditors and due notice to them of the pending proceeding and the motion to dismiss.²⁰⁸ Even if a minority of the petitioning creditors object to the dismissal it should not be directed although the court may specify that it would be for the best interests of the creditors.²⁰⁹ Where all the petitioning creditors in good faith move for a dismissal of their petition the court should not retain the proceeding to determine issues raised by the answer, some of which it had no power to try.²¹⁰ A voluntary bankruptcy proceeding may not be dismissed by consent of the parties on motion after adjudication.²¹¹

e. Intervention by other creditors.—It is provided in § 59-f that “creditors other than original petitioners may at any time enter their appearance and join in the petition, or file an answer and be heard in opposition to the prayer of the petition.” This subject will be considered at length under that section. Any creditor may join in a petition already filed and pending, as a rule, at any time between the filing of the petition and the order of adjudication or dismissal. Creditors who do not exercise their right to become parties remain strangers to the litigation and, as such, unaffected by the decision of even essential subsidiary issues, and are merely bound by the adjudication so far as it is strictly an adjudication of bankruptcy.^{211a}

f. Effect of adjudication generally.—An adjudication confers jurisdiction both complete and exclusive, and in rem as well as in personam.²¹² The adjudication

g. Effect of adjudication on rights of creditors.—The adjudication is, like other judicial determinations, subject to the well-settled rule that matters which have been once litigated and determined by the judgment of a court cannot again be made the subject of legal contention as between the parties to such judgment and their privies. So that where the question of the bankrupt's residence,²¹⁷ or the question of insolvency,²¹⁸ or the amount of the petitioner's claim,²¹⁹ were at issue, the adjudication in respect thereto is binding upon the parties and their privies in all subsequent proceedings. Creditors are bound as parties, whether they appear or not, in respect to all issues which must necessarily be determined by the adjudication; otherwise there would be no end to controversy as to these matters, as every creditor might claim the right to be heard by independent suit.²²⁰ But where it appears that the requisite number of creditors join in the petition and it is not necessary to determine the validity of the claim of any one of them for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction, the adjudication is not res adjudicata as to the validity or amount of answer an involuntary petition in bankruptcy, was to guard against an improvident adjudication and to protect those whose peculiar interest might be prejudiced by establishing the status of bankruptcy. Gratnot County State Bank v. Johnson (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 43 Am. B. R. 357, 39 Sup. Ct. 263.

213. Decree operates in rem.—In the case of Carter v. Hobbs (D. C., Ind.), 1 Am. B. R. 215, 92 Fed. 594, the court said: "The decree operates in rem, and from the moment of the adjudication in bankruptcy the bankrupt's estate is in custodia legis and under the jurisdiction of this court; it is fundamental that no court or individual can interfere with such court and possession; the assertion of any right against, or to participate in the res so in custodia legis, must be sought in the court in whose custody it is; an attempt to assert such right elsewhere would be regarded as a contempt."

Property never administered.—The adjudication of bankruptcy does not, as a matter of law, destroy forever all the rights and remedies of the bankrupt to all his property, but only to that part thereof which is administered. The bankruptcy court or the trustee may decline to administer all that is returned, or some of it may never be returned; and as to this the bankrupt may recover after his discharge. Watson v. Motley (Ala. Sup. Ct.), 39 Am. B. R. 750, 75 So. 147.

Effect on lease to partnership.—An adjudication against a partnership operates to transfer by operation of law to the trustee a lease held by one of the partners, and authorizes the lessor to avoid the lease for a transfer "by operation of law," without his consent, in violation of a covenant of the lease. Matter of Georgalas Brothers (D. C., Ohio), 40 Am. B. R. 163, 245 Fed. 129.

The agency of a third person to act for the bankrupt in the management of his business is discharged by his adjudication in bankruptcy. Petty v. Portman (Pa. Com. Pl.), 39 Am. B. R. 747, 65 Pittab. Leg. J. 293.

R. 433, 261 Fed. 894.

Res judicata.—An adjudication in bankruptcy is, for the purpose of administering the debtor's property, conclusive upon all the world. So far as it declares the status of the debtor, even strangers to the decree may not attack it collaterally. But like other judgments in rem, it is not res judicata as to the facts or as to the subsidiary questions of law on which it is based, except as between parties to the proceedings or privies thereto. Gratnot County State Bank v. Johnson (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 43 Am. B. R. 357, 39 Sup. Ct. 263.

The rights of all parties interested in a bankrupt's estate are to be determined as of the date of the bankruptcy. Goodwin v. Barro Sav. Bank & Trust Co. (Vt. Sup. Ct.), 39 Am. B. R. 153, 91 Vt. 228, 100 Atl. 34.

the claims of such creditors offered for allowance before the referee.²²¹ However, an adjudication in a contested bankruptcy proceeding is res adjudicata and conclusive upon those who have not actually taken part in the contest only as to the status of the bankrupt and not as to the commission of a particular act of bankruptcy, although it be the one alleged in the petition.²²² Where a petition charges different acts of bankruptcy and the adjudication does not show upon which one of them it proceeded, it does not render either charge res adjudicata in further proceedings.²²³ The adjudication will constitute the breach of an executory contract for services²²⁴ and will terminate the agency of a bankrupt connected with the estate transferred by his bankruptcy.²²⁵ Where a bankrupt is denied his discharge, creditors may proceed against him again as to after-acquired property, notwithstanding an appeal from the order denying his discharge.²²⁶ A mere adjudication does not operate as a stay of execution or prosecution of a claim, where the defendant has not been discharged, and the enforcement of such claim has not been regularly stayed.²²⁷

h. Vacating adjudication.—(1) IN GENERAL.—An application to vacate the adjudication is unusual but, in given circumstances, proper.²²⁸ The practice is not prescribed, but may be on petition or written motion and such notice as the court may order.^{229a} It can be made only by the bankrupt²²⁹ or a person who could have resisted the original petition, in other words, by one who has a claim provable in the case.²³⁰ The fact that a creditor stated in his petition that he appeared specially, and did not submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court, is no ground for refusing to vacate the adjudication.²³¹ The application must be made to the court that granted the order.²³² On the motion to vacate the proceedings the bankruptcy proceedings are admissible in evidence.^{232a}

(2) APPLICATION TO BE MADE SEASONABLY.—The adjudication may be set aside upon the application of creditors, where it was made prior to the expiration of five days after the filing of the petition, although the bankrupt appeared and consented to adjudication.²³³ But such an application must be made promptly.²³⁴ Creditors who would assail the adjudication should act

Adjudication binding on question of insolvency.—The creditors of a bankrupt are parties to the proceeding to have him so adjudged and are precluded by the adjudication from questioning bankrupt's insolvency at the time the petition was filed. Cook v. Robinson (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 182, 194 Fed. 785.

Adjudication as evidence of insolvency.—While secured creditors are not bound by an adjudication in bankruptcy, and may litigate the same issues in another proceeding, still it is prima facie evidence of what is therein decreed, that the bankrupts were insolvent at that date, and may be considered as of some weight in determining whether the bankrupts were insolvent at the date of a transfer made over four and one-half months before. *Cawthorn v. C. A. 517, the court said: "If it were necessary in order to bind creditors by a judgment in bankruptcy that they should appear and answer, as they have a right to do, then an adjudication could be prevented simply by creditors abstaining from appearing in the proceedings. But it is well settled that the proceedings are in large part in rem, and are binding whether the bankrupt or creditors appear or not." As to adjudication as res adjudicata, see Am. B. R. Dig., § 281.

Ct.), 143 Ga. 734, 35 Am. B. R. 119, 85 S. E. 875. It absolves the bankrupt from no agreement, no contract, and discharges no liability. Watson v. Merrill (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 14 Am. B. In an action to recover preference, the defendant may controvert and contest the trustee's allegations and proofs respecting the defendant's guilty knowledge and fraudulent conduct, notwithstanding the fact that the alleged transfer formed the basis of the adjudication in bankruptcy. *Ward v. with reasonable promptness after they received notice of the proceeding and of the reasons of their objections; if creditors knew of the filing of the petition in ample time for them to demur or answer, they should not be permitted, where two months had elapsed, and the condition of the property and the relations of the parties had materially changed, to stay the proceedings and vacate the adjudication, for a cause which might have been set up by demurrer or answer.²²⁵ After affirmance of an adjudication on appeal the district court may not grant a rehearing and thus permit a re-examination of the questions with which the appellate court has dealt.²²⁶

(3) GROUNDS FOR VACATING.—After an order of adjudication is entered it cannot be vacated except upon a ground which goes to the jurisdiction of the court.^{226a} An adjudication in involuntary proceedings obtained by the consent of the bankrupt, where he appeared generally by attorney and in person, filed schedules and otherwise recognized the proceedings, will not be vacated in the absence of proof that he was induced to give his consent by fraud.²²⁷ Being in the nature of a motion for a new trial, the application should rest on a showing of facts, on their face seeming to entitle the moving party to the relief.^{227a} An adjudication will not be set aside where it was warranted by proof of an act of bankruptcy sufficiently alleged, although other acts were not properly pleaded or proved,²²⁸ nor will it be set aside because of a mere clerical error by the referee in fixing the return day in the proceeding.^{228a} An adjudication may be vacated on the ground that the alleged bankrupt was not subject to adjudication, but even in such a case the adjudication is not void, and the court should consider the laches of the petitioner and all other circumstances affecting the right to the relief.²²⁹ Although a creditor may move to vacate an adjudica-

228a. Objections.—On petition by a purchaser of the bankrupt's property on execution sale to vacate the adjudication, objections by a creditor on the day of the hearing should be stricken out because such objections were unnecessary and would be considered by the court in reaching a decision upon issues made by the petition and the answer of the bankrupt and trustee. *Abbott v. Laches in making application.—Where the adjudication was made March 28, 1907, and the order to show cause why the same should not be vacated was entered Aug. 2, 1907, upon the petition of a creditor who had no notice of the bankruptcy proceeding until June 14, 1907, his delay, there being no intervening rights, is insufficient to constitute such laches as will debar him from showing that the whole bankruptcy proceedings were invalid. Matter of Altonwood Park Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 31, 160 Fed. 448. Where three years have elapsed since the adjudication of a husband, the wife is precluded by laches from appearing and contesting the allegations of insolvency in the petition. Matter of Gibbons (D. tion upon a voluntary petition because of the bankrupt's non-residence,²⁴⁰ yet where the petition alleges residence and the creditor assents thereto and proves his claim, he cannot thereafter move to vacate the adjudication.²⁴¹ Creditors who adopt the petition of stockholders of a bankrupt corporation to have a voluntary adjudication vacated and dismissed have no right to contest the voluntary adjudication.^{241a} A voluntary adjudication may be vacated where no assets are shown and the date shows that the petitioner cannot receive a discharge because of having received a discharge on a previous voluntary petition within six years.^{241b}

a. Where the judge is in the district or division.—If no pleadings are filed on or before the last day for filing, the judge must "on the next day, if present, or as soon thereafter as practicable, make the adjudication or dismiss the petition." The last three words suggest that, in default cases, the judge is required to do more than grant the prayer of the petition; he must examine the petition and ascertain whether it alleges facts sufficient to bring it within the requirements of the statute; if not, he should dismiss it, notwithstanding the bankrupt's default. Even if an answer is filed after the time to file it has expired, but before adjudication, an adjudication on default must be granted.²⁴⁴ The presence of the judge on the next day after the time to plead expires, seems to make an immediate adjudication imperative. Otherwise, it must be as soon thereafter as practicable. The failure to contest the petition by any person having the right so to do establishes the truth of its allegations, and an adjudication thereon is binding as against everybody.²⁴⁵

After adjudication of term.—It has been held that an adjudication in bankruptcy will not be vacated by an application presented after the adjournment of the term of court at which the adjudication was made. Matter of Ives (D. C., Mich.), 6 Am. B. R. 633, 111 Fed. 495. Where three years have elapsed since the adjudication of a husband, the wife is precluded by laches from appearing and contesting the allegations of insolvency in the petition. Matter of Gibbons (D. C., Wash.), 35 Am. B. R. 620, 225 Fed. 420.

Five weeks' delay.—It is not an abuse of the court's discretion to refuse to permit a creditor to attack an adjudication where the motion is first made seven weeks after the filing of the petition and the appointment of receivers, and five weeks after the adjudication, and the creditors were aware of the filing of the petition within forty-eight hours thereafter, and the administration of the estate had, in the meantime, proceeded without objection. *In re First Nat. Effect of appeal.—Under section 1-a (2) of the bankruptcy act defining "adjudication," the mere taking of an appeal and the dismissal of the same, either by the appellant or the appellate court, is not a final confirmation, so as to change the date of adjudication from the time the original decree is made to the dismissal of the appeal. Moore Bros. v. Cowan (Ala. Sup. Ct.), 173 Ala. 534, 20 Am. B. R. 902, 55 So. 908.

241a. Fraud perpetrated on the bankrupt in connection with the adjudication is not sufficient, unless it enters into the order of adjudication. Matter of S. & S. Mfg. & Sales Co. (D. C., Ohio), 39 Am. B. R. 766, 246 Fed. 1006.

Vacating and setting aside.—Where a bankrupt on a motion to vacate an adjudication entered upon its default and to quash service of the petition and subpoena, supported by return of the marshal, upon the ground that the person served was not at the time an officer of the alleged bankrupt, is opposed by an affidavit on behalf of the petitioning creditors questioning the good faith of the resignation by the person served, and the court gives the bankrupt five days within which to appear and plead to the petition, failing to do which, the order of adjudication is to stand, and the bankrupt fails to appear, the adjudication should stand. Matter of Sutter Hotel Co. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 620, 241 Fed. 267.

b. Where the judge is absent.—If the judge is not within the district or division the day after the time to plead expires, the clerk must “forthwith refer the case to the referee.” “Division of the district” here means the divisions into which some of the Federal districts are divided by the general law, and not the referee districts.²⁴⁶ This is done by an order of reference substantially in the words of Form No. 15. On its receipt, the functions and duties of the judge as to making the adjudication or dismissing the petition devolves on the referee.²⁴⁷

X. TRIALS IN VOLUNTARY CASES.

a. In general.—Subsection g provides that upon filing a voluntary petition the judge shall hear the petition and make the adjudication or dismiss the petition. The practice here is the same as where default was made in an involuntary case, and no pleading had been filed in opposition to the petition on the last day for filing. The judge, if in the district or division, must adjudicate or dismiss; if he is absent, the clerk must forthwith refer the case to the referee, who then proceeds in the stead of the judge. It seems that an answer cannot be interposed to a voluntary petition.²⁴⁸ While creditors may contest any petition in involuntary bankruptcy, no provision is made by the Bankruptcy Act for contesting a petition in voluntary bankruptcy.²⁴⁹ The proper method of attack is by petition or motion to set aside the adjudication.^{249a} A motion to set aside an adjudication may be granted where a bankrupt at the time of filing the petition had not resided within the district the required length of time, but the proceedings will be continued under a second order of adjudication, where when the motion was made the bankrupt had resided in the district a sufficient time to give the court jurisdiction.²⁵⁰

b. Voluntary petition while involuntary petition pending.—There was some doubt under the former law whether a debtor, against whom a creditors’ petition was pending, could be adjudicated on his voluntary petition subsequently filed.²⁵¹ And this, even though under that law petitions could be dismissed by consent and without a general notice to creditors. Under the present law it seems well established that the pendency of an involuntary petition will not prevent an insolvent debtor, prior to adjudication thereon, from filing a voluntary petition.²⁵² The tendency of the decisions is to adjudicate on the voluntary petition and, by subsequent steps, protect the rights of the petitioning creditors flowing from their earlier petition.²⁵³ A voluntary proceeding takes precedence over an involuntary proceeding commenced in another district, especially where the basis of the jurisdiction in the voluntary proceeding, the domicile or residence of the bankrupt, has been clearly established, while the basis of the involuntary proceeding, the principal place of business of the bankrupt is doubtful.²⁵⁴

XI. ORDER OF REFERENCE AND EFFECT.

Under this section two facts must exist in order to warrant the clerk in referring the case to the referee, viz.: (1) That no pleadings have been filed within the time provided for pleading; (2) the absence of the judge from the district, or the division, "on the next day after the last day on which pleadings may be filed." In view of the terms of clause "d" of the section, the requirement that "no pleadings have been filed" should be construed to mean no pleadings in opposition to the petition, and the fact that an answer confessing the allegations of the petition has been filed ought not to be a legal obstacle to the reference of a case by the clerk to the referee.²⁵⁵ The order of reference required under subsections f and g, where the judge is absent from the district or division of the district in which the petition is filed or pending, should be in the form prescribed by Form No. 15.²⁵⁶ If made after adjudication, Form No. 14 is applicable;²⁵⁷ it has been held that such an order may be made by the deputy clerk, the act of signing being ministerial and not judicial.²⁵⁸ This order and a copy of the petition and schedules in voluntary cases, and of the petition at least in involuntary cases, must be sent by mail or delivered personally by the clerk to the proper referee. The order fixes a day on which the bankrupt must appear and after which the referee shall have jurisdiction. This should usually be the following day. It is thought, however, that the referee has complete jurisdiction the moment the order is made; Form No. 14, to this extent at least, is not in accord with the law. In effect the referee then becomes, as to that proceeding, a court of original jurisdiction,²⁵⁹ and the judge a court of appeal.²⁶⁰ After reference to the referee, the practice on both

Collateral attack.—The ground of an adjudication cannot be collaterally attacked, for as to the bankrupt and the creditors the adjudication is as binding as a judgment inter partes upon due hearing in a court of competent jurisdiction. Federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction to adjudge a person a bankrupt and to appoint a receiver, and where the order of a Federal court is irregular, improvident, or unauthorized, it should be corrected or questioned in that forum and not in the State court by collateral attack. Moore Bros. v. Cowan (Sup. Ct., Ala.), 173 Ala. 536, 28 Am. B. R. 902, 55 So. 903. A decision of the bankruptcy court sustaining an involuntary petition, although erroneous, is conclusive unless reversed or vacated, and cannot be attacked in a suit to restrain attachment proceedings brought against the bankrupt. Larkin-Green Logging Co. v. Sabin (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 86, 222 Fed. 814. An adjudication cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground that the principal place of business of the bankrupt was not in the district. Roszell Bros. v. Continental Coal Corp. (D. C., Ky.), 38 Am. B. R. 31, 235 Fed. 343, affd. sub nom. Matter of Continental Coal Corporation (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 38 Am. B. R. 168, 238 Fed. 113.

In a criminal prosecution for the concealment of assets from the trustee, the defendant cannot attack the adjudication upon the ground that it was made by the referee when the judge, in fact, was not absent from the district, if the order of reference recites his absence. Gilbertson v. U. S. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 22 Am. B. R. 32, 168 Fed. 672.

Rights of petitioning creditors.—Thus it is still an open question whether an adjudication can be made on the voluntary petition at once, reserving to the petitioning creditors the right to bring forward their proceeding and consolidate as of the date they filed (see In re Stegar [D. C., Ala.], 7 Am. B. R. 665, 113 Fed. 978), or whether adjudication must be withheld until the notice is given (In re Dwyer [D. C., N. Dak.], 7 Am. B. R. 532, 112 Fed. 777). The former seems the wiser practice. Otherwise great injury to assets may result from the delay. See also In re Waxelbaum (D. C., N. Y.), 3 Am. B. R. 392, 98 Fed. 580.

255. Matter of Sage (D. C., Mo.), 35 Am. B. R. 436, 224 Fed. 525. In this case it appeared that on the sixth day after a petition in bankruptcy was filed, the bankrupt appeared and filed an answer, admitting the substantial allegations of the petition, and consenting that he be adjudged a bankrupt, and asking that the case be at once referred to the referee, and the clerk, without issuing a subpoena fixing the return day or finding or specifying that the judge was absent "on the next day after the last day on which pleadings may be filed," as required by section 18 of the Bankruptcy Act, found and recited in his order of reference that the judge was absent "at the time of the filing of the petition." It was held that although the procedure was irregular the defects were not jurisdictional and did not render the adjudication subject to collateral attack.

256. Absence of district judge.—That an order of reference in a voluntary bankruptcy recites the absence of the district judge from the district does not affect the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, acquired upon the filing of the petition, to adjudge the petitioner a bankrupt; such recital relates only to the course of procedure within the jurisdiction of the court, and is not open to collateral attack. *Gilbertson v. SECTION NINETEEN.

JURY TRIALS

§ 19. Jury Trials.—a A person against whom an involuntary petition has been filed shall be entitled to have a trial by jury, in respect to the question of his insolvency, except as herein otherwise provided, and any act of bankruptcy alleged in such petition to have been committed, upon filing a written application therefor at or before the time within which an answer may be filed. If such application is not filed within such time, a trial by jury shall be deemed to have been waived.

b If a jury is not in attendance upon the court, one may be specially summoned for the trial, or the case may be postponed, or, if the case is pending in one of the district courts within the jurisdiction of a circuit court of the United States, it may be certified for trial to the circuit court sitting at the same place, or by consent of parties when sitting at any other place in the same district, if such circuit court has or is to have a jury first in attendance.

c The right to submit matters in controversy, or an alleged offense under this act, to a jury shall be determined and enjoyed, except as provided by this act, according to the United States laws now in force or such as may be hereafter enacted in relation to trials by jury.

I. JURY TRIAL IN CONTESTED ADJUDICATIONS.

a. Comparative legislation.—In England, a jury trial in bankruptcy proceedings is always discretionary,¹ but, where the facts are disputed, will usually be granted.² Under the law of 1841, trial by jury could be demanded by the debtor within ten days after a decree adjudging him a bankrupt "to ascertain the facts of such bankruptcy."³ By the law of 1867, the demand must have been made in writing on the return day, and then the jury was "to ascertain the fact of such alleged bankruptcy."⁴ There is no provision in the Canadian act regarding jury trials.

b. Jury trials; when granted.—The present law clearly limits the issues to be submitted to a jury to two; (a) the question of insolvency and (b) whether the alleged act of bankruptcy has been committed.⁵ It is not thought, however, that this precludes the jury from passing on any other pertinent question, as, whether the alleged bankrupt was domiciled within the district the required time, or whether a petitioning creditor has a provable debt, or whether the debtor is in one of the excepted classes not amenable to involuntary bankruptcy, provided the judge submits such an issue to them.⁶ Subsection a merely declares on what issues in a contested adjudication trial by jury is a matter of right.

General assignment.—Where a petition in involuntary bankruptcy alleges that within the four months' period, the alleged bankrupt made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, and the answer denies each and every allegation of the petition, and a demand for a jury trial is filed therewith, the alleged bankrupt is entitled to a jury trial of the question whether he has made such general assignment. The right to a jury trial in respect to the questions specified upon application of the person against whom an involuntary petition has been filed, as provided in this section, is absolute and cannot be withheld at the discretion of the court.⁷ In that respect it differs from the trial of an issue out of chancery, which a court of equity is not bound to grant, nor bound by the verdict if such trial be granted.⁸ Acts of bankruptcy are used in this connection, as they are set forth in a preceding section of the statute, and are thus given a definite meaning. Whether one be chiefly engaged in farming has no relation, within this meaning, to any act of bankruptcy; and like other jurisdictional questions is for the court.⁹ Subsection a does not confer upon a petitioning or answering creditor the right to a trial by jury of an issue pertaining to alleged acts of bankruptcy or the insolvency of the alleged bankrupt.¹⁰ The right is confined to the debtor; but a debtor cannot bring in issue before a jury the intention alone, with which he, while insolvent, permitted a creditor to have a preference.¹¹ Upon motion the issues will be limited to the insolvency of the alleged bankrupt and the act of bankruptcy charged in the petition to have been committed.¹² The issue of insolvency involves the question of a fair valuation of the bankrupt's property, and the validity and amount of petitioners' claims.¹³ The question as to whether an alleged bankrupt is a partner, when decisive of the question of his solvency, must be kept open for the jury.¹⁴ Where the issue is insolvency, the burden is upon the petitioning creditors.¹⁵ The question of an alleged bankrupt's insanity may be submitted to the jury as an essential part of the defense that he did not commit an act of bankruptcy.¹⁶ Where the bankruptcy court, having exclusive jurisdiction, also has custody of certain money, and the distribution of the fund is the only issue before the court, there is no question under the Bankruptcy Act or other law, to be submitted to a jury for determination.¹⁷

c. How jury trial demanded.—The demand must be by a written application. No form is prescribed,¹⁸ but any statement signed by the bankrupt and indicating the demand will be sufficient. If the application is granted, an order substantially in Form No. 7 should be entered by the clerk. Such an application can be made only by "a person against whom an involuntary petition has been filed;" thus an answering creditor has not the right to a jury trial, even on the two specified questions.¹⁹ The application must be made within five days after the return day. If there has been a general extension of time to plead, it seems that a demand filed after the original day to plead, but before the extension of time expires, will be too late.²⁰

d. Effect of failure to demand.—It is clear that, if no application for a jury trial is filed within the time limited, the right is waived.²¹ At the same time, even after such a waiver, an issue or issues of fact may be framed and sent to the jury, though the court in that event will not be bound by its findings, and error is not predicable on the court's remarks or its charge to the jury.²² Where, however, the proceeding is only constructively involuntary, as some partnership proceedings, and the case has already been referred to the referee, the time does not expire until the day set for the hearing.²³ Where a stipulation is entered into by the attorneys of the parties in interest, waiving trial by jury and submitting the case to the trial judge, he is constituted an arbitrator, and his decision will not be disturbed where there is evidence to support it.²⁴

II. HOW A JURY IS OBTAINED.

a. In general.—As under the former law, perhaps before and certainly after the amendatory act of 1874,²⁵ the trial may be had at a stated term which has a jury in attendance, or before a special jury called for that purpose.²⁶ But the statute does not specify how such a special jury is to be paid, and this clause, in actual practice, will be found of little avail. The additional clause, permitting the certification of the cause to a circuit court, is of no force since the abolishment of that court by the judicial code.

b. The trial.—The trial before a jury is conducted and subject to the immemorial rules surrounding a trial at common law.²⁷ The right to introduce evidence by way of deposition is unquestioned,²⁸ and the method of taking evidence is further suggested by the equity rules.²⁹ The judge can take the case from the jury by directing a verdict, if no question of fact develops, or he can set the verdict aside.³⁰ If each party asks the court to direct a verdict in his favor, it is equivalent to a request for a finding of facts, and if the court directs the verdict, both parties are concluded on such findings.³¹ As has already been suggested, he can submit issues to them, other than those peculiarly theirs to determine.³² The verdict will usually be special,³³ and in the form of an answer to one or both the statutory issues raised in the case. The judge is, of course, bound by the jury's determination of questions of fact submitted to them in response to a demand as a matter of right.

III. TRIAL BY JURY OF OFFENSES OR OTHER CONTROVERSIES.

a. Meaning of the subsection.— Subsection c unquestionably refers to all issues that may arise in bankruptcy proceedings and as a part thereof, other than contested adjudications. The seventh amendment to the constitution gives an absolute right to trial by jury in all actions at law where the amount in question exceeds twenty dollars. It has, therefore, been suggested that other issues which, were they not parts of a proceeding, as for instance, a motion to expunge a claim duly proved, would be mere actions at law, must, on demand of either party, be submitted to a jury.³⁴ Barton v. Barbour,³⁵ decided by the Supreme Court under the former law, seems, however, to be conclusive; it holds that trials without a jury in bankruptcy proceedings are not a violation of constitutional right. Nor does the reference to the Revised Statutes³⁶ made by this subsection change the rule. The district court does not try equity causes by jury; no more did the circuit court, in which, even in actions at law, a jury might be dispensed with by consent. Nor do the words "to submit matters in controversy, or an alleged offense under this act" become meaningless, in this view. Offenses, being crimes, must be tried by jury; actions to recover back property are clearly matters in controversy outside bankruptcy proceedings proper.³⁷ The words quoted clearly refer to these and like controversies, which are not strictly "proceedings in bankruptcy."³⁸ This would seem to be the test. Besides, "hearing" and "trial" are not in the present statute set off against each other.³⁹ The generic word "trial" is used in the present act as indicating a judicial determination of a controverted question, either without or with a jury. If, however, the action is to recover property fraudulently transferred and laid in either Federal court, it is doubtful whether a jury trial can be had as matter of right. If not a part of the proceeding in bankruptcy, such a trial is certainly in equity.^{39a} The judge could, however, frame an issue and submit it to the jury; and in many cases this will be done. Contempts are clearly not within this subsection, and they will be heard by the judge.⁴⁰ But where an action is brought in a State court to recover the value of personal property claimed to have been disposed of by the bankrupt in fraud of creditors, it may be that, under the State laws, either party is entitled to a jury trial.⁴¹

b. Jury trials on contested discharges.— What has gone before indicates that a bankrupt when petitioning for a discharge has not the right to demand a jury trial. This was otherwise under the former law.⁴² The omission of the present law to give this right in very words is significant of an intention to deny it. No cases are yet to be found in the books. However, as previously suggested, the judge can, in his discretion, send a specified issue to a jury, and, when the objection to a discharge consists in an offense against the act, will often feel constrained so to do. OATHS, AFFIRMATIONS.

§ 20. Oaths, Affirmations.—a Oaths required by this act, except upon hearings in court, may be administered by (1) referees; (2) officers authorized to administer oaths in proceedings before the courts of the United States, or under the laws of the State where the same are to be taken; and (3) diplomatic or consular officers of the United States in any foreign country.

b Any person conscientiously opposed to taking an oath may, in lieu thereof, affirm. Any person who shall affirm falsely shall be punished as for the making of a false oath.

I. OATHS.

a. Comparison with former act.—The present act is here much more liberal than its predecessor. Prior to the amendatory act of 1874, even proofs of claim could be sworn to only before a register or circuit court commissioner; if the oath was to the petition or inventory, it could also be sworn to before the judge. Now, an oath to any paper to be used in a bankruptcy proceedings can be taken before any officer authorized to administer oaths in proceedings in either the Federal or State courts of the place where taken. This will in most States include, besides the judge, the referee, United States commissioners, notaries public, justices of the peace, commissioners of deeds, and civil magistrates in general. An oath taken before a notary public of one State, over his signature and seal, is sufficient for use in proceedings in another State and no further proof is needed, in the first instance, of his official character.¹ If in foreign countries, it must be before a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States there resident; an oath before a foreign local magistrate will not be sufficient.

b. How oaths are authenticated.—If the officer taking the oath has a seal, he should impress it on the paper.² If not, the better practice is to secure a certificate from some clerk of a court of record, that he is such an officer. It is not thought, however, that such certificates are necessary, other than to the effect that in the State where taken the officer is authorized to administer oaths in proceedings before its courts. No certificate is, therefore, necessary when the claim is to be filed in the State within which it is verified; the referee should take judicial cognizance of the fact that the officer was so authorized.³ Powers of attorney can be acknowledged before a referee, a United States commissioner, or a notary public,⁴ but it has been held that the power to administer oaths granted by this section carries with it the incidental power to take acknowledgments of letters of attorney.⁵ A person authorized to take affidavits and acknowledgments will not be permitted to do so "before himself" and attest to his own veracity or identity.⁶

c. Oaths before attorneys of record.—Under the former act, proofs of debt could not properly be taken before the claimant's attorney of record.⁷ This, it seems, is not so now,⁸ unless the attorney has previously filed an appearance.⁹ A proof is nothing more than an affidavit, and, while amounting to a prima facie case,¹⁰ when filed, is not evidence on a motion or petition to expunge. The better practice, however, is to see that a petition is sworn to or a claim is verified before some one other than the claimant's attorney.¹¹

d. Defects in forms.—The forms are in this particular frequently misleading. Several seem to indicate that they must be sworn to before the referee. The oaths to the schedules¹² are either unnecessary, or, if not so, ought to have a jurat similar to the oaths to the petition. But, where possible, the forms of oaths prescribed should be followed.¹³

a. Comparative legislation.—The English bankruptcy act is similar to our own in respect to the compulsory examination of third parties.¹ In addition to other designated persons, the court may summon for examination any person deemed "capable of giving information respecting the debtor, his dealings or property," and the scope, method, and effect of examinations is prescribed and regulated by the General Rules.² The Canadian statute limits the examination to the debtor and persons connected with the debtor as agents, clerks, servants, etc.^{3a} All previous laws in this country have provided for the examination of third parties, in aid of administration.³ The law of 1867 did so in different words, but much to the same effect. Cases decided under that act will be found useful precedents, and many of the most important ones are cited hereafter in their appropriate places.

b. Scope of subsection.—Subsection a provides for the compulsory examination of any person, "including the bankrupt." It should be noted, however, that, while the bankrupt is thus made a compulsory witness as to his own "acts, conduct, or property," by § 7 (9), he must also appear and be ready to testify concerning the same things at the first meeting of creditors. His examination at that time is considered elsewhere;⁴ and whatever is there said will apply equally to an examination of a bankrupt under this subsection. In effect, the only difference, so far as the examination of the bankrupt goes, is one of practice. Where first meetings are kept alive by continuances, as is customary, his examination can be had or resumed so long as the meeting lasts. If the meeting has been adjourned, an examination of the bankrupt can, under § 7 (9), still be had "at such times as the court shall order," or it can be required under the subsection now discussed. Clearly, therefore, the main purpose of § 21-a is to authorize and regulate the examinations of third parties, rather than of the bankrupt.⁵ Without the power so to examine, the remedy of the statute against preferences and fraudulent transfers would often be unavailing. The issuance of an order directing the examination of a third person concerning the bankrupt estate is within the discretion of the court.⁶ The examination concerning "the acts, conduct and property of a bankrupt," is not less broad in its scope than the examination of the bankrupt himself, as provided in § 7.⁷ But the section does not authorize the examination of a third party as to an alleged contract by the trustee transferring the property of the estate to the witness.^{7a} Much of what has already been said as to the examination of the bankrupt⁸ applies with equal force here. If the person to be examined appears before a referee, it is the referee's duty to receive the evidence offered, note objections, and generally follow the equity practice.⁹

c. Who may apply.—The application for examination may be made by the bankrupt, a creditor or any officer,¹⁰ or party in interest.^{10a} In this respect the present law is somewhat broader than the act of 1867.¹¹ "Officer" has been held to include a receiver.¹² A creditor whose claim has not yet been presented may apply.¹³ When a person listed as a creditor states that he has a claim against the bankrupt's estate, and demands an examination to decide whether he will take an affirmative part in the bankruptcy proceedings the court may direct

5. Purpose of examination under § 21-a.—In the case of Matter of Bryant (D. C. Pa.), 28 Am. B. R. 504, 188 Fed. 530, the court quotes the text with approval and says: "That is the intention of the law to require a bankrupt to submit freely to examination concerning his estate is very apparent. Application may be granted at any time before final disposition of the estate, in the exercise of a sound discretion of the judge or his referee. Surely the bankrupt should not be unnecessarily harassed, vexed, or annoyed, but where it appears that the creditors may be benefited by further examination, or for any other good reason appearing, the order should be allowed. The vigorous and skillful use of examinations of insolvent bankrupts is often the only means by which creditors are enabled to prevent the Bankruptcy Act being turned into a shield for dishonesty. If hardship and inconvenience results from such examination, as it sometimes may, it should be remembered that a discharge of the bankrupt from his debts is a great privilege and a prize that will reward the honest debtor amply for such inconvenience."

"Nor was the trustee required to set forth the nature and character of the testimony in detail intended to be adduced. The very purpose of an examination under section 21-a is to discover property of the bankrupt, or to learn of its whereabouts and as to the acts of the bankrupt with respect thereto. Such an examination is in its very nature an investigation intended to satisfy the minds of those whose judgment it is true is frequently not well founded by which the honest debtor has all to gain."

The objects of an examination are to assist the trustee to discover concealed assets of the bankrupt, to ascertain whether the bankrupt has given preferences to any of his creditors, to learn whether the bankrupt has been guilty of acts which would prevent him from obtaining his discharge in bankruptcy, and, in general to aid the trustee to recover for the creditors any property to which they are entitled, to protect their rights in the bankruptcy proceedings, and to assist the court in administering the estate of the bankrupt. Matter of Prussian (D. C., Mich.), 43 Am. B. R. 13, 255 Fed. 857.

7. The object of the examination of the bankrupt and other witnesses to show the condition of the estate is to enable the court to discover its extent and whereabouts, and to come into possession of it, that the rights of creditors may be preserved." No specific issue can be made up, but any fact or circumstance is relevant and material which fairly tends to establish something which may become important in the administration of the estate. *Ulmer v. the examination.¹⁴ Ordinarily the trustee will make the application and the creditor desiring the examination should appeal to him, and upon his refusal apply directly to the court.¹⁵ An application for the examination of a bankrupt under this section should be made upon notice to the bankrupt.¹⁶ While the present law does not in words authorize the court to proceed proprio motu, as did that of 1867, the general powers conferred on it by § 2 (15) seem to imply such an authority.

d. Time of making application.—Being in aid of administration only,¹⁷ an examination of third persons should not be asked after the estate is wound up, and, it has been held, a pending accepted composition is a sufficient closing of the estate to warrant a refusal if application is then made.¹⁸ In such a case, the witnesses can usually be summoned and examined in the composition proceeding.¹⁹ Whether an examination may be had of the bankrupt under this subsection prior to his adjudication is a doubtful question. In two circuits it has been held that the court may, under this section, grant an order for the examination of a bankrupt, before adjudication, where a receiver has been appointed,²⁰ and even in the absence of a receivership,²¹ but that an examination under such circumstances can be useful only in rare instances, since there would be no officer of the bankruptcy court authorized to seize the assets when discovered. But in other circuits it is held that an order under

The examination of the witness under section 21-a is taken solely for his information to enable him to act intelligently in the premises and to take such steps as may be necessary for the protection and preservation of the estate."

R. 194, 151 Fed. 81, in which the court reasons that the filing of the petition and the appointment of a receiver to protect the estate of the alleged bankrupt brings the estate into the "process of administration" required by this subsection. In speaking of the desirability of permitting an examination prior to adjudication the court said: "The desirability and importance of promptly conducting an investigation into the affairs of any person petitioned into the bankruptcy court has been too often shown to be open to doubt. To wait until adjudication to ascertain from the bankrupt's own lips the status of his property and his own explanation of the situation in which the creditors find themselves is in many cases giving those guilty of fraud just the necessary time to permit the fraud to be consummated, and the fruits thereof secured. In my opinion, it is not too much to say that a vigorous and skillful use of the early examinations of involuntary bankrupts is the one thing which enables creditors to prevent this statute being easily turned into a shield for dishonesty and a potent aid to fraud."

this section requiring the bankrupt to be examined is unauthorized.²² Under analogous provisions of former laws such an examination was permitted.²³ It was formerly believed that a reasonable interpretation of the statute did not justify this practice, because it was difficult to conceive how an estate can properly be said to be "in process of administration under this act," when the question of bankruptcy remains undetermined and upon a trial of the issues it may follow that the court has no occasion for the exercise of its jurisdiction. But the Supreme Court has held that where a petition has been filed and a receiver appointed to take possession of the property, the estate was "in process of administration" within the meaning of this section, and the district court had jurisdiction to order an examination of the bankrupt.²⁴

e. Persons who may be examined.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the limitations on the scope of the examination and the usual privileges of witnesses from answering certain classes of questions, any designated person may be subpoenaed and examined in a bankruptcy proceeding.²⁵ It has even been held that a person liable to suit at the instance of a trustee may be compelled to testify.²⁶ Where, however, the purpose is palpable to drag out evidence for use against the third party witness in another court, the examination will be kept within proper bounds. Officers of a bankrupt corporation may be examined concerning the acts, conduct or property of the corporation,²⁷ and so may the officers of a corporation in respect to the relation which a bankrupt stock-

Explanation of rule.—In Skubinsky v. Bodek (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 22 Am. B. R. 689, 172 Fed. 332, the court said. "The special reference before adjudication to inquire into 'matters pertaining to the business and conduct of the alleged bankrupt,' was premature, inquisitorial and not to be tolerated. Common fairness requires that the alleged bankrupt, before being subjected to such a proceeding and before any order can properly be made in that behalf, should have the opportunity to make defense to the petition seeking his adjudication as a bankrupt."

Examination upon written interrogatories.—An alleged bankrupt cannot before adjudication be subjected to an examination upon written interrogatories at the instance of petitioning creditors. In re Thompson (D. C., Penn.), 24 Am. B. R. 655, 179 Fed. 874.

In the case of Matter of Wilkesbarre Light Co. (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 31 Am. B. R. 451, 208 Fed. 539, it was held that an order directing a bankrupt to submit to an examination before a referee under section 21-a should not be granted, where no emergency calling for immediate action is established and an involuntary petition with demurrer and answer thereto has been pending for nearly eighteen months without a hearing. The case of Skubinsky v. Bodek (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), supra, was cited, but the court based its determination upon the lack of an emergency requiring the examination.

holder or officer may bear thereto.²⁸ But it has been held that a creditor who seeks to vacate or set aside an adjudication of a bankrupt corporation, on the ground that it was not insolvent at the time of the filing of the involuntary petition, should not be compelled to submit to an examination as to certain facts which might be of use on the trial of the issue of solvency. It would be a perversion of the purpose of section 21-a to exercise the power conferred thereby in obtaining evidence to establish the existence of a jurisdictional fact essential to the validity of the adjudication.²⁹

(2) AMENDMENTS OF 1903.—The broad terms of the original law have been made even broader by the amendatory act of 1903. Formerly, a witness not competent "under the laws of the State in which the proceedings are pending" could not be compelled to testify in the court of bankruptcy. This limitation has been stricken out;³⁰ but the change is important only in those States where a wife is not a compellable witness for or against her husband.

(3) WIFE OF THE BANKRUPT AS A WITNESS.—The change just referred to in effect restores the rule under the law of 1867, which made the wife of a bankrupt a compellable witness in all States;³¹ but with a proviso which limits such an examination to "business transactions." This limitation is probably operative even in States where a wife may be a witness for or against her husband. Thus while there is no statutory limitation on the examination of the husband of a bankrupt wife, where the former is the bankrupt, the latter can be forced to testify only as to business transactions with the husband, or to determine the fact whether she has been a party to such transactions.³² In many cases, the wife is the only witness, the bankrupt being protected by his privilege, who can shed light on the whereabouts of secreted assets. Yet, in some States, as the law was, she, too, could claim a privilege.³³ This is no longer so. Congress has added the words "and his wife" after "bankrupt" in this clause, and supplemented them with the proviso clause above referred to. Thus, most of the cases cited just supra are no longer in point. Whether a creditor³⁴ or not, the wife of the bankrupt may now be asked any questions as to business transactions with her husband which might be put to any other third party witness, and, on refusal, is liable to the same penalties. A certain degree of latitude in the wife's examination will be allowed so that the court may be sure that she is not, and has not been transacting business as a mere cover for the bankrupt, or in aid of a scheme to injure his creditors.³⁵

f. Right to counsel.—It has been uniformly held under both statutes that the examination referred to here is not of such a character as to entitle a witness, not a bankrupt, to counsel as a matter of right.³⁶ But the attendance and assistance of counsel will not usually be refused, especially where it appears that the examination tends to show the commission of a crime.³⁷ Yet, even if in attendance, the right of the witness' counsel to cross-examine seems in the discretion of the court.³⁸

g. Scope and conduct of examination.—The subsection authorizes examination "concerning the acts, conduct or property of a bankrupt." This indicates the scope of the examination and generally speaking the examination should be limited to the matters specified. Yet as a rule, large latitude will be permitted, especially where the witness is known to have been closely connected with the bankrupt in his business dealings.³⁹ The field of inquiry is broad; within the limitation prescribed any question is permissible which seeks to ascertain facts concerning the bankrupt's property and affairs.⁴⁰ But, when a witness has clearly indicated that the matter inquired into has nothing to do with the bankrupt's acts, conduct, or property, his examination on that matter should be stopped.⁴¹ For although the bankruptcy act gives latitude in the examination of the bankrupt, it does not otherwise abrogate the orderly method of procedure which prevails in the Federal courts.⁴² The purpose of examining a bankrupt, under this section, is to develop the whereabouts of assets of the estate for the purpose of aiding its administration, and not to enable the petitioning creditors to elucidate evidence to assist them in establishing the insolvency of the bankrupt or the act or acts of bankruptcy relied upon by them.⁴³ If the questions are not relevant to such matters the witness is justified in refusing to answer them.⁴⁴ Useless repetition should not be permitted,⁴⁵ nor should the examination be needlessly prolonged at the expense of the estate.⁴⁶ A difficult problem often arises when the questions seem directed to the private affairs or individual property of a third party witness. No rigid rule can be stated. If the acts inquired of are interwoven with those of the bankrupt in such a way as to cause a reasonable suspicion that the witness has been preferred or is colluding with the debtor to secrete property, the witness will be required to answer and even to produce his own books.⁴⁷ If, on the other hand, the examination does not develop facts warranting these inferences or seems without sufficient foundation, questions concerning the property or conduct of the witness will be ruled out.⁴⁸ There is no backward limit as to the time of the acts or the ownership of property under investigation;⁴⁹ the further back the questioner goes, however, the narrower should be the limits of the examination. The date the petition was filed is usually the forward limit; what a bankrupt does or earns or has after that date is not the concern of his creditors, so long as the doing, earning, or having is consistent with honest dealing prior to the bankruptcy.⁵⁰

h. Production of books and papers.—The right to the examination of a third person concerning the acts, conduct or property of the bankrupt includes the examination of books, papers and documents in his possession or under his control.⁵¹ The president of a bank may be compelled to produce his private memo-

—An order granted under section 21-a of the Bankruptcy Act requiring the bankrupts to produce "all of the books of account * * * and other writings and memoranda, from which may be ascertained any of the matters and things, hereinbefore mentioned, and to be covered in said examination," is too broad and uncertain, especially where the bankrupt lives distant from the place of examination and has been in business many years. *Rawlins v. i. Privileged communications.—The statute is silent in respect to privileged communications. There is no indication, however, that it is intended that the rule in respect to such communications should be disregarded in bankruptcy proceedings. Where by State statute communications between persons occupying certain relations are privileged, they will be recognized as privileged by the bankruptcy courts in that State.⁵⁶ The rule that communications between attorney and client are privileged will be upheld,⁵⁷ although the witness may be questioned by the court to enable it to determine for itself whether communication is a privileged one.⁵⁸ An attorney may not refuse to identify papers signed by him on the ground of privilege, and is bound to testify as to any facts which came to his knowledge in any other way than through confidential communications from his client.⁵⁹ The elimination of the words "who is a competent witness under the laws of the State in which the proceedings are pending," from subsection a of this section by the amendatory act of 1903 has not affected the privilege in respect to such communications of any witness other than the bankrupt's wife. Prior to the amendment the competency of witnesses before a court of bankruptcy was determinable by the law of the State in which the case was pending.⁶⁰ As the law now stands this question of competency may be determined by the Federal statutes if any exist which are after taking possession under the state law, was appointed receiver in bankruptcy, and has not suggested any limitation in their use for eight months, the bankruptcy court will not compel the state district attorney to deliver to the bankrupt's receiver books and papers which he is about to use in the trial of an indictment in the state court. Matter of Mandel (D. j. Criminating questions.—It is provided in § 7-a (9) that "no testimony given by him (the bankrupt) shall be offered in evidence against him in any criminal proceeding."⁶³ Early in the administration of the law, it was thought that a bankrupt waived his constitutional privilege by filing a voluntary petition, and that the opposite was the rule where the petition was involuntary.⁶⁴ As has already been stated this doctrine is now rejected.⁶⁵ Notwithstanding the immunity afforded a bankrupt by the statute he may refuse to answer a question on the ground that it will tend to incriminate him.⁶⁶ It is not in any sense essential that a transaction should be pending against the bankrupt to entitle him to claim this constitutional privilege.⁶⁷ If the privilege be thus accorded to a bankrupt, a third party witness is much more entitled to it; the law does not even attempt to give such a witness immunity from punishment. He may therefore refuse to testify on this ground.⁶⁸ The privilege may be claimed in respect to the examination of books, papers and records containing incriminating evidence.⁶⁹ The plea of the privilege should not be permitted to excuse the production of the books, papers and records. They should be produced and if found by the court to contain incriminating evidence, an order may be made to protect the witness from the discovery of the evidence and if possible otherwise direct in respect to the competency of the necessary information.⁷⁰ For instance, an order requiring the bankrupt

R. 306, 143 Fed. 663, it was held that unless the court is satisfied that the bankrupt's claim that the books contain incriminating evidence has some foundation in fact, an order may be issued directing the delivery of the books to the receiver; In re Hess (D. C., Pa.), 14 Am. B. R. 559, 134 Fed. 109.

to deposit books of account in the office of the receiver, there to remain in the custody of the bankrupt, for the inspection of the receiver in the administration of the estate, but not for any criminal prosecution, provision being made to give the bankrupt an opportunity to assert his constitutional privilege in case of process for their production, is not an infringement of the bankrupt's constitutional rights.⁷¹ But where the books are in the possession of the trustee, property belonging to him, as the custodian of the bankrupt's property, they may be used against the bankrupt on the trial of an indictment for concealment.⁷² The Supreme Court distinguishes between the compulsory production of books of the bankrupt as evidence against him in a criminal proceeding, and the production by the trustee who succeeds by law to their possession upon the adjudication of the bankrupt. The numerous cases construing the Fifth Amendment will be found valuable precedents.⁷³

k. The use of examination in proceedings in other courts.—Whether the examination may be used in proceedings in other courts is a mooted question. Such examinations may, of course, be used for the purpose of impeachment. If admitted for any other purpose, it should be proven by calling the stenographer or by offering a certified copy of the record.⁷⁴ The examination is so nearly like an ex parte inquisition, however, that it will often be ruled out, and, if allowed, should be accompanied with permission to the other party to cross-examine. It seems that the examination of third party witnesses cannot be introduced on the objections to the bankrupt's discharge, though his examination may be,⁷⁵ and testimony taken upon such an examination is inadmissible in

Delivery of books; order protecting witness.—Where a bankrupt declines to deliver his books of account to the receiver on the ground that they contain entries which would tend to criminate him, he must produce the books before the court or referee in order to have the question determined whether they do in fact tend to incriminate him; and if it appears that they do contain incriminating evidence, the court will by order protect the bankrupt from the use of such evidence for any criminal proceeding and at the same time will enable the trustee to make such use of the books as may be necessary to administer the estate. If the books are delivered to such trustee, or to a receiver, the order must provide that the bankrupt be notified of any subpoena or other process to secure possession of the books so that he may have an opportunity to assert his constitutional privilege. In re Harris (D. C., N. Y.), 20 Am. B. R. 911, 164 Fed. 292, affd. 221 U. S. 274, 26 Am. B. R. 302, 55 L. Ed. 732.

71. Matter of Harris, 221 U. S. 274, 28 Am. B. R. 302, 303, 55 L. Ed. 732, in which Mr. Justice Holmes says: "If the order of the bankrupt, standing alone, infringed his constitutional rights, it might be true that the provisions intended to save them would be inadequate, and that nothing short of statutory immunity would suffice. But no constitutional rights are touched. The question is not of testimony but of surrender—not of compelling the bankrupt to be a witness against himself in a criminal case, present or future, but of compelling him to yield possession of property that he no longer is entitled to keep. If a trustee had been appointed, the title to the books would have vested in him by the express terms of section 70, and the bankrupt could not have withheld possession of what he no longer owned, on the ground that otherwise he might be punished. That is one of the misfortunes of bankruptcy if it follows crime. The right not to be compelled to be a witness against oneself is not a right to appropriate property that may tell one's story. As the bankruptcy court could have enforced title in favor of the trustee, it could enforce possession ad interim in favor of the receiver. Section 2 is the properly careful provision to protect him from use of the books in aid of prosecution, the bankrupt got all that he could ask."

Where on the trial of an action to recover a preference, the bankrupt is a witness and testifies, without objection, that the report of his testimony given at a meeting of creditors was correct, and that he confirmed that testimony as being the truth, it is not error to admit in evidence the testimony thus referred to and confirmed. *Radford Grocery Co. v. a proceeding to compel the payment of money alleged to belong to the bankrupt estate,⁷⁶ or in a proceeding to compel the bankrupt to turn over alleged exempt property; and this is so notwithstanding the fact that the witnesses were cross examined.⁷⁷ Upon a proceeding before the referee for the distribution of the fund derived from the sale of bankrupt's assets free from liens, testimony of the former president of the bankrupt company, taken on a general examination under this section, and not directed to any defined issue, is inadmissible in support of a claim.⁷⁸

l. Refusal to appear and testify; contempt.—Refusal to appear, under the former statute, made the recusant witness liable in contempt.⁷⁹ The present act does not particularize as to contempts of this character, but a court has power to enforce its commands in the usual way.⁸⁰ Where an order for the examination of a party contains a clause ordering him to produce thereon certain books and papers, and he does not produce them upon the examination, the court may punish him as for contempt.⁸¹ A witness may not be compelled to testify without the payment of his lawful fees.⁸² The application to submit to an examination involves the duty of answering truthfully, and as intelligently and fully as mental equipment will permit, all material questions, and a failure to perform such duty is punishable as a contempt.⁸³

m. Practice.—The usual practice upon the examination of a bankrupt has already been considered under § 7-a (9). The practice on third party examinations is not essentially different from that on examinations of the bankrupt at first meetings. The application may either be a formal written petition or be a formal motion. No particular form for the application is prescribed. Grounds for the order, though not absolutely essential, will usually be required.⁸⁴ If the case is pending before a referee, the application should be made to him; he has the same power as the judge to require a designated person to appear and testify.⁸⁵ The court may appoint special masters or

Evidence of partners.—Evidence given by the members of a bankrupt partnership on a general examination before the referee as to the property of the firm is admissible, on an application for a discharge, against each of the members respectively; but the evidence of each member is not admissible against each of the other members. Matter of Malschick (D. Proof of claim.—Where a trustee takes issue upon the right of a creditor to prove a claim against the estate, testimony taken before the referee upon other issues to which the claimant was in fact not a party, and when he was absent, is inadmissible; the witnesses, including the bankrupt, must be recalled unless the claimant consents to the use of the testimony as it appears in the proceedings. In re Keller (D. commissioners to conduct the examination and report thereon.⁸⁶ The person to be examined is not entitled to notice of the application.⁸⁷ Creditors are entitled to at least ten days' notice by mail of all examinations of the bankrupt.⁸⁸ But if the examination be of a third party notice to the bankrupt or creditors is not required.⁸⁹ It will be frequently advisable, indeed, to have the examination in the absence of the bankrupt and the general creditors.⁹⁰ If the witness is present, he may be ordered to testify; if not present, he should be brought in on a subpoena,⁹¹ and, if books or documents are desired, a subpoena duces tecum can be issued; or, it seems, the witness can be brought in on a simple order.⁹² The practice on the taking of testimony is regulated by General Order XXII.⁹³ An attorney in fact, who is not also an attorney at law, will not be allowed to examine witnesses on behalf of creditors.^{93a} The bankrupt is a party in interest and entitled to a copy of the testimony upon the payment of the fee required by the local rule.^{93b}

a. In general.—Subsection b conforms the practice in respect to the taking of depositions in bankruptcy proceedings to that of United States courts generally. It is apparent from subdivision b of this section that it was the intention of Congress to confer upon courts of bankruptcy the same jurisdiction and power relating to the taking of depositions as are enjoyed by Federal courts in civil actions.⁹⁴ While a subpoena may, within certain territorial limits, be effective outside the district in issue,⁹⁵ depositions are the usual means of securing testimony at a distance greater than one hundred miles.⁹⁶ It is customary, and will usually be found desirable, to have the deposition taken before the referee of the domicile of the witness. 92. For form of order, see Form No. 28, and for subpoena, see Form No. 30. It is customary for referees to keep subpoenas signed by the clerk on hand. By analogy to Equity Rule XV, such subpoenas should be served either by the marshal, or by some person designated by the referee. The witness fee is $1.50 and eight cents a mile one way. Proof of service is made by a return, if service is by the marshal; by affidavit (Form 30), if by a designated person.

Outside of State.—Under section 41 of the bankrupt act, a person cannot be compelled to leave the State wherein he resides in order that he may be a witness in a hearing before a referee; if the testimony of such witness is desired, it must be procured under the provisions of section 21. In re Cole (D. C., Me.), 13 Am. B. R. 300, 133 Fed. 414.

Witness in another district.—Where the witness whose testimony is sought resides in another district, his testimony may be taken by deposition under section 21-b; if the applicant wishes to have him personally appear before a referee in bankruptcy, the application must be made to a court in the district in which the proposed witness resides. In re Robinson (D. C., Minn.), 24 Am. B. R. 617, 179 Fed. 724.

Writ of habeas corpus.—Where a person while confined in a State hospital for the criminal insane is adjudicated a bankrupt in another State, a writ of habeas corpus under section 753 of the U. S. Revised Statutes, to produce him for examination, will be quashed, as his deposition may be taken under this section. In re Thaw (D. C., Pa.), 22 Am. B. R. 687, 166 Fed. 71.

deposition does not, of course, exclude the more formal method of a commission to take testimony with or without interrogatories, as regulated by Equity Rule LXVII. Cases construing both the Revised Statutes and the Equity Rules in other courts than courts of bankruptcy will be found in point.

b. Notice to adverse party.—Subsection c requires, if the evidence is to be taken by deposition, that notice be filed with the referee. If depositions are to be taken in opposition to the allowance of a claim, notice is also to be served upon the claimant, and when in opposition to a discharge, notice should also be served upon the bankrupt. In the absence of any statutory regulation to the contrary it is therefore provided that no notice need be given the opposing party, unless the evidence is to be offered in opposition to a creditor's claim to the bankrupt's discharge.

c. Practice.—The practice on the taking of depositions is controlled by the general law. The practice on depositions in admiralty will be found a safe guide.⁹⁷

III. CERTIFIED COPIES AS EVIDENCE.

a. In general.—Subsection d authorizes certified copies of the proceedings before a referee, or the papers when issued by the clerk or referee, to be admitted as evidence with like force and effect as certified copies of the records of the district court. The manifest purpose of this subsection, and also of e, f, and g, is to give to the records of referees when offered in evidence the force of records of the district court proper. It is thought that the clause "when issued by the clerk or referee" refers to the word "papers" and not to prior words of the clause; the clerk often acts in the absence of the district judge. The certificate may be signed either by the clerk or the referee; but the safer practice is to secure the signature of the former, which carries with it the seal of the court. In important districts, the referee usually has a clerk, but the latter is not an officer recognized by the law, and a certificate by him would be unavailing.⁹⁸

b. Order approving bond of trustee.—Under the former law, the register, as soon as the assignee was appointed, by an instrument in writing equivalent to both a deed and a bill of sale, transferred all the assets of the bankrupt to the assignee;⁹⁹ this assignment was recorded in the district court clerk's office,¹⁰⁰ and a certified copy could then be recorded in the record office of the State. Under the present law, there is no such instrument, but a certified copy of the order approving the trustee's bond, when recorded in the proper clerk's or register's office, becomes constructive notice, and operates as would a deed and bill of sale by a bankrupt. It is also made conclusive evidence of the vesting of the title in the trustee. It is wise, therefore, to record such a certified copy in the proper record office where any property of the bankrupt may be situated. Though the trustee is now required to record a certified copy of the adjudication of bankruptcy in each case, its effect as public notice is not fixed. Safe practice will suggest the recording of both instruments. As title passes to the bankrupt's property at the date of the adjudication as of the date the petition is filed,¹⁰¹ the order approving the bond should show these dates, to the end that, when the certified copy is recorded, searchers and title companies may ascertain therefrom the time of devolution of title and what property passed; though this is not so necessary since § 47-c was added by the amendatory act of 1903. This may be accomplished by inserting in Form No. 26, after the word "bankrupt," the words: "who was so adjudged by this court on the day of, 190.., on a petition filed on the day of, 190..."¹⁰²

c. Order on discharge or composition.—Subsection f makes a certified copy of an order confirming or setting aside a composition, or granting or setting aside a discharge, evidence of the jurisdiction of the court, the regularity of the proceedings, and of the fact that the order was made. The fact of these certified copies is thus clearly defined. This subsection was enacted in contemplation of the fact that the bankrupt might thereafter be sued on debts existing at the date of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy; and was intended to relieve him of the necessity of introducing a copy of the entire proceedings, so that he might obtain the benefit of his discharge by the mere production of a certified copy of the order.¹⁰³

d. Confirming composition as evidence of revesting of bankrupt's property.—Subsection g makes a certified copy of an order confirming a composition, evidence of the revesting of the title of his property in the bankrupt. When recorded it imparts the same notice that a deed from the trustee to the bankrupt, if recorded, would impart.

Burden of proof.—In an action by subsequent indorsers against a prior bankrupt indorser, in which the defendant introduced in evidence a certified copy of the final order of his discharge in bankruptcy, the burden of proof was upon the plaintiffs to show that the debts were not duly scheduled, and that they had no notice of the bankruptcy proceedings. *Manheim v. REFERENCE OF CASES AFTER ADJUDICATION

§ 22. Reference of Cases after Adjudication.—a After a person has been adjudged a bankrupt the judge may cause the trustee to proceed with the administration of the estate, or refer it (1) generally to the referee or specially with only limited authority to act in the premises or to consider and report upon specified issues; or (2) to any referee within the territorial jurisdiction of the court, if the convenience of parties in interest will be served thereby, or for cause, or if the bankrupt does not do business, reside, or have his domicile in the district.

b The judge may, at any time, for the convenience of parties or for cause, transfer a case from one referee to another.

REFERENCE OF CASES AFTER ADJUDICATION

I. References After Adjudication, 512.

a. Administration without a reference, 512.

b. General references, 512.

c. Limited references, 512.

d. To any referee of the jurisdiction, 512.

II. Transfer of Cases From One Referee to Another, 512.

I. REFERENCES AFTER ADJUDICATION.

a. Administration without a reference.—By the terms of this section a bankrupt's estate may be administered under the direct supervision of the judge, and without an order of reference. In such a case, a meeting of the creditors would first be called, the clerk giving the notices and, after the election of the trustee, the case would proceed in the usual way. There is, however, no record of a case where the judge has kept an administration in his own control.

b. General references.—These are the references familiar to the bar and the courts. They are accomplished by the entry of an order, substantially in the words of Form 14. The portion of the order which requires the bankrupt to attend before the referee on a day certain follows General Order XII (1), and is in accord with the practice under the former law.¹ Before reference as authorized by this section it is doubtful whether the referee is a court within the definition.²

c. Limited references.—These are not the same as the familiar references to the referees as special masters. It is somewhat difficult to conceive of a case where a limited reference would be ordered.

d. To any referee of the jurisdiction.—The judge is not bound to refer the case to the referee whose district includes the bankrupt's domicile. Thus, cases often arise where a majority of creditors reside in one referee district and the bankrupt in another. It would then be clearly "for the convenience of parties in interest" to refer the case to the referee where the creditors reside. So, also, when a referee is disqualified,³ as by being the attorney for the bankrupt or by relationship, the reference will be ordered elsewhere "for cause." Likewise, if, in the words of the statute, "the bankrupt does not do business, reside or have his domicile in the district." The only real limitations as to the personnel of the referee then seem to be that he must be (a) a duly appointed referee in bankruptcy, and (b) of the same jurisdiction as the court.⁴ But a district court judge cannot refer a case to a referee appointed for and residing in another district.⁵

II. TRANSFER OF CASES FROM ONE REFEREE TO ANOTHER.

Transfers are often necessary. The reasons prescribed are (a) for the convenience of parties, and (b) for cause. The death or resignation of the referee would be sufficient cause; so would the appointment of another in his stead; so also would be official misconduct on his part.⁶ The power to transfer a case from one referee to another is absolute and discretionary. If exercised, the referee is entitled to a part only of his fees and commissions, the proportion to be fixed by the judge.⁷

Reference to special master—waiver of irregularity.—An application by a trustee in the first instance to the district judge for a turn-over order against the bankrupt and a reference by the judge to the referee as special commissioner is a mere irregularity in procedure, which may be waived by failing to make an objection until after an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Matter of Nankin (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 40 Am. B. R. 469, 246 Fed. 811.

SECTION TWENTY-THREE.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES AND STATE COURTS.

§ 23. Jurisdiction of United States and State Courts.—a The United States circuit courts shall have jurisdiction of all controversies at law and in equity, as distinguished from proceedings in bankruptcy, between trustees as such and adverse claimants concerning the property acquired or claimed by the trustees, in the same manner and to the same extent only as though bankruptcy proceedings had not been instituted and such controversies had been between the bankrupts and such adverse claimants.

b Suits by the trustee shall only be brought or prosecuted in the courts where the bankrupt, whose estate is being administered by such trustee, might have brought or prosecuted them if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted, unless by consent of the proposed defendant, except suits for the recovery of property under section sixty, subdivision b, and section sixty-seven, subdivision e, and section seventy, subdivision e.†*

c The United States circuit courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of bankruptcy, within their respective territorial limits, of the offenses enumerated in this act.

I. SCOPE AND GENERAL EFFECT OF SECTION.

a. In general.—Ever since *Ex parte Christy*¹ the questions suggested by this section have led to discussions in Congress and confusion in the courts. There is, of course, no analogous section in the English law; the anomalous co-ordinate national and State courts there being impossible. The books are filled with opinions construing the corresponding sections of the law of 1867.² So many cases have already been decided under the law of 1898, and they are often so antagonistic, that the task of the commentator would be hopeless, had not Supreme Court illumined the situation with a few decisions of great importance. Some are, since the amendatory act of 1903, no longer the law; but even these are at least suggestive of other doctrines as to those provisional and summary remedies which are vital to a due and orderly administration in bankruptcy. The section, other than its last subsection, has to do only with suits at law or in equity outside the bankruptcy proceeding proper;³ subsection b only with suits by, not against, the trustee.⁴ Practice under § 23 is, therefore, regulated, not by the General Orders and Forms, but, if in equity, by the Equity Rules, if in law, by the State procedure as supplemented or modified by Federal rules applicable to such cases.

b. Comparative legislation and decisions.—The history of the development of this section has been elaborately considered by Mr. Justice Gray in Bardes v. Bank.⁵ The former law gave concurrent jurisdiction to the circuit and district courts of both law and equity actions, as distinguished from proceedings in bankruptcy per se, where the assignee (trustee) was plaintiff or defendant.⁶ It was also in the end settled that the statute meant that, when the holding of a third party against the assignee (trustee) was adverse, a summary remedy within the bankruptcy proceeding was not proper, but resort must be had to a plenary suit.⁷ The law of 1898, as originally enacted, evidenced an intention to transfer all controversies, other than those strictly within the bankruptcy procedure (as, for instance, a contest on a proof of debt), to the State tribunals. Such was the purpose as indicated by the debates in Congress accompanying its passage,⁸ and such seems the literal meaning of the words. The amendatory act of 1903 has, however, re-enacted the doctrine of concurrent jurisdiction, at least as to all suits by the trustee to recover property fraudulently or preferentially transferred or incumbered within the four months' period.⁹

II. JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURTS UNDER JUDICIAL CODE.

a. Circuit courts abolished.—The circuit courts of the United States are abolished by the judicial code, taking effect January 1, 1912.¹⁰ It is provided Jurisdiction of State court.—In the case of Bush v. Elliott, 202 U. S. 477, 15 Am. B. R. 656, 658, 50 L. Ed. 1114, Mr. Justice Day said: "The Bankruptcy Act of 1898, in respect to the matters now under consideration, was a radical departure from the Act of 1867, in the evident purpose of Congress to limit the jurisdiction of the United States courts in respect to controversies which did not come simply within the jurisdiction of the federal courts as bankruptcy courts, and to preserve, to a greater extent than the former act, the jurisdiction of the State courts over actions which were not distinctly matters and proceedings in bankruptcy."

10. The Judicial Code, § 289, provides that: "The circuit courts of the United States, upon the taking effect of this Act shall be and hereby are abolished; and thereupon, on said date, the clerks of said courts shall deliver to the clerks of the district courts of the United States for their respective districts all the journals, dockets, books, files, records, and other books and papers of or belonging to or in any manner connected with said circuit court; and shall also on said date deliver to the clerks of said district courts all moneys from whatever source received, then remaining in the hands or under their control as clerks of said circuit courts, or received by them by virtue of their said offices. The journals, dockets, books, files, records, and other books and papers so delivered to the clerks of the several district courts shall be and remain a part of the official records of said district courts and copies thereof, when certified under the hand and seal of the clerk of the district court, shall be received as evidence equally with the originals thereof, and the clerks of the several district courts shall have the same authority to exercise all the powers and to perform all the duties with respect thereto as the clerks of the several circuit courts had prior to the taking effect of this act."

therein that "All suits and proceedings pending in said circuit courts on the date of the taking effect of this act, whether originally brought therein or certified thereto from the district courts, shall thereupon and thereafter be proceeded with and disposed of in the district courts in the same manner and with the same effect as if originally begun therein, the record thereof being entered in the records of the circuit courts so transferred as above provided."¹¹

b. Powers and duties of circuit courts conferred upon district courts.—The judicial code further provides that "Wherever, in any law not embraced within this act, any reference is made to, or any power or duty is conferred or imposed upon the circuit courts, such reference shall, upon the taking effect of this act, be deemed and held to refer to, and to confer such powers and impose such duty upon, the district courts."¹² The evident purpose of this provision is to extend the original jurisdiction formerly possessed and exercised by the circuit courts to the district courts. This purpose is further evidenced by the section of the law, prescribing the jurisdiction of district courts.¹³

c. Effect upon jurisdiction of district courts as to matters in bankruptcy.—The effect of the above quoted provisions of the judicial code is to confer upon district courts the jurisdiction formerly possessed by circuit courts under subsection a of section 23. As a result, district courts have jurisdiction of all controversies at law and in equity, as distinct from proceedings in bankruptcy, between trustees as such and adverse claimants, concerning the property acquired or claimed by the trustees, in the same manner and to the same extent only, as though bankruptcy proceedings had not been instituted and such controversies had been between bankrupts and such adverse claimants. Subsection a relates only to controversies between trustees and adverse claimants, relative to property acquired or claimed by the trustees.¹⁴ Notwithstanding the transfer of the jurisdiction of the circuit courts to the district courts, the distinction between controversies arising between trustees and adverse claimants and proceedings in bankruptcy is to be retained; in the former cases the jurisdiction of the district courts as to such controversies remains unaffected by the proceedings in bankruptcy, while in the latter case the jurisdiction of district courts is that of courts of bankruptcy under the bankruptcy act.¹⁵ Suits at law or in equity between a trustee and an adverse claim-in one State and the bankrupt resided in another.

Distinction between proceedings in bankruptcy and controversies at law and in equity.—In the case of Bardes v. Hawarden Bank, 179 U. S. 524, 531, 4 Am. B. R. 163, 44 L. Ed. 1175, the purpose and intent of subsection (a) of section 23, was under consideration. Mr. Justice Gray speaking for the court said: "The first clause provides that 'The United States Circuit Court shall have jurisdiction of all controversies at law and in equity as distinguished from proceedings in bankruptcy,' (this clearly recognizes the essential difference between proceedings in bankruptcy on the one hand and suits at law or in equity on the other). 'Between trustees as such and adverse claimants concerning the property acquired or claimed by ant, which might have been prosecuted between the bankrupt and such claimant had bankruptcy not intervened, are within the original jurisdiction of district courts, subject to such limitations and conditions as are prescribed by the act.¹⁶ Where such a suit is instituted there must be the same requirements as to diverse citizenship and amount in dispute, as in the case of a similar suit, either by or against the bankrupt, prior to bankruptcy.¹⁷ The section of the code which confers original jurisdiction upon district courts provides that such courts shall have jurisdiction "of all matters and proceedings in bankruptcy." The distinction thus seems to be made between suits at law or in equity between citizens of different States, and such controversies as may arise in bankruptcy.¹⁸ If the suit is one which may be brought by the trustee under subsection b, there of course is no limitation as to diversity of citizenship or amount in dispute. If the suit is other than one falling within subsection b, the requirements as to diversity of citizenship and amount in controversy must be complied with; that is there must be diverse citizenship as between the bankrupt and the opposing party, and the requisite amount must be involved, or the cause of action must arise under the constitution and laws of the United States.¹⁹ In respect to such suits the trustee may be either plaintiff or defend-the trustees,' restricting jurisdiction, however, by the further words 'in the same manner and to the same extent only as though bankruptcy proceedings had not been instituted and such controversies had been between the bankrupt and such adverse claimant.' This clause, while relating to the circuit courts only and not to the district courts of the United States, indicates the intention of Congress, that the ascertainment as between the trustees in bankruptcy and a stranger to the bankruptcy proceedings, of the question whether certain property claimed by the trustees, does or does not form part of the estate to be administered in bankruptcy, shall not be brought within the jurisdiction of the national courts solely because the rights of the bankrupt and of the creditors have been transferred to the trustee in bankruptcy."

17. Bush v. Elliott, 202 U. S. 477, 15 Am. B. R. 656, 50 L. Ed. 1,114; Hatch v. Curtin (D. C., Mass.), 16 Am. B. R. 629, 146 Fed. 200, holding that where a circuit court had no jurisdiction of a suit by an adverse claimant against a bankrupt it would not have jurisdiction in a suit against the trustees.

Jurisdiction as to suits at law or in equity.—The district courts have original jurisdiction as follows: First. "Of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity, brought by the United States or by any officer thereof authorized by law to sue, or between citizens of the same state claiming lands under grants from different states; or where the matter in controversy exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs the sum or value of $3,000 and (a) arises under the constitution or laws of the United States or treaties made or which shall be made under their authority, or (b), is between citizens of different states, or (c), is between citizens of a state and foreign states, citizens or subjects. No district court shall have cognizance of any suit (except upon foreign bills of exchange) to recover upon any promissory note or other chose in action, in favor of any assignee or of any subsequent holder, if such instrument be payable to bearer and be not made by any corporation, unless such suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover upon said note or other chose in action if no assignment had been made; provided, however, that the foregoing provisions as to the sum or value of the matter in controversy shall not be construed to apply to any of the cases mentioned in succeeding paragraphs of this section." Judicial Code, § 24, paragraph 1.

18. Judicial Code, § 24, paragraph 19.

19. Tate v. Brinsler (D. C., Pa.), 34 Am. B. R. 660, 226 Fed. 878, in which case it was held that in a plenary suit in equity by a trustee in bankruptcy of a partner against another member of the firm, who has not been adjudged a bankrupt, for an accounting relating to an equitable interest in property which had been assigned to the defendant as collateral to secure an indebtedness to the bankrupt, the defendant must be regarded as an adverse claimant, and the suit cannot be maintained against him, unless the bankrupt could have sustained it.

Jurisdiction in controversies at law and in equity.—In the case of Lovell v. Newman, 227 U. S. 412, 29 Am. B. R. 482, 57 L. Ed. 577, the court said: "That section 23, subdivisions (a) and (b) gives jurisdiction to the Circuit Courts of the United States of controversies at law or in equity, as distinguished from bankruptcy proceedings, between the trustee and adverse claimants in the same manner and to the same extent as though bankruptcy proceedings had not been instituted. It is also provided that suits by ant; while like the adverse claimant, he has the option, if such requisites exist, of proceeding either in the State courts or in the district courts.²⁰ A suit against the trustee arising from a transaction not connected with the bankruptcy, and in respect to which the suit could have been brought against the bankrupt if bankruptcy had not intervened, may not be brought in the district court, unless diversity of citizenship and the other essentials to jurisdiction exist.²¹ The diversity of citizenship which gives jurisdiction to the district courts in respect to such suits is that of the bankrupt and not that of the trustee.²² If the suit could have been brought by the bankrupt prior to his bankruptcy, because of diverse citizenship it may be brought in that court by his trustee, although as between the trustee and the defendant there is no such diversity.²³ To summarize the effect of abolishing circuit courts, it may be stated that as to suits, controversies and proceedings falling within the jurisdiction of district courts as courts of bankruptcy, such jurisdiction remains unaffected; as to suits and controversies not falling properly within the jurisdiction conferred expressly by the bankruptcy act the jurisdiction of such courts is limited by the restrictions imposed upon similar suits and controversies, as between the bankrupt and adverse claimants had bankruptcy proceedings not intervened.

d. Removal of suits to district courts.—A suit either by or against a trustee or receiver in bankruptcy cannot be removed from the State court into the district court, unless the amount involved exceeds $3,000.²⁴ The procedure for the removal of cases from State to district courts is prescribed in chapter 3 of the judicial code. If a suit be transferred from a State court into the district court on the ground of diversity of citizenship, it is placed there as if it had been originally commenced in that court on the ground of jurisdiction, and not as if it had been commenced there by consent of the defendant the trustee can only be brought in courts where the bankrupt might have brought them, if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted, unless by consent of the proposed defendant. Later, when Congress enlarged the jurisdiction of the District Court by the Act of February 5, 1903, exception was made in favor of certain suits for the recovery of property in fraud of the Act, but this did not affect suits of the present character. The cases in this court which have considered this section have determined that it was not intended to increase the jurisdiction of the United States Circuit Courts in bankruptcy matters, but rather to limit it to such suits and controversies as are within the jurisdiction given such courts by the acts creating them; that is, controversies in law and in equity with adverse claimants, where the amount involved is in excess of $2,000, where diverse citizenship exists (the citizenship test being, because of the Bankruptcy Act, that of the bankrupt, and not that of the trustee), or there is a cause of action arising under the constitution or laws of the United States. Bush v. Elliott, 202 U. S. 477, 15 Am. B. R. 656, 50 L. Ed. 1114, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 668."

under this section; the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals reversing the judgment of the district court would therefore be final.²⁵ a. In general.—Subsection b of § 23 relates to the jurisdiction of district courts as to suits by the trustee respecting the estate which is being administered by him. It is this subsection which has been the cause of the conflict which has arisen among the authorities relative to suits for the recovery of property claimed either by the trustee or a third party. As will be seen hereafter much of the difficulty attending the interpretation and application of this subsection has been removed by the amendment of 1903. Many of the cases which were in point prior to the amendment are now obsolete and it will only be necessary to refer to them when they bear upon the jurisdiction of the district court irrespective of the result of the amendment.

b. Comparative legislation.—The district courts have, since the act of 1800,²⁶ always had exclusive jurisdiction of "proceedings in bankruptcy." Under the act of 1867, their jurisdiction, while not exclusive, also extended "to the marshaling of . . . assets,"²⁷ and also to "all suits at law or in equity brought by an assignee in bankruptcy against any person claiming an adverse interest, or owing any debt to such bankrupt, or by any such person against an assignee, touching any property or rights of the bankrupt."²⁸ The same general jurisdiction to "cause the estate of bankrupts to be collected . . . and determine controversies in relation thereto" is conferred on the district court by the present law.²⁹ But with this difference: it is qualified by the words, "except as herein otherwise provided." There being no other grant of ordinary jurisdiction to the district court in the statute, the subsection under discussion seems, and has been authoritatively held, a limitation on that power.³⁰ Hence, the animated controversy over its meaning and the necessity of amendment. The district court is charged with the administration of the law; yet, as the law was before the amendments, it was often impotent and usually forced to order its officers to resort to other tribunals for relief, and this though, from its position as a bankruptcy court, it was naturally more convenient to litigants and more conversant with the law.

c. Jurisdiction prior to amendment of 1903; case of Barden v. Bank.—Early in the history of the present statute there was great confusion as to proper forum for suits by or against the trustee. Not until January, 1900, was there an authoritative decision in the leading case of Barden v. Bank.³¹ In this case it was held that the district courts as such had no jurisdiction over a suit brought by the trustee to recover property from a stranger to the bankruptcy proceedings, unless by the latter's consent.³² The court said: "Congress, by the second clause of § 23 of the present bankruptcy act, appears to this court to have clearly manifested its intention that controversies, not strictly or properly part of the proceedings in bankruptcy, but independent suits brought by the trustee in bankruptcy to assert a title to money or property as assets of the bankrupt against the strangers to those proceedings, should not come within the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States, unless by consent of the proposed defendant." On the same day this decision was rendered other cases declaring the same doctrine but on different facts were also announced.³³ Later, in Wall v. Cox, the doctrine was reaffirmed.³⁴ Subsequently the broad principle was somewhat modified, when applied to other facts. But, prior to the amendments of 1903, the law remained that, provided always the holding of the proposed defendants was adverse, such a suit could be brought only in the State court, or in the circuit court if the usual facts showing Federal jurisdiction appeared.³⁵

d. Purpose of amendments of 1903 and 1910.—The direct results of the case of Bardes v. Bank was, as we have seen, to deprive the district court of jurisdiction of a suit brought by the trustee for the recovery of property in the hands of an adverse claimant. It had an appreciable effect upon analogous provisional and summary remedies.³⁶ The amendment of 1903 added to section 70-e a clause conferring upon the court of bankruptcy jurisdiction of a suit to recover property which had been transferred in fraud of creditors, and which any creditor might have avoided.³⁷ Amendments restoring concurrent jurisdiction, at least as to suits to recover property, became imperatively necessary and were very generally demanded. This demand was met by the changes made in this subsection and in §§ 60-b, 67-e, and 70-e by the act of 1903. But the amendatory act failed to include in clause b of this section, suits for the recovery of property under section 70-e. This was evidently a defect. It at once raised a doubt whether a suit to recover property transferred more than four months before the bankruptcy could be instituted other than in a State court.³⁸ The failure to include suits for the recovery of property

37. Bankr. Act, § 70-e.

38. See § 70.

The failure to amend sub-section b of this section by the act of 1903 so as to include within the exception suits brought under § 70-e has been commented upon in a number of cases. Nearly all of these cases are in favor of the proposition that the failure to include a reference to § 70-e leaves the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court in respect to suits to set aside fraudulent conveyances made prior to the four months' period, the same as it was before the amendatory act. Gregory v. Atkinson (D. C., Mo.), 11 Am. B. R. 495, 127 Fed. 183; Hull v. Burr (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 541, 153 Fed. 945; Skewis v. Barthell (D. C., Iowa), 18 Am. B. R. 429, 152 Fed. 534. Contra: Hurley v. Devlin (D. C., Kan.), 17 Am. B. R. 793, 149 Fed. 268.

In the case of In re Hutchinson & Wilmoth (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 19 Am. B. R. 313, 158 Fed. 74, the court said: "A court of bankruptcy has no jurisdiction of a suit at law or in equity brought by a trustee to recover property or collect debts, or to set aside transfers of property alleged to be fraudulent, except by consent of the defendant. By the amendment of 1903, such court was given jurisdiction of suits for the recovery of property under §§ 60-b, 67-e and 70-e." The court evidently did not intend by this statement to hold that a suit under § 70-e could be maintained in a bankruptcy court without the consent of the defendant.

The Supreme Court in the case of Harris v. First National Bank 216 U. S. 382, 23 Am. B. R. 632, 54 L. Ed. 528, took notice of the fact that in section 23 specifying the cases wherein the Federal courts have jurisdiction, section 70-e is not mentioned. The court, under section 70-e was obviously an inadvertence. It was at least recognized as such by Congress in enacting the amendment of 1910, which included a reference to suits brought under section 70-e and, as the law now stands, suits for the recovery of property transferred in fraud of creditors prior to the four months' period may be brought in district courts.³⁹ The method adopted by the revisers, of adding the limiting words to the subsection under discussion, makes its phrasing somewhat awkward. There can, however, be no doubt about their intention or the intention of Congress, and little less doubt as to the ultimate construction put on the new words by the courts.^{39a} The amendment to this section has not affected the jurisdiction of a district court to re-examine a transfer to an attorney in contemplation of the filing of a petition against a bankrupt, as conferred by § 60-d.⁴⁰ The amendment to section 47 in 1910 did not confer a new means of collecting ordinary claims due the bankrupt.^{40a}

e. Jurisdiction as to bankruptcy proceedings.—We have already considered under § 2, ante, the jurisdiction of a district court as a court of bankruptcy in proceedings generally pertaining to bankruptcy. What it may do and what it may not do in respect to the person and property of the bankrupt subject to its jurisdiction has been considered in a variety of phases under that section. If a proceeding pertains to a matter of administration, not affecting the title to the bankrupt estate, the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court is exclusive and it may not surrender such jurisdiction to any other court.⁴¹ After the bankruptcy petition has been filed, the property of the bankrupt, not in the possession of adverse claimants, is in the legal custody and under the exclusive control of however, did not deem it necessary in that case to determine whether an action for the recovery of property transferred prior to the four months' period could be brought in the bankruptcy court without the consent of the defendant. The great weight of authority was doubtless in favor of the proposition that the failure to include a reference to section 70-e deprived the court of jurisdiction in actions brought therein. Sheppard v. Lincoln (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 804, 184 Fed. 182; Palmer v. Roginsky (D. C., N. Y.), 23 Am. B. R. 353, 175 Fed. 883.

In the case of Wood v. Wilbert's Sons Shingle & Lumber Co. (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 226 U. S. 884, 29 Am. B. R. 220, 57 L. Ed. 264, which arose prior to the amendment of 1910, the Supreme Court sustained the doctrine declared in the case of Hull v. Burr (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 541, 153 Fed. 945, 83 C. C. A. 61, and held that notwithstanding the amendment of 1903, the consent of the proposed defendant was required in order to confer jurisdiction upon the District Court of an action by the trustee to set aside a conveyance of lands by bankrupt, which conveyance was neither a preference nor made within the four months' period, so as to come within the terms of section 60b or section 67-e.

39. The act of 1903 as introduced and passed by the House of Representatives, contained the words: "And section 70, subsection e," which were inserted in the amendment of 1910. The Senate Judiciary committee, for some reason which does not appear, struck these words out of section 23-b but failed to strike out the corresponding clause conferring jurisdiction which the House bill had added to section 70-e. See Newcomb v. Blwer (D. C., So. Dak.), 29 Am. B. R. 15, 199 Fed. 529; Gooch v. Stone (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 44 Am. B. R. 86, 257 Fed. 631.

By the amendment of 1910 to section 23-b, a trustee in bankruptcy, appointed by the district court of the State in which both he and the bankrupt reside, may, without the consent of the proposed defendant, maintain a suit to avoid a fraudulent transfer under section 70-e in the bankruptcy court of another State where the defendant resides. Parker v. Sherman (D. C., Vt.), 28 Am. B. R. 379, 195 Fed. 648.

39a. Consent of defendant.—It is not necessary to the jurisdiction of a bankruptcy court, in an action to recover a preference, which is brought in a court other than one in which the bankrupt might have proceeded, that the consent of the defendant be obtained. Collett v. Adams (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 43 Am. B. R. 494, 39 Sup. Ct. 372; Flanders v. Coleman (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 43 Am. B. R. 563, 39 Sup. Ct. 472, rev'g. 41 Am. B. R. 727, 249 Fed. 767.

When jurisdiction exclusive.—The jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court in all "proceedings in bankruptcy" is exclusive of all other courts; and, as such proceedings include all matters of administration, a suit by the surety of bankrupt, a United States contractor, against his trustee in the Circuit Court, the purpose of which is to control the distribution of a fund in the trustee's possession, which admittedly belongs to the bankrupt's estate, and to determine to what extent and in what order the several creditors shall participate therein, cannot be maintained. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Bray, 225 U. S. 205, 28 Am. B. R. 202, 56 L. Ed. 1056.

the court of bankruptcy, and no other court may by order or decree deprive such court of its control over the administration of the bankrupt's estate.⁴³

IV. JURISDICTION AS TO PLENARY SUITS; ADVERSE CLAIMANTS.

a. Suits in respect to bankrupt estate.—Section 23-b requires suits by the trustee in the administration of the bankrupt estate to be brought in those courts where they would have been brought if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted. The suits here referred to are plenary suits to recover assets or enforce rights belonging to the estate, against persons who claim adversely to the bankrupt in respect to such assets or rights. Bankruptcy courts have no jurisdiction to entertain such suits “unless by consent of the proposed defendant” or “except suits for the recovery of property under section 60, subdivision b, and section 67, subdivision c, and section 70, subdivision e.” Bankruptcy courts have jurisdiction of suits for the recovery of property under the sections referred to, without the consent of the proposed defendants.

b. Plenary suits by trustees.—Subsection b requires suits by the trustee to be “brought or prosecuted in the courts where the bankrupt, whose estate is being administered by such trustee, might have brought or prosecuted them, if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted.” The district court in the exercise of its jurisdiction as the successor of the circuit court may, under this provision, entertain jurisdiction of a plenary suit by a trustee against an adverse claimant to recover a debt due the estate, if the bankrupt might have proceeded in such court if bankruptcy had not intervened.⁴⁴ A suit for the recovery of a debt does not fall within the exceptions contained in this subsection, and if it could not have been brought by the bankrupt prior to bankruptcy in a district court, it may not be brought therein by his trustee. Thus it will be necessary to show diversity of citizenship, the requisite amount in controversy and the other jurisdictional essentials, to establish the jurisdiction of the court.⁴⁵ In the absence of such jurisdictional essentials the consent of the defendant to the exercise of jurisdiction will not be effectual.⁴⁶

c. Adverse claimants.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The term “adverse claimants” is only used in subsection a of this section, which determines the jurisdiction of circuit courts as to controversies between trustees and adverse claimants.

43. Lazarus v. Prentice, 234 U. S. 263, 32 Am. B. R. 559, 58 L. Ed. 1305; Acme Harvester Co. v. Beekman, 222 U. S. 300, 27 Am. B. R. 262, 56 L. Ed. 208; State Bank v. Cox (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 16 Am. B. R. 32, 143 Fed. 91; Matter of Diamond's Estate (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 44 Am. B. R. 268, 259 Fed. 70.

The jurisdiction of a court of bankruptcy attaches from the time of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, and the effect of the filing of the petition is to place all of the property of the bankrupt, not in the possession of adverse claimants, in the legal custody and under the exclusive control of the court of bankruptcy. After the petition has been filed no other court can make an order, or decree, which will deprive the court of bankruptcy of its exclusive control over the administration of the bankrupt's property. Matter of Sage (D. C., Mo.), 35 Am. B. R. 436, 224 Fed. 525.

44. Bush v. Elliott, 202 U. S. 477, 15 Am. B. R. 656, 50 L. Ed. 1114; Lovell v. Newman, 227 U. S. 412, 29 Am. B. R. 482, 57 L. Ed. 577. The jurisdiction of a plenary suit to recover a debt due to the bankrupt estate is unaffected by the amendments of 1903 and 1910. Harris v. First Nat. Bank, 216 U. S. 382, 23 Am. B. R. 652, 54 L. Ed. 528; De Friece v. Bryant (D. C., Ky.), 37 Am. B. R. 276, 232 Fed. 233.

Suit to recover unpaid stock subscription, when brought against resident stockholders, is not within the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. Kelley v. Gill (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 40 Am. B. R. 421, 88 Sup. Ct. 38.

45. De Friece v. Bryant (D. C., Ky.), 37 Am. B. R. 275, 232 Fed. 233.

46. Lovell v. Newman, 227 U. S. 412, 426, 29 Am. B. R. 482, 57 L. Ed. 577; De Friece v. Bryant (D. C., Ky.), 37 Am. B. R. 276, 232 Fed. 233.

The term has become of general use, however, in respect to all controversies in bankruptcy as to estates which are being administered in bankruptcy. It will be important to ascertain whether or not a person to be proceeded against is an "adverse claimant" in determining whether a bankruptcy court has jurisdiction of the claim which is the subject of the proceeding. If a bankrupt shall have given a preference within the meaning of § 60 the person receiving it is an adverse claimant; so also if the bankrupt shall have fraudulently transferred any of his property or shall have created an incumbrance thereon in fraud of his creditors, the transferee or incumbrancer is an adverse claimant. This follows as a natural effect of the amendment of subdivision b of this section. Suits for the recovery of property so preferentially disposed of or fraudulently transferred are within the jurisdiction of district courts. The question as to whether a person is an adverse claimant also becomes important in determining the jurisdiction of the court to proceed summarily against him. If the person proceeded against is in any sense an adverse claimant he is entitled to have the validity of his claim determined by the court in a plenary suit brought for that purpose.⁴⁶

(2) WHO ARE ADVERSE CLAIMANTS.—(I) In general.—It is impossible to declare a general rule which will determine in every case whether a person claiming a right or interest as against the trustee is an adverse claimant. It is not essential that the person should claim to be the absolute owner of property in his possession to constitute him an adverse claimant. For instance, where a bankrupt within the four months' period deposited with sureties on a bail bond given by him upon his arrest in a civil action for deceit a sum of money as security against liability on a bond, it was held that the sureties were adverse claimants.⁴⁷ Cases construing the mean-

46. Right to determination by plenary suit.—In the case of In re Rathman (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 246, 183 Fed. 913, the court said: "The question in this case is whether the controversies between the contestants are controversies at law and in equity, between the trustee and an adverse claimant, as distinguished from controversies arising in proceedings in bankruptcy within the meaning of § 23 of the Bankruptcy Law. If they are the former, the bankruptcy court may not and if they are the latter, it may adjudicate them summarily, without subpoena, summons, pleadings and evidence, according to the principles, rules and practice in actions at law and in equity."

What is controversy in equity.—Where a petition by a trustee in bankruptcy sets out in detail allegations of the concealment and conversion of certain assets by the bankrupts and their agents, the illegal and fraudulent cancellation of certain specified accounts due the bankrupts, the transfer of property to defraud creditors, and illegal preferences, and the answer sets forth in detail all the alleged defenses, a controversy in equity is presented of which the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction. Jones v. Blair (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 569, 242 Fed. 783.

Sureties on bail bond as adverse claimants.—In the case of Jacquith v. Rowley, 188 U. S. 620, 9 Am. B. R. 525, 23 Sup. Ct. 369, 47 L. Ed. 620, the Supreme Court held that a surety in whose hands money was deposited to indemnify him for his liability on a bail bond was an adverse claimant within the meaning of section

23. Mr. Justice Peckam, speaking for the court, said: "The proceeding was a summary application to the court in bankruptcy, to grant an order in a matter, the result of the granting of which would be to immediately take from the surety moneys which had been deposited with him before the commencement of the proceedings in bankruptcy, and thus compel him to come into the bankruptcy court for the litigation of questions as to his right to retain the money claimed by him. . . . The surety into whose hands the money was deposited to indemnify him for his liability on the bail bond was an adverse claimant within the meaning of that section of the act, and could not be proceeded against in the bankruptcy court, unless by his consent as provided for therein. It is not necessary in order to be an adverse claimant that the surety should claim to be the absolute owner of the property in his possession. It is sufficient if, as in the present case, the money was deposited with him to indemnify him for his liability upon the bail bond and that liability had not been determined and satisfied. If the trustee desires to test the question of the right of the surety to retain the money, he must do so in accordance with the provisions of the section of the bankruptcy law above referred to. . . . The surety claims the right to hold the money as against everybody until his liability on the bail bond is satisfied, and that claim is adverse to any claim that the trustee may make upon him for the money which is to indemnify him as stated."

Possession to control.—The jurisdiction of the Bankruptcy Court to determine in a summary proceeding adverse claims, created before the filing of the bankruptcy petition, to liens upon and titles to property claimed by the trustee as that of the bankrupt, is conditioned and limited by its actual possession thereof, the test of summary jurisdiction being that the Bankruptcy Court, through its officers, has taken possession of the res as the property of the bankrupt; and where one holds substantial claims, antedating bankruptcy, a plenary suit must be brought by the trustee either in law or in equity, in which the adverse title can be tried and adjudicated. Shea v. Lewis (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 30 Am. B. R. 436, 206 Fed. 877.

Possession by agreement with receiver.—Where by agreement between a person claiming property adversely and a receiver the property is turned over to the receiver to be held by him subject to the final judgment of the "court or courts having jurisdiction" as to the title to the property, the bankruptcy court by reason of its possession has jurisdiction to determine the claim to the property. Hollingsworth & Whitney Co. v. Petitioner (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 678, 242 Fed. 753.

Mail of bankrupt held by post office.—Where a bankrupt stipulates to permit the post office to hold his mail pending the issuance of a fraud order against him, his receiver being merely a custodian and not vested with title, cannot in a summary proceeding compel the postmaster to turn the mail over to him or give him access thereto. Matter of Rice (D. Possession under land contract.—A bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction to summarily adjudicate the rights of the trustee and an adverse claimant to lands in possession of the latter under an agreement for a conveyance. Dreyer v. Perkins (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 33 Am. B. R. 232, 217 Fed. 880.

Title under tax certificate.—One claiming title and legal right to possession of land under a certificate of purchase from the State, is entitled to have a controversy with the trustee in bankruptcy as to the claim determined by a plenary suit as distinguished from a summary proceeding. A mortgagee in possession of chattels, at the time of adjudication, under a chattel mortgage, may not be summarily ordered to surrender the chattels to a trustee in bankruptcy of the mortgagor upon the allegation of the trustee that the mortgagee's interest is merely colorable. The decisions of the Supreme Court justify the assertion of the rule that a court of bankruptcy may not summarily determine the merits of issues presented as to property which is in the possession of a claimant and in respect of which the claimant has an actual, substantial, bona fide claim. 52. Test of jurisdiction to proceed in a summary manner.—The test of jurisdiction to proceed in a summary way, or by summary proceedings, to determine controversies in regard to real or personal property, is possession of such property in or by the bankrupt at the time of the filing of the petition and adjudication, in circumstances which show that the bankrupt was the true owner, and that he held as owner; and jurisdiction to so proceed is not defeated by a claim of ownership made by a third person, asserted for the first time after the petition is filed, even though the ground work for such a claim has been prepared beforehand. In re Logan (D. 53. Claim of lien on property.—In the case of First National Bank v. Title and Trust Co., 198 U. S. 280, 49 L. Ed. 1051, 14 Am. B. R. 102, the Supreme Court said that the distinction between controversies at law and in equity and controversies arising in a proceeding in bankruptcy "existed under the bankruptcy law, and the then decisions in respect of a proceeding in bankruptcy and an independent suit are applicable. It was settled that the bankruptcy court was without jurisdiction to determine adverse claims to property, not in possession of the assignee in bankruptcy by summary proceedings, whether absolute title or only a lien was asserted. The present act was plainly framed in recognition of the principle of these cases." Citing Smith v. Mason, 14 Wall. 419, 20 L. Ed. 748; Marshall v. Knox, 16 Wall. 551, 21 L. The proposition that a holder of a substantial claim to a lien created by a bankrupt upon his property is as much an adverse claimant as a claimant of absolute title is sustained by the following authorities: Frank v. Vollkommer, 205 U. S. 521, 17 Am. B. R. 806, 51 L. Ed. 911; Harris v. First National Bank, 216 U. S. 382, 23 Am. B. R. 632, 54 L. Ed. 528; Jacquith v. Rowley, 188 U. S. 620, 9 Am. B. Possession under distress warrant.—Whether a distress warrant secured in Illinois within four months of bankruptcy is one of the "other liens obtained through legal proceedings" which are rendered invalid by section 67-f of the Bankruptcy Act constitutes a substantial controversy. Hence the right to the possession of property taken under such a warrant cannot be determined in a summary proceeding, although the facts are undisputed. Matter of Luken (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 32 Am. B. R. 805, 216 Fed. 890.

Possession by bank.—Where it appears that a bank holds money belonging to a bankrupt received prior to the adjudication, and claims a set-off upon the theory that the bankrupt converted property belonging to the bank, a case of an adverse claim is presented which must be prosecuted by a plenary suit and not by a summary order. In re Boston-Cerrillos Mines Corporation (D. person property which was in bankrupt's possession, through his bailee, when bankruptcy intervened, the district court has jurisdiction in a summary proceeding to decree the restoration to the trustee of such property or its proceeds.⁵⁶ If the person in possession holds the property as a bailee, his claim as to the property must be in behalf of the bankrupt and he is therefore not an adverse claimant.⁵⁷ The possession of property of a bankrupt corporation by its officers and agents will be deemed the possession of the bankrupt, and they are not adverse claimants.⁵⁸ And likewise where an individual is insolvent and undertakes to form a corporation with near relatives as incorporators, to which he conveys his property with a view to withdrawing such property from the reach of creditors, such corporation should not be held to be an adverse claimant.^{58a} Where the possession is that a third person who asserts no claim to the property but holds it subject to the claims of the parties interested therein, including the bankrupt, such claims are adverse.⁵⁹

(V) Possession by wife of bankrupt.—If a wife of a bankrupt holds property merely as his agent, and not under a bona fide claim of ownership, her possession is that of the bankrupt, and she is not an adverse claimant; but if her possession and claim of ownership are in good faith, her claim of title must be adjudicated in a plenary suit.⁶⁰ A wife, in possession of and beneficiary under an insurance policy on the life of her husband, having a cash surrender value, and reserving to the husband the right to change the beneficiary, is an adverse claimant.⁶¹

Possession by officers of corporation.—In the case of In re Kornit Mfg. Co. (D. C., N. J.), 27 Am. B. R. 244, 258, 192 Fed. 302, the court said: "The bankrupt corporation was the conception of the respondents and they exercised a complete unbroken dominancy over it from its birth to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. This dominancy was as complete before as after they became its officers, and what was done by the incorporators and first board of directors is as much their acts as what was done by the respondents after they became the executive officers and numerically controlled the board of directors. These incorporators and first board of directors were but the tools of the respondents. On the paper they were free and independent, but in fact only dummies responsive to the beck and call of respondents. In such circumstances respondents, with respect to property obtained by them through the action of such dummy directors, were not adverse claimants. They were its mind, hands and pockets, and will be treated in the bankruptcy court as if they were the bankrupt, and amenable to its jurisdiction with reference to such property."

R. 102, 49 L. Partition action.—A Federal District Court has no jurisdiction of an action by a trustee in bankruptcy against the bankrupt's wife for partition and cannot authorize the trustee to sell the wife's undivided interest. The most it can do is to order the sale of the undivided interest of the bankrupt. Harlan v. American Trust Co. (Ind. App. Ct.), 41 Am. B. R. 401, 119 N. E. 20.

from the bankrupt, he is an adverse claimant.⁶² Where a bankrupt has, prior to bankruptcy, made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the assignee is an agent of the bankrupt and is therefore not an adverse claimant; the possession by the assignee, pending the determination of the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, will be deemed to be that of the bankrupt.⁶³ The assignee may only be regarded as an adverse claimant as to payments or dispositions of property made by him in good faith, before the institution of bankruptcy proceedings, and as to liens in his favor which accrued prior to that time.⁶⁴ If the assignee has sold property assigned to him prior to the bankruptcy of the assignor the purchaser is an adverse claimant.⁶⁵ And while the assignee may be compelled to account in bankruptcy court for the property of the bankrupt remaining in his possession, he is an adverse claimant to the extent of his claim for disbursements and expenditures lawfully made by him prior to bankruptcy.⁶⁶ The possession by a temporary receiver in bankruptcy of proceeds of the sale of mortgaged chattels, pending the determination as to the title to such chattels, does not deprive the claim of its character as adverse.⁶⁷ While the possession of a State court receiver differs in some respects from that of an assignee for the benefit of creditors, still, when bankruptcy intervenes, the receiver is not holding in his own right, but merely in an official capacity, and not adversely to the bankrupt or his estate, and so a court of bankruptcy has the power to issue an order in summary proceedings directing the receiver to turn the property over to the trustee in bankruptcy,^{67a} unless the receiver's right to possession is conditioned upon some other ground than that of insolvency.^{67b} A receiver appointed by a State court in an action brought more than four months prior to bankruptcy, to set aside a fraudulent conveyance may not be compelled to submit his claim in the bankruptcy proceedings; his claim must be treated as adverse.⁶⁸

Summary proceeding to take possession of property in the hands of assignees and receivers.—In the case of In re Rathman (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 246, 183 Fed. 913, it was held that the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction by summary proceeding to take from assignees and receivers for general creditors in insolvency or winding up proceedings, appointed after the four months prior to the filing of petitions in bankruptcy, from officers of courts attaching or replevying within that time, and from others holding for the bankrupt, property claimed to be that of the bankrupt, and then by virtue of the possession thus taken to determine adverse claims to it by a like proceeding. But the bankruptcy court may not take this possession from a receiver appointed by another court in a suit to enforce a lien antedating the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, or thereby draw to itself jurisdiction summarily to determine the validity of such a lien.

Effect of order directing receiver of State court to turn over property.—Where a bankruptcy court has as a matter of comity required the trustee to apply to the State court for an order directing its receiver to turn over property to him, and the order has been granted as asked, but has been rendered ineffectual by an appeal, the bankruptcy court may order the delivery of the property, and is not bound to await the determination of the appeal. Matter of Sage (D. which is annulled by the adjudication in bankruptcy, the person or officer in possession holds as bailee for the trustee; he is not an adverse claimant and his mere refusal to surrender the property does not make him such.⁶⁹ This principle only applies where the lien by attachment is nullified by the adjudication of the debtor as a bankrupt. If the attaching officer is in receipt of the proceeds of the sale of the property attached, and has turned the same over to the attaching creditor, such creditor is an adverse claimant.⁷⁰ If the proceeds of the sale remain in the hands of the officer at the time of the adjudication in bankruptcy, such proceeds become the property of the trustee and the officer or the creditor represented by him are not adverse claimants.⁷¹

(VIII) Surrender of possession.—If the court, through its referee, voluntarily delivers property to a claimant, the possession of the court is lost, and the claim of the claimant becomes adverse, precluding the court from summarily determining the claimant's right to the property without his consent.⁷² But if the surrender of the property is unauthorized, the court's jurisdiction is not affected and it may determine all controversies, either by plenary suit or summary action as though such surrender had not been made.⁷³

(3) INQUIRY AS TO BASIS OF CLAIM.—(I) In general.—The determination of the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court to summarily dispose of the question of title to the property to which a claim is asserted against that of the bankrupt, will depend upon the nature and validity of such claim. If the property belongs unquestionably to the bankrupt's estate the court may summarily take possession of it. If there is substantial basis for the adverse claim and such claim is not merely colorable, the claimant must be permitted to adjudicate his claim in a plenary suit. It becomes essential for the court to determine as to the substantiality of the adverse claim, prior to assuming summary possession of the property, and for this reason the court may make inquiry into the basis of such claim. If the claimant pleads an adverse claim it may not be summarily determined by the court, without an inquiry as to the basis of the claim; some investigation must be made with a view to ascertaining whether the claim is based on a substantial foundation.⁷⁴

Unauthorized sale by trustee.—Where a trustee sells property at private sale, without appraisal, and without the order of the court, the purchaser acquires no title. In such a case, the court of bankruptcy has jurisdiction of proceedings, both in the nature of summary and plenary actions, to try title to property of the bankrupt, once in the possession of the court, and sold by the trustee without authority. Matter of Monsarrat (D. C., Hawaii), 25 Am. B. R. 815.

(II) Jurisdiction of court.—The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to inquire into the facts for the purpose of determining whether any basis exists for the adverse claim of title,⁷⁵ and according to the conclusion reached the order of a referee to show cause why it should not pay over to the trustee an amount deposited with the bank by the bankrupt, three days before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, stated that the money was deposited without solicitation or agreement, in a long standing general deposit account which the bankrupt had with the bank subject to check, and that at the time of the deposit the bankrupt owed the bank on an overdraft and on past-due notes, an amount nearly equal to the amount deposited. It was held that the bank had stated an adverse claim which constituted a good plea to the jurisdiction of the court, and that an order overruling such plea in the absence of a denial of any of its allegations and without investigation as to whether the claim pleaded is substantial, was unwarranted.

Inquiry as to basis of claim.—The bankruptcy court has power to ascertain if an adverse claim be made by a third person in possession of property of the bankrupt, whether such claim is in fact well founded, or is fictitious or colorable. In re Norris (D. C., N. Y.), 24 Am. B. R. 444, 177 Fed. 598. In the case of In re Rathman (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 246, 183 Fed. 913, the court held that the bankruptcy court may proceed by order to show cause and ascertain whether the claimant had the actual possession of the property in controversy, and whether the claimant had a substantial, or only a frivolous and baseless adverse claim. In the case of In re Tarbox (D. C., Mass.), 26 Am. B. R. 432, 185 Fed. 985, the court held that a referee has jurisdiction under a summary petition to inquire and decide whether or not the claim under which property is held adversely to the trustee is merely colorable; but unless he can find it merely colorable he has no jurisdiction to proceed further; he cannot hear and determine its merits under a summary petition if there is a real controversy as to the merits; In re Hayden (D. Nugent*, 184 U. S. 17, 7 Am. B. R. 224, 46 L. Ed. 405, in which the Supreme Court held that the district court has power to ascertain whether in the particular instance the claim asserted is an adverse claim existing at the time the petition was filed; Louisville Trust Co. v. Cominger, 184 U. S. 26, 7 Am. B. R. 421, 46 L. Ed. 413. Where property, alleged to be part of the bankrupt's estate, is found in the possession of third parties who assert right to possession by reason of a claim adverse to the bankrupt, the bankruptcy court has power to ascertain whether any basis for such claim actually existed at the time of the filing of the petition. The court is bound to enter upon that inquiry, and, in doing so, acts within its jurisdiction, while its conclusion may be that an adverse claim, not merely colorable, but real, even though fraudulent and voidable, exists in fact, so that it must decline to finally adjudicate on the merits. Determining character of claim.—The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction under an order to show cause to investigate and determine whether or not it had at any time actual possession of the property involved in the order, and whether those asserting liens or title thereto have a substantial, or only a frivolous and baseless, adverse claim; but where no such possession is found, and the claim asserted is actual and substantial, as distinguished from one merely colorable and fictitious, it may proceed no further, but should decline to adjudicate on the merits without consent. Shea v. Lewis (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 30 Am. B. R. 436, 206 Fed. 877.

The term "colorable," as used with reference to adverse claims, means merely that if a claimant sets up as facts, and not as conclusions of law, matters which if true, would constitute a statement of an adverse claim, then the claim would be adverse, and not colorable, and not within the jurisdiction of the referee. In re Blum (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 332, 202 Fed. 883.

Colorable claim.—A claim is open to the objection of being colorable when it is merely asserted; there being no foundation upon which it rests. A colorable claim is one which is a mere pretext and without reality. Matter of McCrum (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 32 Am. B. R. 604, 214 Fed. 207.

court will retain jurisdiction or decline to adjudicate the merits.⁷⁶ The inquiry may be made by a referee, and he has jurisdiction to determine upon conflicting testimony whether property claimed by the trustee is in the possession of an adverse claimant under claim of title.⁷⁷

(III) Test to be applied.—Whether a claim is real or colorable does not depend upon whether it turns upon a question of fact or question of law. If a claim rests upon a mere pretense of fact or law it is colorable but it is not colorable if it is put forth in good faith and is real.^{77a} The test is, that where a party in possession sets out in his answer facts which, if true, would constitute an adverse title, the court may not in a summary proceeding, and against his protest, dispose of his rights in the property.⁷⁸ Whether a bankruptcy court has jurisdiction to proceed in a summary manner depends upon the facts disclosed by the record from time to time, and while it may have jurisdiction to institute such summary proceedings, it may be ousted therefrom by a presentation of facts showing that the title to such property is claimed by another.^{78a} A claim is adverse if the evidence offered as a basis is sufficient, if uncontroverted, to establish the validity of the claim.⁷⁹

(IV) Effect of inquiry.—If it be ascertained by proper inquiry that a real adverse claim existed—no matter how ill-supported it might appear to be—the court cannot summarily decide as to the validity of the claim.⁸⁰ If it is decided that the claim is without actual merit or legal foundation, the court may order the surrender of the property.⁸¹ If the property claimed is real property in the possession of the trustee, the court may summarily order its surrender, and in a proper case where the record title is in a third person may order a deed to be executed to the trustee.⁸²

d. When consent of adverse claimant required.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection b of this section confines the trustee in maintaining suits in respect to the estate of the bankrupt to those courts where the bankrupt himself might have appeared to prosecute them if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted against him, unless the proposed defendant shall consent to the bringing of such suits in the bankruptcy court, "except suits for the recovery of property" under § 60-b, § 67-e, or § 70-e. The result is that if the suit is not one for the recovery of property either preferentially or fraudulently transferred or incumbered, it must be brought in a court other than the bankruptcy court unless the defendant shall express his consent to the exercise of jurisdiction by that court.⁸³ The consent here required was not intended to affect the jurisdiction of the district courts as successors of the circuit courts, abolished by the Judicial Code of 1912. Such jurisdiction may be exercised without the consent of the defendant if the essential jurisdictional facts exist, such as diversity of citizenship and the requisite amount in controversy.⁸⁴ If once the consent to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court appears, the jurisdiction will be retained for the determination of all the claims of the parties and for the enforcement of all their rights against each other.⁸⁵ If the adverse claimant voluntarily submits the question of his claim to the bankruptcy court, it constitutes the required consent and the trustee's objection to the jurisdiction will not be sustained.⁸⁶ The consent having been given, the claimant may not upon the appeal from a decision that the title to the property was in the trustee, raise the question of want of jurisdiction to decide the claim.⁸⁷ The term "consent" refers to consent to the tribunal in which the controversy is to be carried on, and not to the mode of

83. Consent of parties.—In the case of In re Blake (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 17 Am. B. R. 668, 151 Fed. 279, it was held that a court of bankruptcy may acquire by consent of all the parties in interest jurisdiction to determine a controversy between the trustee and an adverse claimant concerning an indebtedness of a third party and the lawful power to adjudicate all the claims of the parties thereto and to enforce their rights against each other by decree and execution. Enforcing payment of stock subscriptions; consent of parties.—The enforcement of an assessment, directed by the bankruptcy court to be levied upon the unpaid capital stock of a bankrupt corporation, against stockholders alleged to be liable thereto, is plenary in its nature, and, except with their consent cannot be made in the bankruptcy court; and in a suit to collect such assessment, the defendant is entitled to make all defenses that relate to him in his individual as distinguished from his corporate capacity, such as that he is not a stockholder, or that he has fully paid for the stock taken. Jurisdiction to determine as to alleged preferential transfer.—Where a petition is filed in involuntary bankruptcy, upon the ground of an alleged preferential transfer of property to one of the bankrupt's creditors, within the four months' period, and the record shows that the creditor entered into the litigation in the bankruptcy court as to the good faith of the transfer and all other material facts, he cannot be heard to deny the jurisdiction of the court to make an order directing him to render an account to the referee of all property received from the bankrupt and to deliver such property to the trustee. *Philips v. procedure, which is regulated by general principles of law unless other provision is made.⁸⁸

(2) EFFECT OF VOLUNTARY SURRENDER.—It is a general principle governing jurisdiction of all courts that where a court has in its possession a fund in respect to which there is a dispute such court may determine the rights of parties asserted in such fund.⁸⁹ The voluntary surrender of the property in controversy to the court or its officers is equivalent to a consent and the bankruptcy court may then have jurisdiction of claims in respect to such property.⁹⁰ The possession of the property thus acquired by the court may be protected by it in the exercise of its general jurisdiction,⁹¹ rather than the jurisdiction conferred by this subdivision. Where an officer of the State court voluntarily surrenders to a receiver in bankruptcy property in his possession the State court is divested of jurisdiction.⁹² Where the property is surrendered in pursuance of a stipulation between the claimant and the bankrupt's receiver in bankruptcy, the court acquires jurisdiction and the trustee who is subsequently appointed is bound by the terms of the stipulation.⁹³ Once the property has been yielded to the jurisdiction of the court the court retains possession thereof for the purpose of settling all controversies which may arise in respect thereto.

(3) HOW CONSENT MAY BE SHOWN.—(1) In general.—The consent may be shown by any act indicating a willingness on the part of the defendant that his claim or his rights thereunder should be adjudicated by the court.

R. 359, 153 Fed. 249, in which it was held that where a mortgagee takes possession of certain property of the bankrupt just prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, claiming under a chattel mortgage thereon, and by agreement the property is turned over to the trustee in bankruptcy for sale, the proceeds to be paid into the bankruptcy court, the right of property to follow the fund with like effect as if the mortgagee had retained and sold the property under its mortgage, the court has, by virtue of its inherent powers, jurisdiction to determine the respective rights of the parties to the fund.

Jurisdiction in respect to fund in possession of the court.—In the case of Havens & Geddes Co. v. Pierek (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 9 Am. B. R. 569, 120 Fed. 244, the court said in speaking of an agreement between the trustee and the assignee of certain proceeds of a fire insurance policy belonging to the bankrupt, that such proceeds should be paid to the trustee, subject to the order of the district court: "The effect of the agreement under which the moneys were received was to transfer them to the custody of the district court, so that court might adjudge the rights of the respective parties thereto. The fund being in the registry of the court, or in the hands of its officers or appointees, the court, whether one of equity, common law, admiralty or bankruptcy, could determine informally and by summary intervening petition." See also In re McCallum (D. C., Pa.), 7 Am. B. 90. Validity of chattel mortgage; consent of claimant.—The question as to the validity of a chattel mortgage as between the mortgagee and trustee in bankruptcy of the mortgagor should generally be determined in a plenary action. But where the mortgagee allows the bankruptcy court to take possession of the mortgaged property and convert the same into money, provided it preserves the mortgagee's rights, whatever they may be, in the money instead of the property itself, and fails to appeal from the orders of the bankruptcy court or question the jurisdiction until the proceeds of the sale of the property are in process of administration, it will be deemed to have voluntarily submitted the question as to the validity of the mortgage to the bankruptcy court. *Wells & Co. v. If a mortgagee petitions for the payment of his mortgage debt he thereby consents to the jurisdiction of the court.⁹⁴ If the evidence is conflicting as to the consent of the exercise of jurisdiction, the determination of the district court will not ordinarily be disturbed on appeal.⁹⁵

(II) By appearance and pleading.—The general rule is that the defendant by appearing generally and demurring or answering on grounds going to the merits of the controversy as well as to the jurisdiction of the court, waives the objection that the court is without jurisdiction of the person.⁹⁶ If the adverse claimants proceed to a hearing upon the merits, without objection to the jurisdiction, they will be deemed to have consented to the jurisdiction.⁹⁷ Where proceedings are instituted in respect to property in possession of an adverse

The general appearance and pleading to the merits, without objection to jurisdiction, in a plenary suit brought by a trustee in bankruptcy in the district court which had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, constitutes a consent to the jurisdiction of such court; and a challenge to the jurisdiction made by the defendant, after it had taken some testimony under the issues joined, comes too late. Detroit Trust Co. v. Pontiac Sav. Bank (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 27 Am. B. R. 821, 196 Fed. 29.

Filing demurrer and answering.—Where an adverse claimant in possession of property alleged to have been transferred by the bankrupt by way of preference and fraudulent conveyance, in answer to the prayer of the trustee's petition that such conveyance be declared null and void, files a paper in which he sets up want of jurisdiction to grant relief, and also files an answer on the merits, denying that the conveyance was without consideration or fraudulent as to creditors, and contends on review of an adverse finding that the referee had no jurisdiction in the matter, the adverse claimant cannot be deemed to have consented to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court. In re Michie (D. C., Mass.), 8 Am. B. R. 734, 116 Fed. 749.

The general appearance of defendants who are adverse parties to the trustee to a rule to show cause issued upon his application and their failure to set up their right to be sued in the State court until after the filing of the second amended petition, when for the first time a case was made out upon which relief could be obtained against them does not constitute consent. In re Henby-Hutchinson Pub. Co. (D. C., Ill.), 5 Am. B. R. 569, 106 Fed. 909.

Appearance and submission of rights.—Although a landlord has the right to insist that title to property placed upon leased premises and claimed by bankrupt's trustee as trade fixtures should be determined by a plenary suit, such right may be waived; and where the landlord appears without objection and submits her rights to the special master and the bankruptcy court, she cannot, after a finding has been made against her as to part of her claim, urge the objection of lack of jurisdiction. claimant, and he is made a party and by answer interposes a defense upon the merits, he thereby consents to the jurisdiction.⁹⁸ The fact that a claimant "without waiver," proved a judgment secured in a State court in a suit to set aside a trust deed of property does not amount to a consent to the exercise of jurisdiction by the district court in respect to such property.⁹⁹ And where in a summary proceeding instituted by a trustee, a claimant filed a statement of his claim and produced evidence in support thereof, at the same time objecting to the jurisdiction of the court to determine such claim, he has not consented to such jurisdiction.¹⁰⁰ On the other hand if a creditor files his claim, and requests final disposition thereof, without objection to the jurisdiction, he will be deemed to have consented to such jurisdiction and will be controlled by the court's determination.¹⁰¹

(III) Effect of objection to jurisdiction.—Where objection is made to the jurisdiction of the court before proceeding to a hearing on the merits, and where before a final decision specific objection is made to the jurisdiction of the court, the appearance is not voluntary and is not sufficient to constitute a consent.¹⁰² If the defendants do not object to the jurisdiction of the court at any stage of the proceedings, it is too late to urge the objection on appeal.¹⁰³

99. Proving claim not consent to jurisdiction.—The fact that an adverse claimant in a suit, "without waiving her preference," proved her judgment as a preferred debt, did not deprive the State court of jurisdiction, nor amount to a consent to the exercise of jurisdiction by the court of bankruptcy. Pickens v. Dent, 187 U. S. 177, 9 Am. B. R. 47, 47 L. Ed. 128. The bankruptcy court upon finding that a claim was secured, has no jurisdiction to enter a decree against a creditor, an adverse claimant, for the excess value of his security over his debt without the consent of such claimant. *Fitch v. jurisdiction and objected that the district court could not proceed, but their objections were overruled. That they then did not abandon their claims did not amount to a waiver of their objections or to a consent to an exercise of jurisdiction against which they protested." In re Horgan (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 19 Am. B. R. 857, 158 Fed. 774, holding that where the sureties on the return of a citation served upon them subject to the power of the court to order them to turn over the amount of a deposit for their security, and prior to the entry of the final decree specifically objected to the jurisdiction of the court to proceed summarily, it is sufficiently shown that they did not consent to the jurisdiction of the court. And see In re Hayden (D. C., Mass.), 22 Am. B. 103. Booneville Nat. Bank v. Blakey (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 6 Am. B. R. 13, 107 Fed. 891.

Objection first raised on appeal.—In the case of In re Connolly (D. C., Pa.), 3 Am. B. R. 842, 100 Fed. 620, it was held that the appearance of the respondent on a petition of a trustee for an order compelling the delivery of property and proceeding upon the hearing before the referee without objection to the jurisdiction, implies consent and precludes the respondent from raising the point of lack of jurisdiction for the first time upon exception to an adverse report. In re Emerick (D. C., Pa.), 4 Am. B. R. 89, 101 Fed. 231, holding that while the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter a party submitting thereto cannot for the first time complain of the lack of jurisdiction when the decision is adverse.

c. Suits for recovery of property.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The exceptions added to subsection b by the amendments of 1903 and 1910 result directly in the clothing of a district court with full jurisdiction to entertain a suit brought by a trustee to recover property preferentially transferred within the meaning of § 60-b or fraudulently transferred or incumbered within the meaning of § 67-e, or 70-e,¹⁰⁴ without the consent of the defendant.^{104a} The jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court may only be sustained by bringing the allegations of the bill within the provisions of § 60-b, § 67-e or § 70-e of the act.¹⁰⁵ Such a suit may be laid either in the proper State court or in a district court even without the consent of the proposed defendant.¹⁰⁶ If brought in a State court, a Federal question is presented, which may be certified to the United States Supreme Court.¹⁰⁷ If in the district court, it need not be in the district where the bankruptcy proceeding is pending,¹⁰⁸ nor the district of the residence of the defendant.^{108a} Such a suit could formerly be brought, under certain circumstances, in the circuit court (now district court), as has already been shown.¹⁰⁹

(2) WHO MAY BRING SUIT.—The extension of jurisdiction resulting from the amendment of this subsection was probably intended only for the benefit of the trustee. The adverse claimant certainly cannot sue under § 23-b in

If preferentially transferred, it must have been within four months of the bankruptcy (§ 60-b); if fraudulently, the State statute of limitations controls (§ 70-e). See Gregory v. Atkinson (D. C., Mo.), 11 Am. B. R. 495, 127 Fed. 183, holding that except as to conveyances or preferences made within the four months' period the law remains as it was before the amendment. To a similar effect is the case of Harris v. First Nat. Bank (Sup. Ct.), 216 U. S. 352, 23 Am. B. R. 531, 54 L. Ed. 528; Palmer v. Roginsky (D. C., N. Y.), 23 Am. B. R. 353, 175 Fed. 883; Newcomb v. Blevin (D. C., So. Dak.), 29 Am. B. R. 15, 199 Fed. 629. So far as these cases deny the jurisdiction of the district court to entertain suits by the trustee for the recovery of property fraudulently conveyed under § 70-e, they have been nullified by the amendment of 1910. As to jurisdiction to entertain a bill in equity by a trustee to set aside a mortgage as preferential and fraudulent, see Hawkins v. Dannenberg Co. (D. C., Ga.), 37 Am. B. R. 262, 234 Fed. 752; Trice v. Coolidge Banking Co. (D. C., Ga.), 39 Am. B. R. 843, 242 Fed. 175.

Recovery of property.—In the case of Linstroth Wagon Co. v. Ballew (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 23, 32, 149 Fed. 960, Judge McCormick said: "The amendatory act of 1903 gave concurrent jurisdiction to the courts of bankruptcy and any State court which would have had jurisdiction if bankruptcy had not intervened, in suits by a trustee for the purpose of such recoveries as are authorized by § 60, subd. b, and § 67, subd. e, in addition to those which could be entertained by the consent of the proposed defendant." *Milkman v. the district court,¹¹⁰ nor can he by consent confer summary jurisdiction upon the court to determine the merits of a real adverse claim in property alleged to belong to the bankrupt but in the claimant's possession.¹¹¹ The right to sue in a court of bankruptcy, to recover property preferentially or fraudulently transferred, belongs exclusively to the trustee;¹¹² such right is not assignable.¹¹³ But if no trustee has yet been chosen, creditors may sue to recover such property in the State or Federal courts, on behalf of themselves and all other creditors.¹¹⁴ Receivers in bankruptcy have no legal right or capacity to recover a fraudulent or preferential transfer made by a bankrupt; this seems to be established by a majority of the cases and is based upon the correct principle.¹¹⁵

(3) WHEN SUITS MAY BE BROUGHT.—A district court has by subsection b of this section full jurisdiction to entertain a plenary suit to set aside a preference or a fraudulent conveyance made within the four months prior to bankruptcy, or any transfer by the bankrupt, which any creditor of such bankrupt might have avoided, and to recover the property so transferred or its value. "To recover property" undoubtedly includes a suit, the real purpose of which is to annul an incumbrance, other than through legal proceedings.¹¹⁶ Thus, practically all suits to set aside preferences or fraudulent transfers,¹¹⁷

R. 402, 131 Fed. 21, in which the court says: "The original act, § 23-a, relates only to controversies between the trustee in bankruptcy and adverse claimants to property acquired or claimed by the trustee. So also § 23-b relates only to suits brought by trustees in bankruptcy, and the amendments, if applicable here, likewise only apply to suits by trustees in bankruptcy."

B. R. 402, 131 Fed. 21. The restrictive effect of this subsection has no application to the right of a receiver to maintain or defend his possession of goods seized as those of the bankrupt. In re Lipman (D. C., N. J.), 29 Am. B. R. 139, 201 Fed. 169. See also discussion under § 60, "Recovery of preference," post.

In an ancillary suit by a trustee in bankruptcy to set aside an alleged preferential transfer of property by the bankrupt, other claimants will not be allowed to intervene, but must proceed in the court of original jurisdiction. *Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne v. Right of creditors to sue.—A trustee in bankruptcy represents all persons interested in the estate of the bankrupt. He is the representative of the creditors of the bankrupt, and if he in any given case would have a right as their representative to institute a suit to set aside a fraudulent or preferential transfer, it seems to follow as a necessary consequence that such creditors are entitled to do so also, in the absence of a trustee, and to maintain the same until such trustee shall have been chosen when he would be entitled to become a party plaintiff in the suit. In re Frost v. Latham & Co. (D. C., Ala.), 25 Am. B. R. 313, 181 Fed. 866.

Intervention by trustee.—It is proper that a trustee in bankruptcy should intervene in a suit brought by a creditor to set aside a fraudulent transfer made by the bankrupt. McCrory v. Donald (Miss. Sup. Ct.), 43 Am. B. R. 181, 80 So. 643; Bennells v. Potter (Mich. Sup. Ct.), 40 Am. B. R. 490, 164 S. W. 476.

117. See Gregory v. Atkinson (D. C., Mo.), 11 Am. B. R. 495, 127 Fed. 183; Lynch v. Bronson (D. C., Conn.), 20 Am. B. R. 409, 160 Fed. 139, holding that, where an insolvent within the four months' period purchased merchandise on credit and, with intent to defraud the seller, transferred the same for an inadequate price, the trustee of the insolvent buyer may recover the value of the property.

As depending on amount involved or citizenship.—If a cause of action is stated and to avoid liens other than those through legal proceedings, may be laid in the district court; with, it is thought, in most instances, a reference by consent to one of the referees in bankruptcy, as special master, to hear and report on the facts as special master. Where the litigants are at a distance from the stated sittings of the district court, resort may still be had to the then more accessible State tribunals. In whichever court the suit is laid, it at once becomes subject to the rules and practice there followed. It has been held that a district court may not entertain a plenary suit in equity to annul a cancellation of a mortgage, made by the bankrupt to himself as executor under a will, brought by beneficiaries, where the general creditors of the bankrupt have no interest.¹¹⁸ Where neither of the parties was a party to the bankruptcy proceeding, this section confers no jurisdiction.¹¹⁹ If the property in controversy is not a part of the bankrupt estate and may not be distributed in the proceeding, the controversy cannot be determined therein.¹²⁰ Irrespective of the amendment of 1903, a district court has jurisdiction to determine in a plenary suit, the rights of parties in respect to property which has been surrendered by a receiver without authority.¹²¹ Where property has passed into the actual or constructive possession of the trustee, it has been held that the district court may entertain a plenary suit brought against the trustee to under the bankruptcy act over which the United States District Court has jurisdiction, that jurisdiction will not be ousted by failure to plead or show that the amount involved was more than $3,000, or that the residence of all parties was within the same district. *Milkman v. Recovery of damages for conspiracy.—A suit by a trustee in which the complaint states a cause of action to recover damages for a conspiracy with the bankrupt, whereby the bankrupt, known by the defendants to be insolvent, purchased goods on credit and turned them over to the defendants for less than their value, is not a suit to set aside a fraudulent transfer within the provisions of section 67-e, and the bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction thereof under section 23-b. Lynch v. Bronson (D. C., Conn.), 24 Am. B. R. 513, 177 Fed. 605.

Recovery of property held under secret trust.—The bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction of an action by a trustee in bankruptcy, wherein no question of preference is involved, to recover real property which has never been in the possession of bankrupt or the trustee, but which is alleged to be held by bankrupt's wife, who received title thereto long prior to the four months' period, as trustee, in secret trust for the bankrupt, the record title being in her but the real ownership of the property being in bankrupt, since in such case, no "transfer" of the property is shown. Newcomb v. Biwer (D. C., S. Dak.), 29 Am. B. R. 15, 199 Fed. 523.

Property held in trust for wife.—Although a transfer by some third person for the benefit of the bankrupt cannot be avoided by a creditor under section 70-e of the Bankruptcy Act, still when it is alleged in a suit by the trustee that money of the bankrupt was by agreement used by his brother in creating a trust for his wife, and that the entire transaction was an attempt to conceal the money of the bankrupt by transferring it in the form of stock, relief may be granted if the facts are substantiated. Milkman v. Arthe (D. C., N. Y.), 32 Am. B. R. 519, 213 Fed. 642.

Property not belonging to bankrupt estate.—The bankruptcy court has no jurisdiction of a suit by the trustee in bankruptcy of a contractor, under an agreement to construct a building for a nonresident owner at the date of the bankruptcy, against the owner and nonresident subcontractors to determine the validity of orders given by the bankrupt to the subcontractors or the owner. This because the court is not in possession of the res. Under such circumstances the court has no jurisdiction of resident claimants holding no property belonging to the bankrupt estate. Matter of Smith Construction Co. (D. C., Ga.), 35 Am. B. R. 227, 224 Fed. 223.

determine the validity of liens claimed against such property,¹²² but in both instances jurisdiction exists under § 2 (7) of the act which vests district court with original jurisdiction to determine controversies with relation to estates of bankrupts, rather than under subsection b of § 23.¹²³ A suit, either at law or in equity, may be brought in the district court to recover a voidable preference;¹²⁴ it will become important in determining the question of jurisdiction to ascertain whether the transfer was in fact preferential, and the cases cited under § 60-a-b will be helpful. Where property in the possession of the adverse claimant was sold to him, title thereto may not be tried in a suit brought by the trustee in the district court.¹²⁵ A plenary suit by the trustee of a bankrupt corporation to recover unpaid subscriptions is not for the recovery of property under this subsection and may not be brought in a court of bankruptcy without the consent of the proposed defendants.¹²⁶ Suits against wrongdoers, who have wrongfully appropriated or misapplied funds belonging to the bankrupt estate, without the consent of the bankrupt do not fall within the meaning of the subsection as amended,¹²⁷ nor do suits for the recovery of ordinary contract debts.¹²⁸ The performance by a third person of a contract with the bankrupt cannot be enforced in summary proceedings.¹²⁹ It is no defense to an action, in a bankruptcy court, to set aside a preference that an action is pending in a State court between the bankrupt and the transferee, involving the same property.¹³⁰

f. Summary jurisdiction.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments have not, it is thought, changed the effect of present precedents against the exercise of jurisdiction summarily. If the party proceeded against is "an adverse claimant," in the broad sense of the words, he should not, under the present law, be asked to respond to a petition, order to show cause, or motion, any more than he was under the law of 1867, as it was interpreted in Eyster v. Gaff.¹³⁰ If the party is in possession of the property adversely claimed by the bankrupt or his trustee he cannot be deprived of the right to litigate the disputed right to possession or ownership in a plenary suit brought either in a district court or the proper State court.¹³¹ An undisputed debt due the bankrupt cannot be collected by a summary proceeding. It can only be collected by an independent suit brought by the trustee against the debtor in a court of competent jurisdiction.¹³² A claimant may not be directed summarily to surrender property in his possession to the trustee, upon the mere allegation of the trustee that the claimant's interest is not in good faith, and that he intends to attack the claim on the ground that it is fraudulent.¹³³ Where the claimant has submitted to the jurisdiction of the court, he cannot complain of the summary disposition of his claim.¹³⁴ A voluntary bankrupt cannot question the court's jurisdiction to act summarily against him and direct the delivery of his property to the trustee.^{134a}

If a person claims property in his possession, in good faith, the referee cannot by summary order direct that it be surrendered to the bankrupt's trustee. In re Walsh Bros. (D. C., Iowa), 21 Am. B. R. 14, 163 Fed. 352.

The legitimate object of summary proceedings by a trustee in bankruptcy is accomplished when it appears that the property sought to be recovered is in the possession of a third person and held under an adverse claim, which existed at the time the petition in bankruptcy was filed, and which, if supported by uncontradicted testimony, would sustain a judgment in favor of the claimant—even though the claim might in the end prove to be fraudulent and voidable; but a merely frivolous claim, such as that of an agent or bailee holding in the interest of the bankrupt, will not be allowed to defeat summary process. Courtney v. Shea (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 753, 225 Fed. 358.

Evidence of ownership.—Where by the uncontradicted testimony a motor truck claimed by the wife of a bankrupt is in a garage in her name, she is entitled to retain such possession until it is determined in a plenary action that she is not entitled thereto. Her claim is not merely colorable. Matter of Markel (D. C., Col.), 35 Am. B. R. 818, 228 Fed. 920.

133. Claim alleged to be fraudulent.—In the case of In re Tarbox (D. C., Mass.), 25 Am. B. R. 432, 185 Fed. 985, the court said: "The referee has jurisdiction under a summary petition to inquire and decide whether or not the claim under which property is held adversely to the trustee is merely colorable. But unless he can find it merely colorable he has no jurisdiction to proceed further. He cannot hear and determine its merits under a summary petition, if there is a real controversy as to the merits. Plainly the trustee cannot enlarge the referee's jurisdiction merely by alleging that the claim under which the property is held has no merits or is fraudulent, or by calling it 'merely colorable' when no other reasons appear for so describing it than its alleged want of merit or its fraudulent character."

In the case of In re Franklin Suit & Skirt Co. (D. C., Pa.), 28 Am. B. R. 278, 197 Fed. 591, the court said: "If as the result of such an inquiry, it should appear that the goods in question are held under a real adverse title, even if such title be founded upon what may seem to be a fraud, it would, no doubt, be necessary to fight that controversy out in a plenary suit; but if there should be no real claim of title, either fraudulent or bona fide, and if the goods should be merely held by a person who is the bankrupt himself in disguise, the court would unquestionably have power to take the goods into its own custody as the property of the bankrupt, and proceed to administer them according to law."

Surrender under agreement with receiver.—Where property is surrendered to a receiver in bankruptcy under an agreement that it is to be held subject to the final judgment of a court having jurisdiction as to the title to the property, such question may be determined in a summary proceeding provided that the proceeding is of such a character as to secure to each party a full and fair opportunity to present his case on the merits. Hollingsworth & Whitney Co., Petitioners (C. may pursue the investigation and for such purpose may cite the creditor to show cause, but if the creditor asserts a claim which is substantial, and objects to the jurisdiction of the court, the trustee should be directed to recover by plenary suit.¹³⁶ As a matter of right, the claimant should have his day in court in the regular way, i. e., by pleadings, trial, and judgment. On the other hand, if his claim is not strictly adverse, summary process is permissible, even that of contempt.¹³⁷

(3) EFFECT OF AMENDMENT OF 1903.—The act of 1903 having made Bardes v. Bank no longer the law, it has been suggested that resort may now be had to summary remedies in many cases where it was denied before.¹³⁸ But the only change accomplished by the amendment is to give jurisdiction of suits at law and in equity to recover property to the district courts, as well as to the courts of the State.

(4) JURISDICTION AS DEPENDENT UPON POSSESSION.—(I) General rule.—The power of the district court to proceed summarily will depend largely upon whether the subject-matter is in its possession, either actually or constructively; where such possession is shown the court may proceed summarily to determine controversies in respect to the property, and the extent and character of liens thereon or rights therein.¹³⁹ Once acquiring possession, the Court acquiring possession.—In the case of Murphy v. John Hoffman Co., 211 U. S. 562, 21 Am. B. R. 487, 53 L. Ed. 327, affg. 187 N. Y. 548, 80 N. E. 1104, the court said: "But where the property in dispute is in the actual possession of the court of bankruptcy there comes into play another principle, not peculiar to courts of bankruptcy, but applicable to all courts, federal or state. Where a court of competent jurisdiction has taken property into its possession through its officers the property is thereby withdrawn from the jurisdiction of all other courts. The court having possession of the property, has an ancillary jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions respecting the title, possession or control of the property. In the courts of the United States this ancillary jurisdiction may be exercised, though it is not authorized by any statute. The jurisdiction in such cases arises out of the possession of the property and is exclusive of the jurisdiction of all other courts, although otherwise the controversy would be cognizable in them. Accordingly, where property was in the possession of the bankrupt at the time of the appointment of a receiver, it was held that the bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to determine the title to it, as against an adverse claimant, and that the receiver had no right to deliver it to him without the order of the court." In this case the court held that the seizure of goods in the possession of a receiver appointed in the bankruptcy court could not be interfered with on a writ of replevin from another court.

Exclusive jurisdiction.—Where a court of competent jurisdiction has taken property into its possession, through its officers, the property is thereby withdrawn from the jurisdiction of all other courts. The court, having possession of the property, has an ancillary jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions respecting title, possession, or control of the property. The jurisdiction in such cases arises out of the possession of the property, and is exclusive of the jurisdiction of all other courts. Wright v. Harris (D. C., Ga.), 34 Am. B. Property held under writ of replevin prior to bankruptcy.—Where the sheriff, in an action pending in a State court, holds property in replevin taken by him prior to bankruptcy proceedings under claim of owner-property in the possession of the trustee is claimed by a person who was not a party to the bankruptcy proceedings, or any other controversy as to distribution of the estate, the court or referee has no jurisdiction to summarily determine the ownership of such property. The claimant is at least entitled to a determination of the claim, in judicial proceedings in which he has had an opportunity to appear.¹⁴²

(II) Claim of interest in property in possession of court.—Where a third person claims an interest in property in the possession of the bankrupt adjudication and which thereupon passed into the possession of the trustee, the referee may, by summary proceedings, require the claimant to appear in the bankruptcy court, and may adjudicate the rights of the parties in respect to such property.¹⁴³ This includes the power to determine by any valid mode or procedure the validity of the lien of a mortgage¹⁴⁴ or of a mechanic's lien on property which is in the possession of the bankruptcy court,¹⁴⁵ or the right to possession of leased premises in the possession of the bankrupt.^{146a} When the property of the bankrupt, or the fund resulting from the sale thereof, is in the custody of the court's officers, the court may summarily determine the validity of all subsisting liens thereon.¹⁴⁶ ship, the bankruptcy court has not jurisdiction, by summary order, to compel the sheriff to deliver the property to a receiver in bankruptcy. Matter of Rudnick & Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 33, 100 Fed. 903.

Possession of assignee or receiver for creditors.—The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction, by summary proceeding, to take from assignees and receivers for general creditors in insolvency or winding up proceedings, appointed within four months prior to the filing of the petitions in bankruptcy, from officers of courts attaching or replevying within that time, and from others holding for the bankrupt, property claimed to belong to the bankrupt, and then by virtue of the possession thus taken, to determine adverse claims to such property by a like summary proceeding. But the bankruptcy court may not thus take possession from a receiver appointed by another court, in a suit to enforce a lien antedating the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, or thereby draw to itself jurisdiction summarily to determine the validity of such a lien. In re Rathman (C. Claim to property in possession of bankrupt which passes to trustee.—In Mound Mines Co. v. Hawthorne (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 242, 178 Fed. 882, the court says: "The law is now settled that the interest of a third party in property claimed to belong to the bankrupt estate which, at the time of the institution of the proceedings in bankruptcy, is in the possession of such third person claiming an interest therein, can only be determined by an original suit brought for that purpose. Where, however, property which is in the possession of a bankrupt at the time of the bankruptcy proceedings and passes as a part of his estate into the possession of the trustee in bankruptcy, and a third party claims an interest therein, the referee may, by a summary proceeding, require such third party to appear in the bankruptcy court, present his claim, and the referee may adjudicate the rights of the parties in respect thereof." In re Epstein (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 19 Am. B. R. 80, 156 Fed. 42, in which it was held that a court of bankruptcy may, by summary process, require those who assert title to, or interest in property, which has rightfully come into its possession and control as part of the bankrupt estate, to present their claims to that court, and the notice being reasonable, may proceed to adjudicate the merits of such claims.

Dower rights.—A bankruptcy court or referee has jurisdiction to determine in a summary proceeding the inchoate right of dower of the widow of the bankrupt under an agreement between her and the trustee by which the latter agreed to pay her not less than a certain amount upon the sale of the property. Matter of Dialogue & Son (D. Constructive possession insufficient.—In the case of In re Rathman (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 246, 183 Fed. 913, the court said: "If the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings without more, without any act of the bankruptcy court, or any of its officers, to give notice to adverse claimants, or to reduce the property claimed to belong to the bankrupt to the possession of the officers of that court as his property gives it constructive possession, and hence a legal custody that enables it to determine by summary proceedings the merits of adverse claims to liens and titles to such property in the actual possession of others, then no case could ever arise in which any other court could have jurisdiction by plenary suit to determine the merits of such claims, for in every case a bankruptcy proceeding is commenced and the only ground on which the jurisdiction to determine summarily the merits of such claims is sustained, is that the bankruptcy court's legal custody of the property excludes the jurisdiction of every other court and gives it the power to determine summarily all claims to liens upon, or interests in, the property in such custody. But this theory flies in the face of the settled rule repeatedly announced by the Supreme Court that the actual possession by the bankruptcy court is the indispensable condition of its exclusive and of its summary jurisdiction here."

Possession of agent.—Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 7 Am. B. R. 224, 46 L. Ed. 405, where it appeared that the property of the bankrupt was in the hands of the third person before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, as an agent of the bankrupt, and in respect to which he asserted an adverse claim; it was held that the bankruptcy court had power, by summary proceeding, to compel the surrender of the property to the trustee.

Where a third party does not admit that he is entitled to the possession of property and makes no claim to title thereto, he may not object to the exercise of summary jurisdiction by a court of bankruptcy in attempting to trace into his hands property of the bankrupt, where such property or its proceeds are traced through the hands of the bankrupt into the possession of the agent. The trustee may demand that the agent be compelled to make good or account for the

(IV) Unauthorized surrender of possession.—The jurisdiction to proceed summarily is not lost by the unauthorized surrender of possession by officers of the court or by seizure of the property by an adverse claimant.¹⁵² If property of the bankrupt, once in the possession of the court, has been sold by the trustee without authority the court may summarily direct the return of such property.¹⁵³

(V) Possession under attachment annulled by adjudication.—Where the claim of possession as against the trustee's right of possession is based solely on an attachment lien which is annulled by the adjudication in bankruptcy, the person or officer so in possession holds as bailee for the trustee, and may be required to deliver the property by summary order issued from the bankruptcy court.¹⁵⁴

retained by a third party, he may be compelled summarily to surrender it to the trustee.¹⁵⁵ If it be asserted that a third person is in fraudulent possession of property belonging to the bankrupt, it should be clearly shown that such property may be sufficiently identified to enable the proper officer to take it into his possession.¹⁵⁶ If property fraudulently transferred by the bankrupt subsequent to the adjudication, is sold or mingled with the vendee's property so as not to be capable of identification, the court may direct the vendee to restore the value of the goods.¹⁵⁷ It does not follow that a bankrupt or a third party may be summarily ordered to deliver property to the trustee, because such property was conveyed within the four months' period, with alleged intent to defraud creditors; it may be that the transferee has a valid claim to such property, notwithstanding such transfer; it should appear that the possession and control of the property is in the bankrupt or in one who holds for him or in his right.¹⁵⁸ Even though the possession of the adverse claimant is merely colorable and founded upon a preposterous claim, the trustee may not proceed summarily, but the party claiming possession should be heard in defense of such possession.¹⁵⁹ Property in the possession of a third person cannot be recovered summarily on the mere suspicion raised by the haste with which the property was sold and delivered immediately preceding bankruptcy.¹⁶⁰

(VII) What constitutes possession of court.—Property is in possession of the court when an officer of the court is in possession, whether such officer be a trustee, a receiver, or any other judicial representative.¹⁸¹ The test of the summary jurisdiction is that the court of bankruptcy, through the act of its officers, such as referees, receivers or trustees, has taken possession of the res as the property of the bankrupt.¹⁸²

(VIII) When possession takes effect; filing petition as notice.—Upon the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, followed by adjudication, the property in the possession of the bankrupt of which he claims the ownership passes at once into the custody of the court of bankruptcy and becomes subject to its jurisdiction.¹⁸³ It has been expressly stated in a number of cases that the property of the bankrupt, after the filing of the petition against him and before adjudication thereon, is in custodia legis; that from that time it becomes subject to the prehensory power of the court and the bankrupt or his creditors cannot take any action in respect to it.¹⁸⁴ This principle is based upon the often-repeated statement that the filing of a petition is a caveat to all the world, and is in fact an injunction and attachment.¹⁸⁵ But it applies only to parties who have no substantial claim to a lien upon or title to the property of the bankreceivers of the bankrupt for an order to compel the creditor to deliver the property to them.

Where bankrupt's receiver actually obtained possession of goods at the very inception of a controversy concerning the title thereto and they remained in his possession and that of the trustee until sold by order of the court and consent of all parties, since which time the trustee held the proceeds, the bankruptcy court had jurisdiction to determine the title to the goods in summary proceedings. rupt; as against those who have such claims the filing of the petition is neither a caveat nor an attachment. Until the bankruptcy court takes actual possession of the property by some act of one of its officers, or makes such claimants parties to the proceeding by some order or process, or notice of the proceeding comes to them, their liens, titles and remedies are unaffected thereby and they are strangers to the proceeding.¹⁶⁶ A bank may not be required by summary order to turn over to the trustee in bankruptcy of a depositor, the amount paid by it on checks subsequent to the filing of a bankruptcy petition against such depositor, of which it had no actual notice.¹⁶⁷ The principle above declared was never intended to prevent the consummation of legitimate business transactions which were being conducted at the time a petition was filed against one or the other of the parties to such transaction.¹⁶⁸ But where a bankrupt, after the filing of a petition against him, but before the court had come into actual possession of the estate, pays a bona fide debt out of the assets, to a creditor who had no notice of such filing, the court may entertain

Effect of proceedings; lienors not parties. — Bankruptcy proceedings do not of themselves operate as an attachment or sequestration in the sense of a judgment or the conferring of a lien, but there is a mere passing by operation of law of the title of the bankrupt to the trustee. Liens and encumbrances against the property not avoided by the bankruptcy act remain unaffected by the proceedings except to the extent to which the remedy of enforcement is limited by the property having passed into the custody of the court. Until such lien creditors or other third persons with rights in the property of the bankrupt come into the bankruptcy court to enforce their rights or are brought in to have the rights of the trustees asserted as against them, they are in no proper sense parties to the bankruptcy proceedings. Matter of Reading Hat Mfg. Co. (D. C., Pa.), 34 Am. B. R. 884, 224 Fed. 786.

167. Application of principle where bank pays check drawn by bankrupt. — In the case of Matter of Zotti (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 234, 186 Fed. 84, the court said: "Of course the trustee can after adjudication, and the receiver before, compel the surrender of assets in the possession of the bankrupt, or of the alleged bankrupt, or of any one for him. As to such persons, the filing of the petition may be a caveat, attachment and injunction. Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 7 Am. B. R. 224, 46 L. Ed. 405, was just such a case. The bankrupt had presented to his son the proceeds of substantially all his property immediately before the petition was filed. In summary proceedings, before the referee, to make the son surrender these moneys, he merely denied jurisdiction that he had received them before the petition was filed." (The court then quoted at length from the opinion of Chief Justice Fuller in such case): "... We think this language was never intended to be applied to a bank which has honestly paid checks to the depositors without notice that any petition in bankruptcy has been filed against him and who may never be adjudicated a bankrupt at all."

168. Legitimate business transactions. — In the case of Matter of Murtens (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 15 Am. B. R. 362, 142 Fed. 445, 75 C. C. A. 548, the court said: "Under the former act there were many decisions, that a lien previously acquired could not be enforced subsequent to the commencement of the proceeding, except with the permission of the bankruptcy court. The Supreme Court, however, refused to sanction these decisions, and held that the lienor was entitled to perfect his title and enforce his rights as though no proceeding had been commenced. Eyster v. Gaff, 91 U. S. 521, 23 L. Ed. 403; Jerome v. McCarter, 94 U. S. 734, 24 L. Ed. 136. The change in the present act, by which the trustee's title is that only which exists at the date of the adjudication, removes any uncertainty which arose under the act of 1867. It was intended, we think, to permit all legitimate business transactions between a debtor and those dealing with him to be carried out and consummated as freely until he has been adjudicated a bankrupt as though no proceedings were pending. In many cases the proceeding against an alleged bankrupt is unfounded, and for this and other reasons never culminates in an adjudication. While the filing of a petition in bankruptcy is a caveat to all the world, the notice ought not to have the effect of paralyzing all business dealings with the debtor, or to prevent lienors or pledgees from enforcing their contracts. This is its practical effect if the rights and remedies of all concerned are in suspense until it can be ascertained whether an adjudication is or is not to follow the commencement of the proceeding." Compare Edison Electric Illum. Co. v. Tibbatts (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 640, 241 Fed. 468.

summary proceedings to recover such payment.¹⁶⁹ In any event whether the property vests at the time of the filing of the petition or upon the adjudication the possession of the bankrupt becomes that of the court and from either of such times the court may proceed summarily in respect to the property of the bankrupt.¹⁷⁰

(IX) Claim against bank deposits or securities pledged.—The claim of a bank to ordinary deposits made by a bankrupt, based on an alleged right to offset notes of the bankrupt, will generally be held to be adverse, and the bank is entitled to a determination of the claim in a plenary suit.¹⁷¹ But a summary proceeding may be maintained against a bank to compel it to turn over funds received from the bankrupt upon deposit after the filing of the petition.^{171a} Where securities are pledged for the payment of a debt owing by the bankrupt, and are in the possession of the pledgee at the time of the adjudication and other parties assert a claim to such securities the claim is adverse, and the referee may not summarily determine the right of the trustee to the possession of the securities. The claimants are entitled to the benefit of a plenary suit.¹⁷²

(X) Extent of jurisdiction.—The jurisdiction pertains to the hearing and determination of all adverse claims involving title and possession or control of property which is in possession of the trustee as assets of the estate.¹⁷³ Wherever a receiver in bankruptcy is directed by the court to sell assets in his possession, the parties concerned in the sale are subject to the summary jurisdiction of the court, and the court may direct the manner of the completion of the contract.¹⁷⁴

(4) EXERCISE OF SUMMARY JURISDICTION.—If the property proceeded against be not held adversely, that is, if it be either actually or constructively¹⁷⁵ in the possession of the court, summary process may issue in the exercise of the court's lawful jurisdiction in respect thereto. It will thus be noticed that the Recovery from third person.—A summary proceeding to recover alleged assets from the possession of a third person cannot be transformed by the bankruptcy court into a suit to set aside several transactions, either as preferences or as fraudulent agreements, and where such alleged assets are in the actual and exclusive possession of such third person, under a claim of title that is supported by a good deal of evidence the sole remedy of the receiver or trustee in bankruptcy is a plenary suit; In re Glenn (D. subject to the rights of a prior pledgee who, since the stock was pledged, has had physical possession thereof, as well as the litigation had between the trustee and the bank, disclosed the existence of an adverse claim, the bank was entitled to the benefit of a plenary suit; and the bank which challenged the jurisdiction of the referee upon its appearance, did not waive such objection, nor confer jurisdiction upon the referee by pleading to the merits.

question also hinges upon the nature of the claim as adverse and this in turn is controlled by the determination as to where the possession lies. The case of *Bardes v. Bank*¹⁷⁶ effectually limited the exercise of jurisdiction by the district court over plenary suits for the recovery of property adversely held. The amendment of 1903 eliminated this limitation. As we have seen the only change accomplished by this amendment is to give jurisdiction of suits at law and in equity to recover property to the district courts. Beginning with White v. Schloerb,¹⁷⁷ where the property was taken in replevin from the custody of the court after an adjudication, and continuing through Bryan v. Bernheimer,¹⁷⁸ which held the vendee of a general assignee within four months of the bankruptcy, and with knowledge of its existence, amenable to summary process, to Mueller v. Nugent,¹⁷⁹ which declared the bankrupt's son, to whom, just prior to bankruptcy, he had delivered a large amount of property which he refused to restore to the trustee, not an adverse claimant, the Supreme Court has already supplied a chain of precedents which limit its broad doctrine in Bardes v. Bank. The case of *Louisville Trust Co. v. Cominger*¹⁸⁰ stands by itself, and, while seeming to limit Bryan v. Bernheimer, when carefully read, reaffirms it; the holding of the general assignee there being not strictly as assignee, in other words, as agent for the bankrupt, but rather as an individual having acquired title lawfully and without notice, and thus constructively, if not actually, adverse. Each of these decisions turns on whether the defendant is "an adverse claimant." Bardes v. Bank was a lightning flash, like Eyster v. Gaff under the other law, and cleared the atmosphere on this puzzling question of summary jurisdiction; but it was not necessary to any of the many recent decisions against summary process, though usually assigned as the reason for the ruling.¹⁸¹ The jurisdiction to proceed summarily doubtless exists as much now as it did before Bryan v. Bernheimer was decided. It is not a question of jurisdiction, but rather of comity and discretion.¹⁸² In facts like those in White v. Schloerb, Bryan v. Bernheimer, and Mueller v. Nugent, it should be exercised. In other facts, amounting to an adverse holding under a legal title before the bankruptcy, it usually will not; as where transfers were made by the bankrupt two years prior to filing the petition in bankruptcy, the court has no jurisdiction of an action to set them aside on the ground of fraud against creditors, without the consent of the proposed defendants.¹⁸³ Having now clearly the right to try controversies by plenary suit, the district court will be more apt to assume and retain jurisdiction which rests only on petition or order to show cause and appearances,¹⁸⁴ and, where possible, consider it as a suit between the parties so in court. But the phrasing of any rule generally applicable is impossible.

g. Ancillary jurisdiction.—A district court has only such jurisdiction as is conferred by the act; this section only confers jurisdiction to the extent that suits might have been brought by the bankrupt if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted, and contains no provision for auxiliary or ancillary proceedings in another court of bankruptcy in aid of the bankruptcy court that made the adjudication and has charge of the bankrupt's estate.¹⁸⁵ This question has been already discussed under § 2, ante, and it will there be noticed that the weight of authority, prior to the amendment of 1910, favored the exercise of such ancillary jurisdiction in special cases, when necessary to carry into effect the full purpose of the bankruptcy act.¹⁸⁶ The amendment of 1910 expressly authorizes courts of bankruptcy to exercise ancillary jurisdiction over persons or property within their respective territorial limits, in aid of the receiver or trustee appointed in any bankruptcy proceeding pending in any other court of bankruptcy. This amendment effectively disposes of any

A bankruptcy court in a district other than that in which the bankruptcy proceedings are pending has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver of the property of the alleged bankrupt, except upon motion in open court upon such notice to the persons in the actual possession of property so located, and to those otherwise interested as will in the circumstances constitute due process of law as required by the Constitution. Ross-Meeham Foundry Co. v. Southern Car & Foundry Co. (D. C., Tenn.), 10 Am. B. R. 624, 124 Fed. 403. In the case of In re Williams (D. C., Tenn.), 10 Am. B. R. 538, 123 Fed. 321, it was held that a bankruptcy court in a district other than that in which the bankruptcy proceedings are pending may not grant an application for an order for an examination before a referee of persons concerning the acts, conduct and property of the bankrupt of which it is alleged that such persons have knowledge; such an order should be made by the court of bankruptcy having charge of the administration of the estate.

186. See ante, p. 32; In re Nelson & Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 18 Am. B. R. 66, 149 Fed. 590; Babbitt v. Dutcher (Sup. Ct.), 216 U. S. 102, 23 Am. B. R. 519, 54 L. Ed. 402. The amendment of § 2 by the act of 1910 makes clear the right to exercise ancillary jurisdiction.

Inherent ancillary jurisdiction.—In the case of In re Swofford Bros. Dry Goods Co. (D. C., Mo.), 25 Am. B. R. 232, 287, 180 Fed. 549, the court said: "The jurisdiction of this court would undoubtedly be sustained upon still broader grounds. We have seen that a proceeding in bankruptcy is a proceeding in equity and that for the purposes of enforcing and protecting its jurisdiction a court of bankruptcy has all the inherent powers of a court of equity. This being the case it may be appealed to by supplemental and ancillary bill to enforce its orders, sustain its jurisdiction and protect parties before it in the enjoyment of rights secured through and under it. This is always true where jurisdiction is reserved or still retained, and even afterwards where the result would be a relitigation of the same subject matter between the same parties. An appeal addressed to this power of the court is essentially supplemental and ancillary in its nature, and inheres in the general equity jurisdiction of the court."

In the case of Staunton v. Wooden, 24 Am. B. R. 736, 179 Fed. 61, it was held that the court in which a petition in bankruptcy is filed has plenary jurisdiction in bankruptcy co-extensive with the United States to order and control the disposition of the bankrupt's estate and is vested with jurisdiction to determine all liens thereon and all interest affecting it, but it may not by summary order direct a nonresident to deliver to the trustee property in the possession of such nonresident outside the district. And in the case of In re Heintz (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 29 Am. B. R. 19, 201 Fed. 338, it was held that a summary proceeding to collect property belonging to the estate of a bankrupt, which is in the possession of a stranger residing outside of the territorial limits of the court of the original adjudication, must be determined by the court within whose jurisdiction the property is located and the respondent resides. And see, also, In re Rathfon Bros. (D. C., Mich.), 29 Am. B. R. 22, 200 Fed. 108.

conflict which may have arisen in respect to the exercise of ancillary jurisdiction. It makes clear the power of the bankruptcy court in one district, to aid by its process the administration of bankrupt estates, where the proceedings were instituted in another district. The cases cited in the note denying this jurisdiction are nullified. Under the scheme of the bankrupt act the district court of the domicile of the bankrupt takes jurisdiction of the bankrupt and his property wherever situated,^{186a} to administer it and distribute the proceeds among the creditors according to their respective rights and priorities. It thus happens that there is usually no necessity for the exercise of ancillary jurisdiction by a bankruptcy court.¹⁸⁷

h. Auxiliary remedies.—A bankruptcy court, as a court of equity, is competent to grant final and auxiliary reliefs adapted to the circumstances of any case, however peculiar, and, by the bankrupt act, it is charged with the duty to devise such orders and judgments as may be necessary for the enforcement thereof.¹⁸⁸ The amendment of 1903 has not affected the jurisdiction of the court in respect to the different auxiliary remedies. Where the right to stay should have been exercised before Bardes v. Bank it should be exercised now,¹⁸⁹ the amendments having accomplished no change here.¹⁹⁰ So also of orders to show cause resulting in contempt.¹⁹¹ The question is not one of jurisdiction, but of comity, of propriety. The court can, but often should not.¹⁹² If the bankrupt had the title at the time of the bankruptcy, it has the jurisdiction and may assert it. If the court, through its officers, had acquired peaceable possession of the property, under such conditions as to place it and the proceeds thereof in custodia legis, it may determine the ownership of such property and proceeds,¹⁹³ and the relative priorities of conflicting claims thereto.¹⁹⁴ Likewise, too, of that much mooted question whether a district court can summarily bring in a stranger who has a lien on the bankrupt's property and determine its validity, against his protest.¹⁹⁵ If the bankrupt had not the title,

B. R. 389; as to right to determine contro-

as in the case of chattel mortgages in New York,¹⁹⁶ its jurisdiction is doubtful; and surely not if both title were vested in, and res were in the possession of, the mortgagee. Further, if the court has such jurisdiction, the referee has also.¹⁹⁷ Cases will arise where it should be exercised. But, in the long run, unless it is absolutely essential to preserve assets or carry out the purposes of the act, a summary disposition of such controversies in the proceeding, and not by suit, should not be asked.¹⁹⁸ Even a lienor having a lien on property vested in, and in the possession of, the trustee is generally an adverse claimant.¹⁹⁹ The analogies of the statute seem to entitle him, if he desires, to a plenary suit; and the district court will be slow to take it from him. This view is strengthened by the fact that this law, unlike its predecessor,²⁰⁰ contains no clause authorizing the trustee to sell incumbered property free from existing liens. The true test here is the same as that which applies where a stay or order to show cause which may result in contempt is asked; a test sufficiently indicated in the preceding paragraphs. Of course, what goes before does not in any way limit the right of the court to take possession summarily of the property of an alleged bankrupt which is found in his possession or that of his agent.²⁰¹ This section does not authorize a Federal court to entertain a bill in equity at the instance of a simple contract creditor to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance.²⁰² But the court may entertain a suit by the trustee to set aside a mortgage on lands in his possession because given within four months prior to bankruptcy.²⁰³ Auxiliary proceedings for the protection of the assets of the bankrupt should be brought in the district court of the district in which the proceedings are pending.²⁰⁴

V. JURISDICTION OF STATE COURTS.

By subsection b of this section suit by the trustee must be brought in the courts where the bankrupt might have brought or prosecuted them if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted, unless by the consent of the proposed defendants, except such suits for the recovery of property as are within the provisions of §§ 60-b, 67-e and 70-e. This provision requires in certain instances suits to be brought by the trustee in respect to the bankrupt's property in a State court and in other instances confers concurrent jurisdiction upon such courts. It has been held that "any State court which would have had jurisdiction had not bankruptcy intervened" now has concurrent jurisdiction²⁰⁵ of any suit which can be brought by the trustee in the district court.²⁰⁶ Thus, such a court has jurisdiction, not only to set aside a preference, to annul a lien other than through legal proceedings, and to recover back property fraudulently transferred,²⁰⁷ by the specific words of the act, but it also has, to the same end, such jurisdiction as may be conferred on it by the State law. The jurisdiction conferred upon a State court is limited to that conferred upon such court by State statutes; reference must be had to such statutes and the cases thereunder to determine such jurisdiction.²⁰⁸ State courts have jurisdiction in suits between a trustee in bankruptcy and third parties asserting rights in property claimed by the trustee as belonging to the estate of the bankrupt.²⁰⁹ It has been held that a State court has jurisdiction of a plenary suit by an adverse claimant to establish a lien on property in the trustee's possession.²¹⁰ If, at the time of the bankruptcy, a suit or proceeding is pending in the State court, of which the Federal court might otherwise have jurisdiction, the adjudication does not oust the State court of jurisdiction.²¹¹ The State court can proceed unless stayed. This is peculiarly true of actions in rem. In respect to such actions the court which first takes the property into its custody

Review in bankruptcy court of proceedings in State courts.—The owner of certain property having become insolvent, the contractor erecting buildings for such owner began proceedings in the State court to foreclose a mechanic's lien. After bankruptcy of the owner the trustee was permitted to intervene in the Supreme Court of the State. A judgment in favor of the contractor was therein affirmed. It was held that the proceedings in bankruptcy would not render void the proceedings then pending in the State court, though the bankruptcy court might exercise revisory powers over them; but that in the exercise of such powers the bankruptcy court would not review the judgment of the State courts as to minor amounts involved, or questions whether certain minor portions of the property were or were not parts of the parcel to which the lien attached. controversy.²¹⁴ A State court has no jurisdiction to foreclose a mortgage on a bankrupt's property after bankruptcy has intervened, without leave of the bankruptcy court and making the trustee a party.²¹⁵ State courts have jurisdiction against marshals, referees and trustees in bankruptcy, to recover damages for wrongful acts entirely beyond the legitimate scope and performance of official duties.²¹⁶ This jurisdiction will not be exercised unless it appears that such officers were in wrongful possession of the property in controversy.²¹⁷ When the possession of a State court amounts to a fraud on the law, as through a general assignment or a preference or an attachment, within the four months' period, the State court, while not, strictly speaking, ousted, in effect ceases to exercise jurisdiction, the assignee, or sheriff, or parties being permanently restrained.²¹⁸ The adjudication vests in the trustee or temporary receiver the

Where a vendor of chattels, upon electing to rescind the sale for fraud, brought an action in a State court to recover the property and immediately seized it under a writ of sequestration, the jurisdiction of the State court is in no way affected because thereafter the buyer was adjudicated bankrupt and his trustee took possession of the property. Linstroth Wagon Co. v. Ballew (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 23, 149 Fed. 960.

Suit in State court to establish lien.—Where at the adjudication of a corporation there is pending a suit to establish a lien upon its property, the question of the validity of the asserted liens may be left to the determination of the State court, but the bankruptcy court has power to direct the trustee in bankruptcy to appear in the action and present his case and make all reasonable effort to have the issues in the action brought to a judgment. In re New England Breeders' Club (D. C., N. H.), 23 Am. B. R. 689, 175 Fed. 501.

Suit in State court by stockholders to protect rights.—The pendency in a State court of a suit instituted against a corporation by its stockholders for the protection of their rights, and the possession of corporate property by a receiver appointed in such suit, although such possession was acquired more than four months prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy, will not deprive the bankruptcy courts of jurisdiction to compel the State receiver to turn over the property of such bankrupt to the receiver in bankruptcy. *Bank of Andrews v. Attachment in State court.—In the case of Tennessee Producer Marble Co. v. Grant (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 288, 135

Fed. 322, it was held that where, prior to the filing of a petition against an involuntary bankrupt, to enforce an asserted right in rem, under the State law, the bankruptcy court is without jurisdiction to stay such suit after the court has acquired jurisdiction of the res. This case was followed in the case of In re Kane (D. C., Pa.), 18 Am. B. R. 654, 152 Fed. 587, where it was held that if, prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, a fund claimed by the bankrupt and others had been attached in a State court by garnishment, that court is the proper tribunal to settle the controversy, unless all parties in interest submit to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court.

Neither of these cases properly consider the effect of § 67-f of the bankruptcy act, nullifying liens obtained by judgment, attachment or otherwise within the four months' period. Where a lien is created by attachment or levy within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, it becomes null and void on the adjudication of bankruptcy. This being the case, the jurisdiction of the State court in respect to the property subject to the lien is terminated. See Lehman Stern Co. v. Martin & Co. (La. Sup. Ct.), 132 La. 231, 32 Am. B. R. 681, 61 So. 212. In the case of In re Oxley & White (D. C., Wash.), 25 Am. B. R. 656, 182 Fed. 1019, the court quotes and approves this statement as to the effect of the preceding cases and says: "Ordinarily, the superior court would have jurisdiction to enforce the original lien of the mortgage in a suit brought before the initiation of the bankruptcy proceedings, and this court should not interfere unless it be necessary so to do in order to protect some right arising from the bankruptcy statute. It is admitted here that the goods upon which the lien was impressed by confession of judgment are so intermingled with those upon which the mortgage lien really existed that the two classes of goods cannot be distinguished. This rea-title of the bankrupt's property, and stays all seizures made within four months; it has the force and effect of an attachment and an injunction, and is a caveat to all the world. After such adjudication a State court has no jurisdiction to determine any rights affecting the bankrupt's estate, and is powerless to enforce any of its judgments as to such estate.³²⁵ But this does not prevent a State court from exercising such jurisdiction as may be necessary to preserve the property which has been taken into its possession.³²⁶ Where an action is brought by a trustee in a State court to recover an alleged preference, such court cannot determine the validity of their claims against the bankrupt and whether other creditors have not received voidable preference; to hold otherwise would be to transfer in a large measure the administration of the bankrupt's estate from the bankruptcy court to the State court.³²⁷ The possession by the bankrupt court of the proceeds of the sale of mortgaged chattels does not deprive the State court of its conceded jurisdiction to set aside the mortgage as fraudulent.³²⁸ If an assignment or receivership or trusteeship is made or created under a State law for the benefit of creditors within four months prior to the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, and a State court in the exercise of its jurisdiction under such law assumes possession of the property, it may not retain such possession and proceed to a distribution of the property among the creditors, but upon the adjudication the bankruptcy court supercedes the State court and becomes possessed of the property for the purpose of administration.³²⁹ Where a lien on the bankrupt's property antedates the filing of the

where it necessary that the entire sale be enjoined as otherwise the confession of judgment made by the insolvent debtors within four months before the filing of the petition, and resulting in the creation of a lien made void by the bankruptcy statute, would stand unassailable. The peculiar nature of the bankruptcy proceedings is such that in no court except a court of bankruptcy can the appropriate remedy be applied. If an adjudication of bankruptcy takes place in this matter the lien of the mortgage will be upheld here to whatever extent it is valid, and such steps will be taken as will fully recognize the respect due to the superior court and its officers, with proper regard to the harmonious relations which have ever existed between the two courts."

petition in bankruptcy, a receiver appointed by a State court in a suit to enforce such lien may not be deprived of possession of the property by the bankruptcy court, thus drawing to such court jurisdiction to determine summarily the validity of such lien.²²⁴ The right of a State court, through receivers appointed by it, to administer property of one subsequently adjudged bankrupt, brought within its grasp under its process more than four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, is not terminated by an adjudi-

A general assignment for the benefit of creditors made within four months prior to the filing of the petition is void as against the trustee in bankruptcy, so far as it interferes with the administration of the bankrupt estate. Randolph v. Scruggs, 190 U. S. 533, 10 Am. B. R. 1, 47 L. Ed. 1165. State receivership.—Ordinarily where a State court has obtained jurisdiction over property this jurisdiction is not disturbed by proceedings in bankruptcy, but the exception to the rule is, where the property is in the hands of a receiver, held for the benefit of creditors, and a receivership is created within four months prior to adjudication. In re Cameron Currie Co. (Ref., Mich.), 20 Am. B. R. 780. Where a receiver is appointed in behalf of creditors in a proceeding in a State court, based on the debtor's insolvency, within the four months' period, the subsequent adjudication in a bankruptcy court supersedes the jurisdiction of the State court. In re Watts, 190 U. S. 1, 10 Am. B. R. 113, 47 L. Ed. 933.

Action by trustee on bond of assignee.—Where the assignee under a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, made within the four months' period, gave a bond to duly account for all moneys received by him as such assignee and voluntarily accounted in the bankruptcy court but failed to comply with its order to turn over the amount in his hands to the trustee, the latter by leave of the State court may maintain an action against the surety upon the assignee's bond to recover the amount which the assignee failed to turn over to the trustee. Cohen v. American Surety Co., 192 N. Y. 227, 20 Am. B. R. 65, 84 N. E. 947.

General assignment.—The bankruptcy court has jurisdiction by summary proceeding to take from assignees and receivers for general creditors in insolvency or winding up proceedings appointed after four months prior to the filing of petitions in bankruptcy, from officers of courts attaching or replevying within that time, and from others holding for the bankrupt, property claimed to be that of the bankrupt, and then by virtue of the possession thus taken to determine adverse claims to it by a like proceeding. In re Rathman (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 246, 183 Fed. 913.

State receivership.—Where the receiver of a corporation appointed by a State court, has notice of an order of the bankruptcy court appointing a receiver in bankruptcy proceedings against such corporation, it is his duty to turn over at once to the receiver in bankruptcy, all property of the corporation which is in his possession. In re Ziegler Co. (D. C., Conn.), 26 Am. B. R. 761, 189 Fed. 259.

The fact that a receiver of a private banker was appointed by a State court in a suit instituted after the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, and that the property of the bankrupt was previously in charge of an agent of the State bank commissioner, does not render the receiver an adverse claimant, so as to prevent the bankruptcy court from issuing a summary order directing the delivery of the property to the trustee. Matter of Sage (D. C., Mo.), 35 Am. B. R. 436, 224 Fed. 525, in which case the court said: "It is well settled that, where a trustee in bankruptcy is entitled to the possession of property in the possession of a receiver appointed by a State court, the court of bankruptcy will, if necessary, by its own order direct and compel such receiver to deliver such property to the trustee. Such an order can be properly made, notwithstanding that the State court has previously denied an application of the trustee in bankruptcy addressed direct to it."

A receiver appointed pendente lite to continue the business of the bankrupt, during a suit instituted by the trustee to set aside fraudulent conveyances by the bankrupt, when a judgment is entered in favor of such trustee, should surrender the property to the trustee upon demand and take a receipt therefor. If the receiver has expended a large sum or involved himself in future liabilities, the court may secure him before directing delivery of possession. Hull v. Storage House, 166 N. Y. App. Div. 739, 34 Am. B. R. 376, 152 N. Y. Supp. 363.

cation in bankruptcy.²²⁵ A State court which appoints a receiver has jurisdiction on the receiver's accounting over the amount of his compensation, the fees of his counsel and the payment of the surety upon his bond.^{225a} If the controversy arose prior to bankruptcy and concerns property which has passed to the trustee, and is of such a nature that it might have been litigated by a suit at law or in equity in a State court, had bankruptcy not intervened, the State court has jurisdiction of a suit brought by an adverse claimant in respect to such property.²²⁶ If proceedings are brought in a State court for the dissolution and winding up of affairs of an insolvent corporation and subsequently and within four months thereafter a petition in bankruptcy against such corporation is filed the jurisdiction of the State court in respect to the property of the corporation terminates upon adjudication, and the bankruptcy court will thereupon supersede the State court.²²⁷ But a creditor's suit in equity to liquidate the affairs of a corporation, instituted more than six months prior to a voluntary bankruptcy by the corporation, is not necessarily affected thereby.²²⁸ Where a receiver in proceedings in a State court against an insolvent corporation has been directed by order of such court to deliver the assets of such corporation to a receiver or trustee in bankruptcy, such assets may be retained notwithstanding the reversal of such order on appeal, and the bankruptcy court should determine all questions relative to such assets.²²⁹ While the jurisdiction of the Federal courts is essentially exclusive when properly invoked, a State court is not necessarily deprived of jurisdiction to dissolve a corporation on the ground of insolvency; and where the creditors of such a corporation fail to institute bankruptcy proceedings within four months after the appointment of a receiver in the State court upon the ground of insolvency, the jurisdiction of the State court becomes fixed and not subject to interference.²³⁰ It has been held that the refusal of a receiver appointed in a State court upon notice of the appointment of a receiver by the bankruptcy court to turn over property of the bankrupt to the receiver in bankruptcy, upon advice of counsel, will not be treated as a personal disrespect to the bankruptcy court, so as to warrant his punishment as for a contempt.²⁴¹ The above doctrines are all that can be safely stated. The Enforcement of pledge.—The filing of a petition in bankruptcy against a pledgor does not oust the State court of jurisdiction to entertain an action by the pledgee to foreclose his lien. Griffin v. Smith (Cal. Sup. Ct.), 41 Am. B. R. 354, 171 Pac. 92.

Notice to State court.—An order of a bankruptcy court upon the receiver of a State court to deliver property without first causing notice of the bankruptcy proceedings to be given to that court, and without causing a motion or application to be made to it for an order on its receiver to deliver over the property, is erroneous. Martin v. Oliver (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 43 Am. B. R. 739, 260 Fed. 89.

A State court is not bound to take judicial notice of the filing of the petition but must have notice through pleadings filed therein. Coppard v. Gardner (Tex. Ct. of Civ. App.), 40 Am. B. R. 777, 199 S. W. 650.

Title to property transferred prior to bankruptcy.—In the case of Babbitt v. Dutcher, 216 U. S. 102, 23 Am. B. R. 519, 54 L. Ed. 402, the court said: "There are two classes of cases arising under the Act of 1898, and controlled by different principles. The first class is where there is a claim of adverse title to the property of the bankrupt, based upon a transfer antedating the bankruptcy. The other class is where there is no claim of adverse title based on any transfer prior to the bankruptcy, but where the property is in the physical possession of a third party, or of an agent of the bankrupt, or of an officer of a bankrupt corporation, who refuses to deliver it to the trustee in bankruptcy. In the former class of cases a plenary action must be brought either at law or in equity, by the trustee, in which the adverse claim of title can be tried and adjudicated. In the latter class it is not necessary to bring a plenary suit, but the bankruptcy court may act summarily, and may make an order in a summary proceeding for the delivery of the whole subject is hopelessly befogged by the fact that each class of courts unconsciously strains for jurisdiction in close cases. Some of the more reliable decisions will be found in the foot-note.²²²

VI. CONCURRENT JURISDICTION OF CIRCUIT COURTS OVER OFFENSES.

Subsection c of this section provides that the United States circuit courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of bankruptcy of the offenses enumerated in the act. As already noticed in a previous paragraph under this section the circuit courts have been abolished, and the jurisdiction of such courts is conferred upon the district courts.²²³ This subsection is therefore made of no effect, since the district courts as courts of bankruptcy are given jurisdiction to arraign, try and punish those who commit any of the offenses enumerated in the act.²²⁴ The jurisdiction of district courts as to bankruptcy offenses is now exclusive. The trial of offenses enumerated in section 29 will be moved like other criminal offenses at a stated term of the district court.

property to the trustee, without the formality of a formal litigation. The former class falls within the ruling which holds that such a suit may be brought only in a court which would have had jurisdiction of a suit by the bankrupt against the adverse claimant, except where the defendant consents to be sued elsewhere."

SECTION TWENTY-FOUR.

JURISDICTION OF APPELLATE COURTS

§ 24. Jurisdiction of Appellate Courts.—a The Supreme Court of the United States, the Circuit Courts of Appeals of the United States, and the Supreme Courts of the Territories, in vacation in chambers and during their respective terms, as now or as they may be hereafter held, are hereby invested with appellate jurisdiction of controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings from the courts of bankruptcy from which they have appellate jurisdiction in other cases. The Supreme Court of the United States shall exercise a like jurisdiction from courts of bankruptcy not within any organized circuit of the United States and from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

b The several circuit courts of appeal shall have jurisdiction in equity, either interlocutory or final, to superintend and revise in matter of law the proceedings of the several inferior courts of bankruptcy within their jurisdiction. Such power shall be exercised on due notice and petition by any party aggrieved.

Analogous provisions: In U. S.: As to appellate jurisdiction, Act of 1867. §§ 9, 24, R. S., §§ 4980, 4981, 4982, 4983, 4984, 4985, 4989; Act of 1841, § 4; As to supervisory jurisdiction, Act of 1867, § 2. R. S., §§ 4986, 4987, 4988; Act of 1841, § 6.

a. Appeals under law of 1867.—The former law was as simple in respect to appeals as the present, at first glance, seems complicated. Appeals as in equity cases and writs of error in those at law were heard in the circuit courts wherever the amount in controversy exceeded $500; the circuit court had supervisory jurisdiction of all cases and questions arising in a court of bankruptcy within its jurisdiction; appeals and writs of error could be heard in the Supreme Court only when the matter in dispute exceeded $5,000.¹ There was also the usual review by writ of error in the latter court of certain judgments of the highest courts of the States. Since that law was repealed, the Circuit Courts of Appeals have been vested with the appellate jurisdiction of the circuit court; while, that their calendars might not be congested with a multitude of petty questions, the appellate courts no longer “sit at the elbow”² of the court of bankruptcy, but appeals involving questions of fact are limited to important and vital matters, and superintendence may be asked only of questions of law.³ Thus, the entire system has been radically changed, and the cases under the former law are of little value. Further differences between the old and new system are discussed in detail later under this section and under section twenty-five, post.

b. Scope and meaning of section.—As explained later, this § 24 is here treated as if its subsection b were a part of § 25. It is clear from the caption that the section has to do only with the jurisdiction of appellate courts. Subsection a is general in its terms, and makes applicable the general law so far as it confers appellate jurisdiction of controversies in the district court, by giving the courts named a general appellate jurisdiction over questions arising in that court while sitting in bankruptcy.⁴ This subsection has no reference to appeals to the Supreme Court from the Circuit Court of Appeals. Except as expressly specified therein the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is not broadened in any way.⁵ Manifestly the jurisdiction conferred by this subsection is, so far as applicable, that conferred on Circuit Courts of Appeal by the Evarts act, subsequently revised and re-enacted in the Judicial Code.⁶ This act and the limitations suggested by what follows under this section and section twenty-five, should be consulted for an understanding of the broad scope, yet accurate boundaries, of appeals in bankruptcy.

c. Controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings.—(1) IN GENERAL.—This section is limited to controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings in the exercise by bankruptcy courts of the jurisdiction vested in them to settle the estates of bankrupts and to determine controversies in relation thereto.⁷

(2) CONTROVERSIES ARISING IN BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS.—The words "controversies in bankruptcy proceedings" in subsection a of this section, and the words "in bankruptcy proceedings" in the next section refer to different classes of cases; the former referring only to controversies outside of the bankruptcy proceeding proper, as suits between the trustee and adverse claimants.⁸ Nothing can be regarded as a "controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings" within the purview of subsection a where the subject-matter and object of the proceedings are within the power to make a summary order; certainly this is true where plenary action is not sought.⁹ As stated by the Supreme Court: "Section 25-a relates to appeals from judgments in certain enumerated steps in bankruptcy proceedings, in respect to which special provision thereof was required, while § 24-a relates to controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings in the exercise of the jurisdiction vested in them at law and in equity by § 2, to settle the estates of bankrupts, and to determine controversies in relation thereto."¹⁰ Controversies arising in the course of bankruptcy proceed-

R. 513, 209 Fed. 844, holding that where a conditional vendor intervenes in a bankruptcy proceeding assenting title to and asking possession of property sold the bankrupt, it is a controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings. Aff'd, 239 U. S. 268, 35 Am. B. R. 814.

A question as to a State court receiver's title and right to possession of bank stock in the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy, gives rise to a "controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings," which is reviewable by appeal, although there is also a subordinate question involved as to the bank's right to a lien on the stock. Dalton v. Humphreys (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 360, 242 Fed. 777. See also Am. B. R. Dig., § 1218.

Priority of liens.—Where a trustee in bankruptcy files a petition asking that the lands of the bankrupt be sold free of all encumbrances and that the liens be marshalled and transferred to the proceeds, and a mortgagee files an answer which is in effect an intervening petition in which it asks relief against the trustee and other lien holders, and the real question is as between the lien holders as to the priority of their respective liens, it is a ings involve questions between the receiver or trustee representing the bankrupt and his general creditors, as such, on the one hand, and adverse claimants on the other, concerning property in the possession of the trustee or receiver, or of the claimants, to be litigated in appropriate plenary suits, and not affecting directly administrative orders and judgments, but only the extent of the estate to be distributed ultimately among general creditors.¹¹ As where a controversy arises in respect to the claim of an adverse claimant in respect to a fund in the hands of the trustee as a result of a suit in a State court to recover property conveyed by the bankrupt in fraud of his creditors, it is a controversy arising in bankruptcy and is appealable under subsection a of this section.¹² Such orders and decrees as are in the nature of independent suits and controversies, arising in the course of bankruptcy proceedings are reviewable on appeal or writ of error, as the case may be, under subsection a of this section.¹³

(3) PROCEEDINGS IN BANKRUPTCY.—Subsection b relates to proceedings in bankruptcy only, as distinguished from controversies arising in bankruptcy controversy under section 24a and appeal from the decree of the District Court is the proper remedy. Century Savings Bank v. Moody (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 31 Am. B. R. 586, 209 Fed. 775. See also Matter of Leterman, Becher & Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 44 Am. B. R. 115, 260 Fed. 548.

A petition to revise is the equivalent of an appeal for the purposes of the Act of February 13, 1911, abolishing the supervision fee on appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Matter of Burr Mfg. Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 33 Am. B. R. 61, 215 Fed. 898.

Proceedings to establish liens.—Where labor claimants orally call the attention of the district court, acting as an ancillary tribunal, to services rendered to the bankrupt, and to their rights in a fund, held by the ancillary receiver from a State receiver and not derived through direct operation of the adjudication; and a special master is appointed to take testimony, the action by the claimants constitutes an intervention in bankruptcy proceedings, giving rise to a "controversy," within the meaning of section 24a of the bankruptcy act. Emerson v. Castor (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 37 Am. B. R. 719, 236 Fed. 28.

A proceeding to assert a lien on property which, at the time of the bankruptcy, passed into the possession of the bankruptcy court and the avails of which are constructively in the possession of that court, presents a controversy in bankruptcy reviewable by appeal and not by petition to revise. Matter of Sola (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 44 Am. B. R. 372, 261 Fed. 822.

11. Matter of Breyer Printing Co. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 32 Am. B. R. 706, 216 Fed. 878, citing Matter of Loving, 224 U. S. 183, 27 Am. B. R. 852, 56 L. Ed. 725; United States Fidelity Co. v. Bray, 225 U. S. 205, 217, 28 Am. B. R. 207, 56 L. Ed. 1035; see In re Mueller (C. C. A., Ky.), 14 Am. B. R. 256, 135 Fed. 711, in which the court says: "By 'controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings' is meant those independent of plenary suits which concern the bankrupt's estate, and arising by intervention or otherwise between the trustees representing the bankrupt's estate and claimants asserting some right or interest adverse to the bankrupt or his general creditors." See Kirkpatrick v. Harnesberger (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 29 Am. B. R. 459, 189 Fed. 886.

Wherever a third person intervenes in the bankruptcy court and asserts a superior title to property held by the trustee, he institutes a controversy in a bankruptcy proceeding, whether he intervenes by an original petition, or is brought into court upon the application of the trustee, and his remedy to review a judgment of that court is by an appeal under section 24-a. Gibbons v. Goldsmith (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 40, 222 Fed. 826; Matter of Herbert & Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 45 Am. B. R. 20, 263 Fed. 351.

Review of order vacating temporary injunction.—The review of an order of the district court, vacating a prior order of the same court directing that an interlocutory injunction issue restraining third parties from proceeding in an action in a State court against the bankrupt, may be had under § 24a, as the question at issue is a controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings. Bothwell v. Fitzgerald (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 261, 219 Fed. 408.

Liability for costs of receiver.—The question as to the liability of creditors who petitioned for the appointment of a receiver, for the costs of the receivership, presents a controversy arising in bankruptcy rather than a step in the administration of the estate. Matter of Veler (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 41 Am. B. R. 734, 249 Fed. 633.

Order allowing sale free from liens.—An order of the district court reversing an order of the referee allowing the petition of a trustee in bankruptcy to sell property subject to various liens and free and clear of other liens, constitutes a "controversy in a bankruptcy proceeding," and should be reviewed by appeal and not by petition to revise. *Sauve v. and from plenary suits.¹⁴ If the proceeding is summary in its character and object, it is a proceeding in bankruptcy, reviewable under § 24-b.¹⁵ The object of subsection b is to give a review as to matters of law, where facts are not in controversy, of orders of courts of bankruptcy in the ordinary administration of the bankrupt's estate.¹⁶

(4) DISTINCTION BETWEEN CONTROVERSIES ARISING IN BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS AND BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS.—There is a clear distinction between such controversies and "proceedings in bankruptcy" within the meaning of section 25-a; the latter, broadly speaking, covering questions between the alleged bankrupt and his creditors as such, commencing with the filing of the petition, ending with the discharge and including matters of administration generally, such as appointments of receivers and trustees, sales, exemptions, proof and allowance of claims, and other similar matters to be disposed of summarily, all of which naturally occur in the settlement of the estate.¹⁷ The

C. A., 6th Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 256, 135 Fed. 711.

17. Distinction between "Controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings" and "Proceedings in bankruptcy."—In the case of In re Friend (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 13 Am. B. R. 595, 134 Fed. 778, the court said: "Section 23 established a clear distinction between 'proceedings in bankruptcy' and 'controversies at law and in equity arising in the course of bankruptcy proceedings;' the former, broadly speaking, covering questions between the alleged bankrupt and his creditors, as such, commencing with the petition for adjudication, ending with the discharge, and including matters of administration generally, such as appointments of receivers and trustees, sales, exemptions, allowances and the like, to be disposed of summarily, all of which naturally occur in the settlement of the estate; and the latter, broadly speaking, involving questions between the trustee, representing the bankrupt and his creditors, on the one side and adverse claimants on the other, concerning property in the possession of the trustee or of the claimants, to be litigated in appropriate plenary suits and not affecting directly the administrative orders and judgments but only the question of the extent of the estate."

Judge Keller has summarized the conclusions of the several cases involving such distinction in the following language: "That there is a clear distinction between 'controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings,' as mentioned in section 24-a and 'the proceedings in bankruptcy,' which, by section 24-b, the Circuit Court of Appeals are given jurisdiction to superintend and revise 'in matter of law;' the former being generally held to embrace questions between the trustee, representing the bankrupt and his creditors, on the one side, and adverse claimants, on the other, and not directly affecting those administrative orders and judgments ordinarily known as 'proceedings in bankruptcy,' and the latter being confined to those questions arising between the bankrupt and his creditors which are the very subject of such administrative orders and judgments, from the petition for adjudication to the discharge, and including the intermediate administrative steps, and such controversies as arise between parties to the bankruptcy proceedings as are involved in the allowance of claims, fixing their priorities, sales, allowances, and other matters to be disposed of summarily." Thompson v. Maury (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 489, 174 Fed. 611. See also Snow v. Dalton (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 29 Am. B. R. 240, 203 Fed. 843; Matter of Weidhorn (D. C., Mass.), 39 Am. B. R. 338, 243 Fed. 766; Matter of Dressler Producing Corp. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 44 Am. B. R. 457, 262 Fed. 237.

In the case of Thomas v. Woods (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 132, 173 Fed. 585, the court in discussing these phrases as used in section 24, said: "In section 24-b, however, the term 'proceedings in bankruptcy,' as construed by the courts, has been given a narrower meaning and has been set over against 'controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings,' as used in section 24-a. Here it has been thought to mean any of the administrative acts intervening between the filing of the petition and the granting of the discharge, as distinguished from those 'controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings' on petition, which would have been the subject of plenary suits if the estate had not been in the custody of a court of bankruptcy." In the case of Morehouse v. Pacific Hardware & Steel Co. (C. O. A., 9th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 178, 177 Fed. 337, the court great number of authorities upon this branch of bankruptcy practice and the conflict between them has given rise to endless confusion, and it is sometimes difficult to determine within which class a particular order of the bankruptcy court may fall. Each case will necessarily be determined by its own facts, and in each, the important consideration is the object and character of the proceeding sought to be reviewed.¹⁸

(5) IMPORTANCE OF DISTINCTION.—If the controversy is one “arising in bankruptcy proceedings,” appellate courts exercise their jurisdiction as in other cases under subsection a of this section. If the controversy pertains to the proceedings in bankruptcy, relating to the adjudication and the subsequent steps in bankruptcy, it is one which may be revised in matter of law, upon due notice and petition by any party aggrieved, by a circuit court of appeals. The distinction between a controversy “arising” in bankruptcy proceedings and a decision or order in the bankruptcy proceedings proper, is for the sole purpose of determining whether the review by the appellate court shall be by appeal or by petition to revise in matter of law.¹⁹ It has been deemed advissaid: “It is conceivable that the line of demarcation between ‘proceedings in bankruptcy,’ and ‘controversies at law and in equity arising in the course of bankruptcy proceedings,’ may in some cases be obscure; but generally speaking, the former include all questions arising in the administration of the bankrupt’s estate, such as the appointment of receivers and trustees, orders requiring the bankrupt to surrender property of the estate in bankruptcy, orders requiring the bankrupt’s voluntary assignees to surrender property of the estate, orders giving priority to the claims of creditors, orders directing a set-off of mutual debts, and orders confirming a composition. These are questions, which, with a view to the prompt administration and distribution of the assets of the bankrupt, the law permits to be summarily disposed of by revision. The latter include all controversies and questions arising between the trustee and adverse claimants of property, as property of the estate, whether the property be in his possession or theirs.” See also Barnes v. Pampel (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 27 Am. B. R. 192, 192 Fed. 525; Matter of Breyer Printing Co. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 32 Am. B. R. 796, 216 Fed. 878; Ogden & Jamison v. Gilt Edge Mines Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 893, 225 Fed. 723.

18. In re Jungman (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 401, 186 Fed. 302, holding that in a case where substantially the only question raised is whether a contract for the purchase of certain property of the bankrupt’s estate has been made between the receiver of the bankrupt and a third party, a “controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings” exists, and a decision requiring such third party to carry out the terms of the judicial sale which had been ordered in accordance with such alleged contract, is reviewable by appeal.

19. The importance of the distinction is clearly indicated in the case of Moody & Son

v. Century Saving Bank, 239 U. S. 374, 36 Am. B. R. 95, 60 L. Ed. 336, in which the court said: “Whether the Circuit Court of Appeals rightly sustained this jurisdiction turns upon whether this is one of those ‘controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings’ over which the Circuit Courts of Appeals are invested, by § 24a of the Bankruptcy Act, with the same appellate jurisdiction that they possess in other cases under the Judicial Code, § 128, or is a mere step in bankruptcy proceedings, the appellate review of which is regulated by other provisions of the bankruptcy act. If it is a controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings, the jurisdiction of that court was properly invoked, as is also that of this court. We entertain no doubt that it is such a controversy. It has every attribute of a suit in equity for the marshaling of assets, the sale of the encumbered property, and the application of the proceeds to the liens in the order and mode ultimately fixed by the decree. True, it was begun by the trustee, and not by an adverse claimant, but this is immaterial, for the mortgagees, who claimed adversely to the trustee, not only appeared in response to notice of the trustee’s petition, but asserted their mortgage liens and sought to have them enforced against the proceeds of the property conformably to the contentions before stated. This was equivalent of an affirmative intervention, and, when taken in connection with the trustee’s petition, brought into the bankruptcy proceedings a controversy which was quite apart from the ordinary steps in such proceedings, and well within the letter and spirit of § 24a.” Citing Hewitt v. Berlin Machine Works, 194 U. S. 296, 300, 11 Am. B. R. 709, 49 L. Ed. 986, 987; Knapp v. Milwaukee Trust Co., 216 U. S. 545, 553, 24 Am. B. R. 761, 54 L. Ed. 610, 613; *Taft, W. & Co. v. able to consider under section 25 whether the review should be by appeal or petition to revise. It is therefore not essential in this connection to consider the nature and object of particular controversies for the purposes of determining as to the method of review.

II. APPEALS TO CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS AND SUPREME COURT.

a. In general.—Subsection a of this section vests the Supreme Court and the circuit court of appeals with appellate jurisdiction of controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings in the courts of bankruptcy from which they have appellate jurisdiction in other cases. The only matters which can be reviewed are "controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings." We have already considered the distinction to be made between such controversies and appeals in bankruptcy proceedings generally as authorized by the next section. The only court which may be appealed from is the court of bankruptcy, which phrase, as here used, does not include the referee.²⁰ The only courts which can hear such an appeal are the several courts mentioned. So, also, appeals can be taken only to the proper court in whose territorial jurisdiction the court of bankruptcy appealed from is located.²¹ The appellate courts are given juris-

20. Appeal to Supreme Court in "controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings." In the case of Tefft, Weller & Co. v. Mansuri, 222 U. S. 114, 27 Am. B. R. 333, 341, 56 L. Ed. 118, Mr. Justice White says: "But the entire argument rests upon a misconception of the words 'controversies in bankruptcy proceedings,' as used in the section, since it disregards the authoritative construction affixed, to those words, Coder v. Arts, 213 U. S. 234, 22 Am. B. R. 1, 53 L. Ed. 777, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436, 16 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1008; Hewitt v. Berlin Mach. Works, 194 U. S. 296, 300, 11 Am. B. R. 709, 48 L. Ed. 986, 987, 24 Sup. St. Rep. 690. Those cases expressly decide that controversies in bankrupt proceedings, as used in the section, do not include mere steps in proceedings in bankruptcy, but embrace controversies which are not of that inherent character, even though they may arise in the course of proceedings in bankruptcy. The cases referred to, moreover, by necessary implication, determine that the mere allowing or disallowing a claim in bankruptcy is a proceeding in bankruptcy, and not a controversy arising in bankruptcy, within the intentment of the section. Nor is there force in the contention that because the district court of Porto Rico is a court of bankruptcy 'not within an organized circuit of the United States,' therefore authority to review its action in a case like this is conferred on this court by the concluding sentences of section 24-a. This is true, because the proposition really rests upon the misconception of the section, already pointed out. That is to say, as the sentence relied upon only confers upon this court 'a like jurisdiction' to review the acts of the particular courts of bankruptcy which the sentence designates to that conferred by the immediately preceding provisions of section 24-a, that is, to review controversies in bankruptcy, it follows that the sentence confers no powers to review a mere step in bankruptcy, taken by a bankruptcy court, even though such court be one of those referred to in the last sentence relied upon." And see James v. Stone & Co., 227 U. S. 410, 29 Am. B. R. 476, 57 L. Ed. 573.

Appeals in controversies.—Section 24a of the Bankruptcy Act provides for appeals in controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings and controls an appeal from the Circuit Court of Appeals in a proceeding by a trustee to restrain a landlord from prosecuting a suit for rent in the State court. Mitchell Store Building Co. v. Carroll, 232 U. S. 379, 35 Am. B. R. 197, 58 L. Ed. 650.

Appeal in summary proceedings.—An attempted intervention by attorneys in a summary proceeding in a court of ancillary jurisdiction, basing their claim on alleged assignments made to them after the filing of the petition in the original jurisdiction, does not give jurisdiction over a controversy in bankruptcy appealable under § 128 of the Judicial Code of the Circuit Court of Appeals, and thence to the Supreme Court. Lazarus v. Prentice, 234 U. S. 263, 32 Am. B. R. 559, 58 L. Ed. 1305.

From judgment on petition to revise.—The Supreme Court cannot entertain an appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals, upon a petition to revise under section 24b of the Bankruptcy Act. Mitchell Store Building Co. v. Carroll, 232 U. S. 379, 35 Am. B. R. 197, 58 L. Ed. 650.

diction to sit "in vacation in chambers and during their respective terms;" which seems to mean that such courts are always in session for the sake of appeals. In conclusion it may be stated that circuit courts of appeals have jurisdiction to review the final decisions of courts of bankruptcy in controversies arising between the trustees in bankruptcy and third parties over the title to, or over liens upon the alleged property of the bankrupt or its proceeds, and that the general appellate jurisdiction vested by subsection a of § 24 is not affected or impaired by the grant of the power of revision and supervision in matter of law contained in subsection b of that section.²³

b. Appeals from district court to Supreme Court.—The appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings from a district court not within any organized circuit of the United States is the same as that of the circuit court of appeals from district courts included in an organized circuit. As to when and how an appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court from a district court is discussed under the next section.²³

c. Appeals to circuit court of appeals.—The circuit court of appeals is clothed by subsection a of this section with general appellate jurisdiction of controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings. Section 25-a provides for appeals in bankruptcy proceedings themselves in the specific cases stated. We will consider further the appellate jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals exercisable as in equity cases, under the next section.²⁴ By subsection b of this section the several circuit courts of appeals have jurisdiction in equity either interlocutory or final, to supervise in matter of law the proceedings of the several inferior courts of bankruptcy within their jurisdiction. A petition to revise is the means by which this jurisdiction is to be exercised. Because of the close relation existing between this method of review and that by appeal it is deemed advisable to consider it in the general discussion of the appellate jurisdiction of Circuit Courts of Appeals under the next section.²⁵

III. APPEALS TO SUPREME COURT FROM HIGHER COURT OF STATE.

The bankruptcy law contains no provisions regulating appeals from the court of last resort in a State to the Supreme Court of the United States. Such law does not in any way affect the right to such appeal given by the Revised Statutes.²⁶ This method of review will be found valuable in proceed-

²⁶ Appeal to Supreme Court from State Court.—Judicial Code, section 237, provides

as follows: "A final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a State, in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against their validity; or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of their validity; or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed, by either party, under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority, may be reings involving bankruptcy questions in the courts of the States, as, for instance, where a State court has erroneously interpreted a provision in the bankruptcy law,²⁷ or refused to recognize the validity of a discharge duly granted.²⁸ Where, in an action by a trustee to recover assets, the State court of last resort, in affirming a judgment for the plaintiff, construed some of the provisions of the bankruptcy law, its judgment presents a Federal question reviewable by the Supreme Court upon a writ of error.²⁹ The limitation of the Revised Statutes should always be borne in mind. The cases where a writ of error may be asked for may be summarized as follows:

First, where there has been a decision against the validity of any portion of the bankruptcy act; second, where a decision has been had by the State court sustaining a statute of the State claimed to be repugnant to the bankruptcy act; or, third, where the right, title, privilege or immunity of any person claimed under the bankruptcy statute has been denied by a State court.³⁰ So where a trustee in bankruptcy asserts a right in a State court arising under the bankruptcy law, a Federal question is presented which gives rise to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under the Revised Statutes.³¹ Where the only question determined in the State court was whether or not the bankrupt was entitled to an exemption under a State statute the judgment of the State court is not reviewable by the Supreme Court.³² The Federal question which is made the basis of review must have been raised in the State court,³³ even if passed on there, if the decision may be affirmed for other reasons, it will not be disturbed.³⁴ The amount in dispute makes no difference; but only questions examined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court upon a writ of error. The writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a court of the United States.

"The Supreme Court may reverse, modify, or affirm the judgment or decree of such State court, and may, at their discretion, award execution, or remand the same to the court from which it was removed by the writ."

Where defendant in an action against it in a State court sets up the issuing of an injunction by a court of bankruptcy, undertaking to stay proceedings in the State

Court, it thereby claims the benefit of a Federal right, so as to bring the case within section 709 (Judicial Code, § 237) of the U. S. Revised Statutes, and lays the foundation for a review in the United States Supreme Court. Acme Harvester Co. v. Beekman Lumber Co., 222 U. S. 300, 27 Am. B. R. 262, 56 L. Ed. 208; *Rector v. at law will be reviewed.³⁵ Such a writ of error can be directed only to the highest court of the State in which a decision of the matter in controversy could be had.³⁶ Appeals of this character being outside of the bankruptcy law, the practice is identical with that on writs of error from the Supreme Court to such a State court in cases involving Federal questions other than those growing out of the bankruptcy law.³⁷ While the certification of a record by a State court to the Supreme Court may not import a Federal question into the record where otherwise such question does not arise, such certificate may serve to elucidate the determination as to whether a Federal question exists; if the certificate does show that rights under the bankruptcy law were passed upon by the State court the Supreme Court will review the judgment.³⁸ A number of other cases indicating the circumstances under which the appellate jurisdiction to review the judgment of a State court will be exercised are cited in the foot-note.³⁹

IV. SUPERVISORY JURISDICTION.

By subsection b of this section the several circuit courts of appeals are given jurisdiction to superintend and revise in matter of law the proceedings of the several inferior courts of bankruptcy within their jurisdiction. Such power may be exercised on due notice and petition by any party aggrieved. When a petition to revise has been duly filed no further relief is necessary to protect the rights of the petitioner.⁴⁰ The power to revise and superintend should not be exercised to control the discretion of a court of bankruptcy in the matter of the appointment or removal of referees.⁴¹ This method of review of proceedings in courts of bankruptcy should not be separated from the exercise of appellate jurisdiction by Circuit Courts of Appeals under § 25. In so far as the subsection confers jurisdiction it is properly included in this section. But it also indicates the classes of questions which may be revised by petition and somewhat of the practice on revision. This question of jurisdiction should be considered and discussed in connection with the appellate jurisdiction conferred under § 25.⁴²

SECTION TWENTY-FIVE.

APPEALS AND WRITS OF ERROR.

§ 25. Appeals and Writs of Error.—a That appeals, as in equity cases, may be taken in bankruptcy proceedings from the courts of bankruptcy to the circuit court of appeals of the United States, and to the supreme court of the Territories, in the following cases, to wit, (1) from a judgment adjudging or refusing to adjudge the defendant a bankrupt; (2) from a judgment granting or denying a discharge; and (3) from a judgment allowing or rejecting a debt or claim of five hundred dollars or over. Such appeal shall be taken within ten days after the judgment appealed from has been rendered, and may be heard and determined by the appellate court in term or vacation, as the case may be.

b From any final decision of a court of appeals, allowing or rejecting a claim under this act, an appeal may be had under such rules and within such time as may be prescribed by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the following cases and no other:

1. Where the amount in controversy exceeds the sum of two thousand dollars, and the question involved is one which might have been taken on appeal or writ of error from the highest court of a State to the Supreme Court of the United States; or

2. Where some justice of the Supreme Court of the United States shall certify that in his opinion the determination of the question or questions involved in the allowance or rejection of such claim is essential to a uniform construction of this act throughout the United States.

c Trustees shall not be required to give bond when they take appeals or sue out writs of error.

d Controversies may be certified to the Supreme Court of the United States from other courts of the United States, and the former court may exercise jurisdiction thereof and issue writs of certiorari pursuant to the provisions of the United States laws now in force or such as may be hereafter enacted.

I. APPEALS AND WRITS OF ERROR GENERALLY.

a. Scope and meaning of section.—The object of § 24-a is, as has already been indicated, to confer jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court and circuit courts of appeals as to controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings. The distinction to be made between controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings and the words “in bankruptcy proceedings” as used in § 25-a are commented upon under that section. It was there stated that if an appeal be brought in a suit independent of the proceedings proper or which arise in respect to a right asserted by an adverse claimant it must be under § 24-a rather than under § 25-a. In other respects, however, § 25 both limits and explains the general appellate jurisdiction conferred upon the Supreme Court and the circuit courts of appeals by § 24-a. The jurisdiction to superintend and revise in matter of law the proceedings of bankruptcy courts is conferred by § 24-b; but it is so closely allied with the exercise of jurisdiction under this section that they are more properly treated in the same connection. In practically every case where any question has arisen relative to the review of any matter pertaining to bankruptcy by an appellate court, the court discusses or applies these two sections conjunctively. In any consideration of the subject the sections are necessarily treated in the same connection.

b. Methods of appeal in bankruptcy.—The practitioner in State courts, especially in the code states, usually finds the Federal system of appeals complex and difficult to understand. That he may have, as it were, a few landmarks to guide him, the following analysis of methods of appeal in bankruptcy, other than reviews of referees' decisions by the judge, may be found useful. It does not include reviews by the Supreme Court of bankruptcy decisions in the highest courts of the States.¹ The cases cited in the footnotes are referred to only for the purpose of calling attention to the cases in which the method specified has been employed under the present law. They are illustrative merely and are not referred to for the purpose of substantiating the statements made in the text.

(1) IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES:

- (a) By appeal or writ of error, from a district court not within any organized circuit, or the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, by a party aggrieved by either of the judgments mentioned in § 25-a, but not otherwise.²
- (b) By a writ of certiorari, to a circuit court of appeals, if permitted by general law.³ Under Act of Congress, January 28, 1915. (38 Stat. at L. 804, chap. 22) judgments and decrees of circuit court of appeals in all proceedings under the bankruptcy act are final, save only that the Supreme Court may require that the proceeding be certified to it for review and determination.
- (c) By certificate, from either a circuit court of appeals or a district court direct, if permitted by general law.⁴

(2) IN A CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS:

- (a) By appeal or writ of error, from a district court in its circuit sitting in bankruptcy; if within the limitations of § 25-a, but not otherwise.
- (b) By a petition to revise in matters of law any order of a district court in its circuit sitting in bankruptcy.

(8) IN THE SUPREME COURT OF A TERRITORY:

- (a) By appeal or writ of error, from a district court of the territory sitting in bankruptcy; if within the limitations of § 25-a, but not otherwise.⁵

II. PETITIONS TO REVISE IN MATTER OF LAW.

a. In general.—Under § 24-b the several circuit courts of appeals have jurisdiction in equity, either interlocutory or final, to superintend and revise in matter of law the proceedings of the several inferior courts of bankruptcy within their jurisdiction. The revisory power here conferred, it will be noticed, extends (1) to matters of law and (2) to proceedings in bankruptcy. This power of revision as so conferred is contrasted with the appellate jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals to be exercised under § 25-a in the three classes of cases therein specified. This appellate jurisdiction is also to be exercised “in bankruptcy proceedings.”

b. Comparative legislation.—The act of 1841 imperfectly granted this revisory power. It depended for its exercise on the order or certificate of the lower court.⁶ Under the act of 1867 it was often availed of and, because summary in its nature and simple in its application, was the usual method of reviewing questions of law.

c. Distinction between petitions to revise and appeals.—Petitions to revise in matter of law divides with appeals in equity cases the great majority of reviews heard by the circuit court of appeals. The petition differs from such appeals in two important particulars. (1) Petitions to revise bring up questions of law only; appeals both of law and of facts.⁷ (2) The former calls up any order or judgment or judicial action in bankruptcy proceedings; the latter three classes of final judgments only.⁸ The provisions as to revision in matter of law and appeals were framed and must be construed in view of the distinction between steps in bankruptcy proceedings proper and controversies arising out of the settlement of the estates of bankrupts.⁹ In other words, if the

7. Elliott v. Toepfner, 187 U. S. 327, 9 Am. B. R. 50, 47 L. Ed. 200, in which case the court cited §§ 24-b and 25-a so far as they applied to the appellate jurisdiction of circuit courts of appeals and stated that the jurisdiction conferred by the former section was confined to questions of law and did not contemplate a review of the facts. The court said: “The distinction between a writ of error which brings up matters of law only, and an appeal, which, unless expressly restricted brings up both law and fact, has always been observed by this court and been recognized by the legislation of Congress from the foundation of the government.” In re Blanchard Shingle Co. (C. 8. In the case of Duryea Power Co. v. Sternbergh, 218 U. S. 290, 25 Am. B. R. 66, 64 L. Ed. 1047, the court said: “It is argued that an appeal to the circuit court of appeals may be treated as a petition for revision (Holden v. Stratton, 191 U. S. 115, 10 Am. B. R. 786, 48 L. Ed. 115), and that conversely, a petition for revision may be turned into an appeal, or at least treated as one for the purpose of an appeal to this court, if only to establish that the circuit court of appeals exhausted its jurisdiction. There are two answers to this contention. In the first place the converse proposition does not hold. An appeal opens both fact and law and therefore might be regarded as intended to raise questions of law in any way that might be deemed proper. But a petition for revision opens only questions of law and when the foundation of its jurisdiction is thus narrowed, the action of the court cannot enlarge it so as to deal with the facts.”

question arise in an independent suit to determine a claim necessary for the settlement of the estate, or if it arise in one of the cases specified in § 25-a, review may be had by appeal; if the question pertains to and arises in the bankruptcy proceedings and does not fall within either of the cases specified in § 25-a, review may be had by a petition to revise in matter of law.¹⁰ Confusion may be avoided by bearing in mind that under § 24-a a controversy arising between a trustee and a third party in respect to property either in possession of the trustee or a third party the review in the circuit court of appeals is had on appeal in the same manner as in other cases. In the case of such controversies the revisory power is not available. On the review of judgments in independent suits to recover assets or to determine controversies arising relative to the bankrupt's estate the remedy is by appeal.¹¹ This doctrine does not seem refutable. Whatever conflict there may be among the authorities on this subject pertains to the question as to whether or not appeal as in equity cases taken in bankruptcy proceedings to the circuit court of appeals in the cases specified in § 25-a are exclusive of the right to review under § 24-b. These distinctions are now well settled by the court.¹²

d. Petition and appeal; exclusive or cumulative.—(1) CONFLICT OF AUTHORITY.—It has been held that the power to review by appeal conferred by § 25-a and that to supervise granted by § 24-b are cumulative; that the two grants of power are not inconsistent and that in a proper case either may be invoked.¹³

R. 390, 230 Fed. 362, in which the court held that the review of an order fixing the compensation of a referee, being in a "proceeding in bankruptcy" may only be had on a petition to revise under § 24b.

R. 266, 93 Fed. 767 (in Supreme Court, Bryan v. Bernheimer, 181 U. S. 188, 5 Am. B. R. 623, 45 L. Ed. 814).

13. Right to review by appeal or on petition not exclusive.—In the case of In re Lee (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 436, 182 Fed. 579, the court said: "Undoubtedly there is a controversy here arising in a bankruptcy proceeding, which is reviewable by appeal under section 24-a, but there is no prohibition in the bankruptcy law of the revision in matter of law of such a controversy under section 24-b, and if no controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings may be reviewed under the latter section, then nothing may be reviewed under it because where there is no controversy, there is nothing to review or to decide. The fact is that the grant of jurisdiction to the circuit court of appeals, to review by appeal the final decision of a controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings of which that court would have had appellate jurisdiction if it had arisen in any other case in a federal court under section 24-a, and the grant of jurisdiction to revise and superintend in matter of law the proceedings of the inferior courts of bankruptcy under section 24-b are not exclusive of each other, but cumulative or concurrent grants, the former of jurisdiction to review questions of law and of fact, the latter of jurisdiction to review questions of law alone."

Dodge v. Norlin (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 13 Am. B. R. 176, 133 Fed. 363, in which the court said: "Nor is there anything in the grant by § 24-b of the power to revise and superintend in matter of law the proceedings of the inferior courts of bankruptcy which in any way affects or limits the general appellate jurisdiction vested by the sections of the law which have been considered. The act of 1898 does not grant the appellate and the revisory jurisdiction in the alternative. It does not give to disappointed litigants the right of appeal or the right to revision in matters of law. It grants the right of appeal and the right of superintendence and revision in matters of law only. It gives both rights freely and without limitation. The two grants are not inconsistent, and on familiar principles both must stand, and in a proper case either may be invoked." The following cases are also to the effect that

There are a number of other cases in which it has been held that where an appeal might be brought under § 25 a review of petition under § 24-b was not available.¹⁴ In many of these cases a distinction is made between "proceedings in bankruptcy" under § 24-b and "controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings" which are appealable under the general appellate jurisdiction of the court as conferred by § 24-a. Under the principles of these cases if the controversy is one arising in bankruptcy proceedings, review by appeal is exclusive.¹⁵ In view of this conflict of authority it is difficult to declare a rule which will be a safe guide in every case. As has been stated, this contrariety of decision has resulted in such confusion and uncertainty in the practice that the right to a review by an appeal or upon a petition to revise may be sought at the option of the appellant. In re Holmes (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 15 Am. B. R. 689, 142 Fed. 392; In re McKenzie (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 15 Am. B. R. 679, 142 Fed. 383; Taft Co. v. Century Savings Bank (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 15 Am. B. R. 594, 141 Fed. 369; In re Plymouth Cordage Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 13 Am. B. R. 665, 135 Fed. 1000; Ross v. Stroh (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 644, 165 Fed. 628.

An order of dismissal of a petition in bankruptcy, on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute an act of bankruptcy is reviewable by petition to revise under § 24-b, although it is a "judgment refusing to adjudge the defendant a bankrupt" and appealable under § 25-a. Stevens v. Nave-McCord Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 17 Am. B. R. 609, 150 Fed. 71.

14. Remedies exclusive.—Union Nat'l Bank v. Neill (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 17 Am. B. R. 853, 149 Fed. 720; O'Dell v. Boyden (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 17 Am. B. R. 751, 150 Fed. 731, where the distinction seems to have been made between "a proceeding in bankruptcy" under § 24-b and "a controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings" under § 24-a; Mason v. Wolkowich (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 17 Am. B. R. 709, 150 Fed. 699, in which also the distinction is made between an order appealable as a controversy in bankruptcy and one reviewable by petition as in the proceeding itself; In re McMahon (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 17 Am. B. R. 530, 147 Fed. 685; Davidson & Co. v. Friedman (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 15 Am. B. R. 489, 140 Fed. 853, in which the court held that the remedies of appeal and petition for review are exclusive of each other and the court will not treat the one as the other to the confusion of pleading; In re Mueller (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 256, 135 Fed. 711, holding that the supervisory jurisdiction conferred by § 24-b does not include orders or decrees which are appealable and that the provisions for appeal and for petition to revise are mutually exclusive. In re Kuffler (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 11 Am. B. R. 469, 127 Fed. 125, holding that the provisions of § 24-b refer to cases not provided for by appeal so that if § 25-a applies, a petition to revise will not lie. First Nat'l Bank of Miles City v. State Nat'l Bank (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 12 Am. B. R. 440, 131 Fed. 430, to the effect that § 25-a having provided a means to review by appeal three kinds of judgment, every other means is excluded. In re Good (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 3 Am. B. R. 605, 99 Fed. 389, holding that a judgment adjudicating a person bankrupt could not be reviewed by petition. In re Jungman (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 401, 186 Fed. 302, holding that a decision requiring a third party to carry out the terms of a contract for the purchase of certain property of the bankrupt's estate, is reviewable by appeal.

In the case of Barnes v. Pampel (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 27 Am. B. R. 192, 192 Fed. 525, the court said: "The distinction between 'proceedings' in bankruptcy reviewable under section 24-b and the 'controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings' appealable under section 24-a is clearly defined, the former including 'administrative orders and decrees in the ordinary course of bankruptcy between the filing of the petition and the final settlement of the estate,'—the latter including 'those independent or plenary suits which concern the bankrupt's estate and arise by intervention or otherwise between the trustees representing the bankrupt's estate and claimants representing some right or interest adverse to the bankrupt or his general creditors.' The remedies afforded by the two sub-sections referred to are mutually exclusive." Citing Hewitt v. Berlin Machine Works, 194 U. S. 296, 11 Am. B. R. 709, 48 L. Ed. 986; Coder v. Arts, 213 U. lawyers have thought it necessary in many cases to take an appeal and file a petition for revision in the same case in order to be sure to obtain a review of the ruling challenged.¹⁶

(2) PREVAILING RULE.—The consensus of opinion seems clearly in favor of the principle that if the suit or proceeding is a controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings it is appealable under § 25-a and not reviewable under § 24-b; the latter refers only to matters in the bankruptcy proceedings itself, that is, any judicial determination, which may be made by a bankruptcy court from the time of the filing of the petition until the estate is closed, pertaining exclusively to the bankruptcy. This distinction is clearly established.¹⁷ As between the power to revise under § 24-b and the exercise of appellate jurisdiction under § 25-a, both of which relate to the review of bankruptcy proceedings, the better rule is that in either of the three cases mentioned in § 25-a the review can only be by appeal;¹⁸ but in respect to any other matters in bankruptcy proceedings the view must be by a petition to revise.¹⁹ The Supreme Court

Provisions for appeal and revision mutually exclusive.—In the case of Morehouse v. Pacific Hardware Co. (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 178, 177 Fed. 337, the court said: "Section 24 of the bankruptcy act of 1898 establishes the appellate jurisdiction of circuit courts of appeals over 'controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings' and their jurisdiction in equity, 'either interlocutory or final to revise in matter of law proceedings of the inferior courts of bankruptcy.' Section 25-a provides for appeals from judgments in three certain enumerated steps in bankruptcy proceedings; 'in respect to which special provision therefor was required.' (Holden v. Stratton, 191 U. S. 115, 10 Am. B. R. 786, 48 L. Ed. 115.) There is in the language of the act nothing to indicate that the revisory power so given to the circuit court of appeals is more extensive than that which was exercised by the circuit courts under the bankruptcy act of 1867. In Lathrop v. Drake, 91 U. S. 516, 23 L. Ed. 414, it was held that the appellate jurisdiction conferred on the circuit courts by the act of 1867 was of two classes of cases, one to be exercised under a petition for review, the other by the ordinary appeal or writ of error. The same distinction has been recognized in construing the bankruptcy act of 1898, and it has been held that the provisions for appeal and for review on petition are mutually exclusive, and that the revisory jurisdiction does not include any orders or decrees which are appealable or reviewable on writ of error." In this case the court cited First has sustained this view by declaring that persons who are entitled to an appeal under § 25-a are not entitled to a petition to review under § 24-b.²⁰

(3) UNITING REMEDIES.—Where it is sought to combine the two remedies by uniting an appeal with a petition to review the two do not neutralize each other, but the court will proceed to adjudicate on the controversy in the proper proceedings.²¹ If the case is one which should be heard and decided as an appeal, the petition to revise should be dismissed.²²

(4) APPEAL TREATED AS PETITION TO REVISE.—So, also, it has been held that in proper cases an appeal may be treated as a petition to revise,²³ as where

20. Remedy by appeal not inclusive of review by petition.—In the case of Matter of Loving, 224 U. S. 183, 27 Am. B. R. 852, 855, 56 L. Ed. 725, Mr. Justice Day says: "The question now propounded is: Was the trustee also entitled to a review in the Circuit Court of Appeals, under section 24b, by petition for review? Under that section authority, either interlocutory or final, is given to the Circuit Court of Appeals to superintend and revise in matters of law the proceedings of the inferior courts of bankruptcy within their jurisdiction. We think this subdivision was not intended to give an additional remedy to those whose rights could be protected by an appeal under section 25 of the act. That section provides a short method by which rejected claims can be promptly reviewed by appeal in the Circuit Court of Appeals, and, in certain cases, in this court. The proceeding under section 24b, permitting a review of questions of law arising in bankruptcy proceedings, was not intended as a substitute for the right of appeal under section 25. Under section 24b a question of law only is taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals; under the appeal section, controversies of fact as well are taken to that court, with findings of fact to be made therein if the case is appealable to this court. We do not think it was intended to give to persons who could avail themselves of the remedy by appeal under section 25 a review by petition under section 24b. The object of section 24b is rather to give a review as to matters of law, where facts are not in controversy, of orders of courts of bankruptcy in the ordinary administration of the bankrupt's estate. In our judgment the rule was well stated in In re Mueller (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 256, 135 Fed. 711, 68 C. C. A. 349, by Mr. Justice Lurton, then circuit judge: "The 'proceedings' reviewable [under § 24b] are those administrative orders and decrees in the ordinary course of a bankruptcy between the filing of the petition and the final settlement of the estate, which are not made specially appealable under [§] 25a. This would include questions between the bankrupt and his creditors of an administrative character, and exclude such matters as are appealable under [§] 24a." This principle is further substantiated in the case of Tefft, Weller & Co. v. Munsuri, 222 U. S. 114, 27 Am. B. R. 338, 56 L. Ed. 118; Kirsner v. Taliaferro (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 29 Am. B. R. 832, 202 Fed. 51; Matter of Pindel (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 600, 221 Fed. 342.

21. Fisher v. Cushman (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 4 Am. B. R. 646, 103 Fed. 860; In re Worcester County (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 4 Am. B. R. 496, 102 Fed. 808; Lockman v. Lang (C. C. R. 748, 183 Fed. 219, holding that where a review is sought both by a petition to revise under section 24-b and by appeal under section 25-a, and the errors complained of in the petition to revise and the assignment of error on the appeal are identical and present only questions of law, the court will not stop to consider which of the two methods of procedure is the correct one, or whether the two methods may be prosecuted together; Knapp v. Milwaukee Trust Co. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 671, 162 Fed. 675; Matter of Creech Bros. Lumber Co. (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 487, 240 Fed. 8.

Uniting appeal and petition.—In the case of Fisher v. Cushman (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 4 Am. B. R. 646, 103 Fed. 860, an appeal and a petition to revise were brought in the same proceeding, and the court said: "Both relate to the same subject matter. The appeal will not lie because the subject thereof is not within the three specifications of the matters of appeal found in section 25 of the bankrupt act. Nevertheless as was determined by us in the case of In re Worcester County, 4 Am. B. R. 496, 102 Fed. 808, the fact that an appeal was taken and a petition also filed, does not defeat the right of the party moving this court to have the merits of the controversy adjudicated by us. They do not neutralize each other and the only result is that the appeal must be dismissed, while the court must proceed to the adjudication of the merits in the matter of the petition, which petition on the record before us involves only a matter of law, as required by section 24-b of the bankrupt act."

an appeal is taken from an order disallowing a claim which presents only a question of law.²⁴ This can only be done where questions of law alone are involved.²⁵ Where questions of fact and law are both involved in the appeal it may not be treated as a petition to revise.²⁶ And it has been held that a writ of error which aims to correct only errors of law arising on the common law or criminal law side of the court may be treated as a petition to revise.²⁷

(5) OBJECTION TO EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION.—In the absence of objection, the circuit court of appeals will not decline jurisdiction of a proceeding before it on petition to revise, although the matter should have come up on appeal.²⁸ If the question as to the propriety of the remedy is not raised by the respondent the court is not bound to consider it.²⁹

The two proceedings were by this court consolidated and were heard and submitted on one record. If it be conceded that the petition for revision was filed in the wrong court, the appeal, involving as it does only a question of law, may be treated as a petition for revision." *Chesapeake Shoe Co. v. Consideration of evidence.—Where upon review of a judgment determining priority of liens upon the land of a bankrupt, the court is asked to consider the evidence in the record, it will dismiss the petition for review and hear the case upon the appeal. Hendricks v. Webster (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 112, 159 Fed. 927; Coder v. McPherson (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 523, 152 Fed. 951, in which the trustee challenged the decree of the court below by an appeal and by a petition to revise, and the court held that as the questions at issue involved the consideration of the facts disclosed by the evidence, the case should be to revise was dismissed; In re Dunlop (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 19 Am. B. R. 361, 156 Fed. 545.

27. Writ of error treated as petition to revise.—In the case of Freed v. Central Trust Co. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 33 Am. B. R. 64, 215 Fed. 873, a writ of error issued for the review of an order adjudging a person in contempt for failing to turn over assets to the bankrupt's trustee; it was held that the order was not reviewable by writ of error or by appeal, but was reviewable by petition. The court said: "If then, an appeal which, as applied to bankruptcy proceedings, aims to correct errors both of law and of fact arising on the equity side of the bankruptcy court (Bankruptcy Act, § 25a), may be treated as a petition to revise which aims to correct only errors of law so arising (section 24b), a writ of error which aims to correct only errors of law arising on the common law or criminal law side of the court may, in our judgment, be similarly dealt with. While the writ and the petition differ in form, in substance they are similar; both begin new proceedings in this court to accomplish substantially the same end. Especially in contempt cases incident to bankruptcy proceedings should a liberal practice in this respect be adopted, in view of the uncertainty that so long prevailed in distinguishing between cases of civil contempt, properly reviewable in bankruptcy proceedings by petition to revise, and criminal contempt, reviewable only by writ of error. Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co., 221 U. S. 418, 55 L. Ed. 797, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 874. The motion to dismiss the writ will be denied, and the case will be dealt with as if the petition to revise had been filed when the writ of error issued."

e. Questions of law only considered.—The supervisory power to review only extends to questions of law. If the petition does not present a matter of law it will not be entertained.³⁰ If questions of fact are alone raised by the petition, the petition should be denied.³¹ As indicated above, an appeal which involves only a question of law may be treated as a petition for revision.³² It was intended by conferring this power of revision to provide a summary method for revising orders and decisions of courts of bankruptcy upon questions of law, and the section does not contemplate any review of facts,³³ except as may be necessary to ascertain whether the order is wholly unsupported by the evidence, is contrary to law, a clear mistake, or generally for any reason for which evidence may be reviewed on writ of error.³⁴ The decision of the court below, on disputed or conflicting facts, as for instance where a determination is made upon testimony presented as to the valuation of property that the sale of such property would be beneficial to the bankrupt estate, is not review-

But the review of decisions which require the consideration of conflicting evidence or evidence though not conflicting from which different deductions or conclusions may reasonably be drawn, may not be reviewed upon a petition to revise but upon appeal only."

Matter of Hayes (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 601, 179 Fed. 222, in which the court was asked to reverse findings of fact made by a referee, and affirmed by the district court, as to the right of an assignee for the benefit of creditors to an allowance for compensation and disbursements and the court said: "But in a proceeding to revise under section 24-b, this court is limited to a review in matters of law, and only questions of law arising out of the facts found or conceded can be considered. We cannot determine questions of fact involved in the finding or order sought to be reviewed." See also In re Taft (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 13 Am. B. R. 417, 113 Fed. 511, 66 C. C. Where an order refusing to set aside an adjudication upon the ground that the bankrupts did not have their principal place of business within the jurisdiction, is supported by an abundance of evidence consisting not only of direct testimony, but of inferences properly to be drawn from all the evidence, said order involving a controverted question of fact cannot be reviewed by a petition to revise. able on a petition.³⁵ There is no exception to the rule that on petitions for revision, only legal questions may be determined.³⁶ Where the facts are not in dispute a petition for revision should be entertained, as the question remaining must be one of law.³⁷ If the facts are admitted or agreed upon, so that nothing is left for determination but their legal import, such a determination may be reviewed upon petition to revise.³⁸

f. What may be reviewed by petition.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Any final or interlocutory order in bankruptcy proceedings, in matter of law, may be reviewed by petition.³⁹ This method is that usually adopted when a party claims to be aggrieved because of an injunction⁴⁰ or summary order,⁴¹ or where an appeal will not lie under the terms of § 25-a. It will not be possible nor useful to cite all the precedents on this question; they are already so numerous and cover so wide a field as to make the formulation of any number of safe rules impossible. The consensus of opinion is to the effect that the power of the appellate court to review by original petition the rulings of the bankruptcy court extends only to orders made in the bankruptcy proceedings proper and does not embrace proceedings in suits by the trustee in bankruptcy.⁴³

(2) OBJECT AND CHARACTER OF PROCEEDINGS.—In determining the question of remedy the appellate court is to be governed by the object and character of the proceeding.⁴⁴ It becomes essential therefore to determine in each individual case whether the order or decree sought to be reviewed is in the bankruptcy proceedings and not independent thereof, or is a controversy arising in such proceedings and entirely independent thereof. This distinction and its effect upon the power to review by petition has been frequently recognized,⁴⁵ and its bearing upon the nature of the remedy for a review of such order or decree has given rise to the numerous cases in which it has been discussed or commented upon.⁴⁶

(3) ORDERS OR DECREES IN BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDING.—(I) In general.—Bearing in mind the provisions of § 24-b which in effect confers jurisdiction upon circuit courts of appeal "to superintend and revise in matter of law the proceedings" of courts of bankruptcy, it becomes apparent that the exercise of the jurisdiction to revise on petition will depend on whether or not the order or decree was granted by the bankruptcy court in the bankruptcy proceeding. Under such subsection the jurisdiction may be either interlocutory or final; but the appellate court is not required to revise every interlocutory order in a bankruptcy proceeding regardless of its nature or scope; a certain degree of definiteness or finality may be insisted upon.⁴⁷ There must be a certain degree of finality to the orders sought to be reviewed; if every order were reviewable as of right, the proceedings could easily be so tied up and prolonged that the situation would become intolerable.⁴⁸ And if the order or decree is not prejudicial to the rights of the petitioners, it need not be revised, although erroneous.⁴⁹ Where the merits of any adverse claim are summarily adjudicated, the

Consideration of evidence.—Where upon review of a judgment determining priority of liens upon the land of a bankrupt, the court is asked to consider the evidence in the record, it will dismiss the petition for review and hear the case upon the appeal. Hendricks v. Webster (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 112, 159 Fed. 927; Coder v. McPherson (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 523, 152 Fed. 951, in which the trustee challenged the decree of the court below by an appeal and by a petition to revise, and the court held that as the questions at issue involved the consideration of the facts disclosed by the evidence, the case should be to revise was dismissed; In re Dunlop (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 19 Am. B. R. 361, 156 Fed. 545.

27. Writ of error treated as petition to revise.—In the case of Freed v. Central Trust Co. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 33 Am. B. R. 64, 215 Fed. 873, a writ of error issued for the review of an order adjudging a person in contempt for failing to turn over assets to the bankrupt's trustee; it was held that the order was not reviewable by writ of error or by appeal, but was reviewable by petition. The court said: "If then, an appeal which, as applied to bankruptcy proceedings, aims to correct errors both of law and of fact arising on the equity side of the bankruptcy court (Bankruptcy Act, § 25a), may be treated as a petition to revise which aims to correct only errors of law so arising (section 24b), a writ of error which aims to correct only errors of law arising on the common law or criminal law side of the court may, in our judgment, be similarly dealt with. While the writ and the petition differ in form, in substance they are similar; both begin new proceedings in this court to accomplish substantially the same end. Especially in contempt cases incident to bankruptcy proceedings should a liberal practice in this respect be adopted, in view of the uncertainty that so long prevailed in distinguishing between cases of civil contempt, properly reviewable in bankruptcy proceedings by petition to revise, and criminal contempt, reviewable only by writ of error. Gompers v. Buck's Store & Range Co., 221 U. S. 418, 55 L. Ed. 797, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 874. The motion to dismiss the writ will be denied, and the case will be dealt with as if the petition to revise had been filed when the writ of error issued."

e. Questions of law only considered.—The supervisory power to review only extends to questions of law. If the petition does not present a matter of law it will not be entertained.³⁰ If questions of fact are alone raised by the petition, the petition should be denied.³¹ As indicated above, an appeal which involves only a question of law may be treated as a petition for revision.³² It was intended by conferring this power of revision to provide a summary method for revising orders and decisions of courts of bankruptcy upon questions of law, and the section does not contemplate any review of facts,³³ except as may be necessary to ascertain whether the order is wholly unsupported by the evidence, is contrary to law, a clear mistake, or generally for any reason for which evidence may be reviewed on writ of error.³⁴ The decision of the court below, on disputed or conflicting facts, as for instance where a determination is made upon testimony presented as to the valuation of property that the sale of such property would be beneficial to the bankrupt estate, is not review-

Questions of law.—In the case of In re Frank (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 496, 183 Fed. 794, the court said: "A petition to revise under section 24-b can properly present for determination only questions of law, and not doubtful or disputed questions of fact. But when facts are agreed upon or are proven or admitted that leave nothing for determination but their legal import, such a determination of them by the court of bankruptcy may be reviewed upon a petition to revise. But the review of decisions which require the consideration of conflicting evidence or evidence though not conflicting from which different deductions or conclusions may reasonably be drawn, may not be reviewed upon a petition to revise but upon appeal only."

Matter of Hayes (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 601, 179 Fed. 222, in which the court was asked to reverse findings of fact made by a referee, and affirmed by the district court, as to the right of an assignee for the benefit of creditors to an allowance for compensation and disbursements and the court said: "But in a proceeding to revise under section 24-b, this court is limited to a review in matters of law, and only questions of law arising out of the facts found or conceded can be considered. We cannot determine questions of fact involved in the finding or order sought to be reviewed." See also In re Taft (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 13 Am. B. R. 417, 113 Fed. 511, 60 C. C. Where an order refusing to set aside an adjudication upon the ground that the bankrupts did not have their principal place of business within the jurisdiction, is supported by an abundance of evidence consisting not only of direct testimony, but of inferences properly to be drawn from all the evidence, said order involving a controverted question of fact cannot be reviewed by a petition to revise. able on a petition.³⁵ There is no exception to the rule that on petitions for revision, only legal questions may be determined.³⁶ Where the facts are not in dispute a petition for revision should be entertained, as the question remaining must be one of law.³⁷ If the facts are admitted or agreed upon, so that nothing is left for determination but their legal import, such a determination may be reviewed upon petition to revise.³⁸

f. What may be reviewed by petition.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Any final or interlocutory order in bankruptcy proceedings, in matter of law, may be reviewed by petition.³⁹ This method is that usually adopted when a party claims to be aggrieved because of an injunction⁴⁰ or summary order,⁴¹ or where an appeal will not lie under the terms of § 25-a. It will not be possible nor useful to cite all the precedents on this question; they are already so numerous and cover so wide a field as to make the formulation of any number of safe rules impossible. The consensus of opinion is to the effect that the power of the appellate court to review by original petition the rulings of the bankruptcy court extends only to orders made in the bankruptcy proceedings proper and does not embrace proceedings in suits by the trustee in bankruptcy.⁴³

(2) OBJECT AND CHARACTER OF PROCEEDINGS.—In determining the question of remedy the appellate court is to be governed by the object and character of the proceeding.⁴³ It becomes essential therefore to determine in each individual case whether the order or decree sought to be reviewed is in the bankruptcy proceedings and not independent thereof, or is a controversy arising in such proceedings and entirely independent thereof. This distinction and its effect upon the power to review by petition has been frequently recognized,⁴⁴ and its bearing upon the nature of the remedy for a review of such order or decree has given rise to the numerous cases in which it has been discussed or commented upon.⁴⁵

(3) ORDERS OR DECREES IN BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDING.—(I) In general.—Bearing in mind the provisions of § 24-b which in effect confers jurisdiction upon circuit courts of appeal "to superintend and revise in matter of law the proceedings" of courts of bankruptcy, it becomes apparent that the exercise of the jurisdiction to revise on petition will depend on whether or not the order or decree was granted by the bankruptcy court in the bankruptcy proceeding. Under such subsection the jurisdiction may be either interlocutory or final; but the appellate court is not required to revise every interlocutory order in a bankruptcy proceeding regardless of its nature or scope; a certain degree of definiteness or finality may be insisted upon.⁴⁶ There must be a certain degree of finality to the orders sought to be reviewed; if every order were reviewable as of right, the proceedings could easily be so tied up and prolonged that the situation would become intolerable.⁴⁷ And if the order or decree is not prejudicial to the rights of the petitioners, it need not be revised, although erroneous.⁴⁸ Where the merits of any adverse claim are summarily adjudicated, the order may be reviewed on petition.⁵⁰ A petition to review will not usually be allowed where the granting of the order was discretionary,⁵⁰ or where the rights of the petitioning party were not affected by the order complained of.⁵¹ An action upon a trustee's bond is not a proceeding in bankruptcy, but an ordinary action at law, and the action of the District Court in sustaining a demurrer to plaintiff's petition is not reviewable by petition to revise.⁵²

(II) Claims as to funds in possession of court.—Orders determining the rights of claimants to a fund in the possession of a bankruptcy court are being administered by it in the course of bankruptcy proceedings and are reviewable by petition.⁵³ If the proceedings pertain to the ownership of property in the possession of the trustee, claimed by a person not a party to the bankruptcy, and is summarily disposed of by the court or referee, it is reviewable on petition to revise.⁵⁴ The decision of a district court exercising ancillary jurisdiction in bankruptcy that it has no jurisdiction to determine whether the proceeds of goods it seizes and sells as the property of the bankrupt are the property of the bankrupt estate or the property of adverse claimants, is reviewable on petition.⁵⁵

Decision as to validity of trust deed.—In the case of Morgan v. First Nat. Bank (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 16 Am. B. R. 639, 145 Fed. 466, it was sought to review a decision of the bankruptcy court as to the valid-and a decision involving a widow's right of dower in the estate of the bankrupt.⁵³ A decision involving the validity of the claim of a creditor to a lien upon the property of the bankrupt, or its proceeds,⁵⁴ under administration in possession of the court, is reviewable in matter of law upon a petition to revise.⁶⁰ Where the question is as to the validity of a chattel mortgage under which the mortgagee claims priority, there being no contest as to the facts, it is one of law and is properly reviewable on petition to revise.⁶¹

(IV) Administrative orders.—An order refusing to vacate an adjudication in bankruptcy is reviewable only on petition, as an administrative order.⁶² And so also is any interlocutory order pertaining to the rights of parties in the proceedings, relating to the several pleadings or granting or denying applications made in the due course of the proceedings;⁶³ and likewise an order granting or refusing to grant leave to a party to intervene for the purpose of contesting the grounds upon which an adjudication in an involuntary bankruptcy proceeding is sought.⁶⁴ An order directing the bankrupt to turn over to his trustee certain property and committing him to prison until he does so, is an order made in a proceeding in bankruptcy and is only reviewable by petition,⁶⁵ and the same is true of an order denying a motion to re-open an estate.^{66a} Proceedings on a motion by a bankrupt after discharge to re-open an estate on the theory that his interest in lands had not been properly scheduled constitute a mere step in the course of administration, and are reviewable by petition to revise.^{66b}

(V) Sale and distribution of property.—Orders or proceedings for the sale and disposition of the bankrupt's effects are regular steps or proceedings in

ity of a trust deed, executed by the bankrupt upon its property within the four months' period. The court said: "The deed is not disputed, and the point sought to be reviewed is one of law, arising upon a determination of the validity of a trust deed executed by the bankrupt company, within four months of the institution of bankruptcy proceedings, and hence belongs clearly to the class of cases made subject to review by this court, under its general power to 'superintend and revise in matter of law the proceedings of the several inferior courts of bankruptcy.'" 59. Dispute as to right to participate in proceeds of security.—The phrase "controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings" should be limited to cases where third parties claim not in and under the administration of a bankrupt's estate, but on the contrary, assert some right hostile to the title of the trustee or going to the right of the court to administer the particular estate in the bankruptcy case. Hence, where there is a dispute between the holders of claims already proven in the bankruptcy proceedings proper, as to their respective rights to participate in the proceeds of an admittedly valid security, which are in the possession of the bankruptcy court for administration, so that the apportionment thereof is strictly and properly a part of the bankruptcy proceedings, the case comes within the category of "proceedings in bankruptcy" and is not a "controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings," and is reviewable by petition to revise. *Snow v. bankruptcy and are reviewable only on petition.⁶⁶ Such are orders summarily disposing of assets of the bankrupt.⁶⁷ But an order by a district judge reversing an order of a referee that confirmed a sale of the bankrupt's property, thus leaving the property still in the hands of the trustee, is not reviewable.⁶⁸ An order denying the right of partnership creditors to participate in the assets of an individual partner until his individual creditors had been first paid is reviewable upon a petition.⁶⁹

(VI) Exemption claims.—An order confirming an order of a referee granting or denying a claim to certain exemptions asserted by the bankrupt may be reviewed upon a petition to revise,⁷⁰ and such an order not being "a final decision, allowing or rejecting a claim," within the intent and meaning of subsection a, is not reviewable on appeal.⁷¹ If a determination by the court in respect to the bankrupt's claim of an exemption under a State statute is made in the course of the bankruptcy proceedings it is reviewable on petition.⁷²

(VII) Claims of creditors generally.—Ordinarily an order allowing a claim is not reviewable on petition. But where the petition in bankruptcy was because of the claim, and the proceedings are actually dependent upon the validity of such claim, the court may, in reviewing an order confirming the sale of a homestead, review the order allowing the claim.⁷³ An order setting aside the allowance of a secured claim, and requiring the creditor to surrender to the trustee a preferential payment is reviewable on petition.⁷⁴

(VIII) Allowance of fees and expenses.—An order confirming a referee's disallowance of a creditor's claim for attorney's fees and expenses incurred in contesting claims and in proceedings to recover assets is reviewable on petition.⁷⁵ An order making an allowance for counsel fees and other expenses incurred by the trustee in the realization of the assets of the estate, is within the supervisory jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals.⁷⁶ Likewise an order denying compensation and expenses of counsel for the bankrupt and for creditors opposing an offer of composition is reviewable by petition.^{76a}

66. Schuler v. Hassinger (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 184, 177 Fed. 119. An order of the District Court affirming an order of a referee in bankruptcy, holding that a bidder at an auction sale of the assets obtained no legal rights thereby, constitutes an ordinary step in the bankruptcy proceeding, and no appeal lies therefrom. Unteriner v. Camors (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 36 Am. B. R. 122, 228 Fed. 800.

Sale free from dower.—An order for the sale of the bankrupt's real estate freed and discharged of his wife's inchoate right of dower, is reviewable only by petition. Kelly v. Minor (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 41 Am. B. R. 275, 252 Fed. 115.

Order disposing of assets of bankrupt.—In the case of Schweer v. Brown, 195 U. S. 171, 12 Am. B. R. 673, 49 L. Ed. 144, it was held that the district court has jurisdiction to determine whether an adverse claim to money alleged to be part of the assets of a bankrupt's estate was asserted at the time the petition in bankruptcy was filed, and if the court errs in retaining jurisdiction on the merits, the remedy is by petition to the Circuit Court of Appeals, under § 24-b.

Order allowing sale free from liens.—An order of the District Court reversing an order of the referee allowing the petition of a trustee in bankruptcy to sell property subject to various liens and free and clear of other liens, constitutes a "controversy in a bankruptcy proceeding" and should be reviewed by appeal and not by petition to revise. Sauve v. The More Investment Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 41 Am. B. R. 281, 248 Fed. 642.

R. 701, 142 Fed. 445, holding that an order adjudging that certain policies of insurance upon the life of a member of a bankrupt firm passed to the trustee and directing that they be turned over as assets of the estate, is a mere step in the bankruptcy proceeding and reviewable only on petition to revise.

(IX) Proceeding regarding discharge or composition.—It has been held that an order denying a motion to dismiss a bankrupt's application for a discharge, where the facts were undisputed, was reviewable on petition,⁷⁷ and the same has been held in regard to an order denying a motion to set aside a discharge,^{77a} and an order setting aside a discharge.^{77b} An order refusing to allow specifications of objections to the discharge of the bankrupt to be filed or amended may be revised,⁷⁸ but where an amendment is permitted, the order is not of sufficient finality to admit of revision.⁷⁹ An order dismissing a petition for confirmation of a composition, predicated wholly upon the proposition of law that the proposed offer was not a composition, is reviewable by petition.^{79a}

g. Practice.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The General Orders and Forms are silent as to the practice on petitions to review in matter of law.⁸⁰ The petition should be presented by a party having a substantial interest in the controversy,⁸¹ and usually entitled in, addressed to and filed with the clerk of, the proper circuit court of appeals.⁸²

(2) WHAT TO RECITE; RECORD.—It should recite the proceedings below, state specifically the question of law involved and the ruling of the district court thereon, and be accompanied by a certified copy of so much of the record as will show the issue of law and how it arose.⁸³ If it does not, the court may dismiss, with leave to supplement, or may suspend consideration until the record is completed.⁸⁴ If the record does not contain the evidence

Where objections to a trustee's account, seeking to charge him with assets coming into his possession, but not accounted for, raises questions which the bankrupt may summarily determine, its decision thereon is reviewable only upon a petition for review. In re Moore & Bridgman (C. If the petition is filed in the first instance in the district court, it is heard by the judge ex parte, and is followed by an order allowing or declining allowance. If allowed, the clerk prepares, at the expense of the petitioner, a transcript of the record and certifies the same to the proper Circuit Court of Appeals. Thereafter the practice in that court is the same as that outlined in the text and the rules in the First and Fourth Circuits above referred to.

Specific questions of law to be stated.—In the case of In re Taft (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 417, 133 Fed. 511, it was held that a petition for review should present the specific decisions of law made by the lower court, by which the petitioner deems himself aggrieved, and set forth the facts upon which such order was made. While neither the bankruptcy act nor the general orders prescribe the practice to be adopted in proceedings on revisory petitions, the matters of law of which revision is sought should in some manner be clearly presented. Ross v. Stroh (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 644, 165 Fed. 628.

84. In the case of Steiner v. Marshall (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 15 Am. B. R. 496, 140 Fed. 710, a petition to review was dismissed because of a failure to set out the finding of facts on which the matters of law sought taken before the referee, it will be presumed that the facts were sufficient to sustain his findings, and only matters of law, apparent upon the face of the record, will be considered.⁸⁵ The petition should be accompanied by a certified copy of so much of the record as will exhibit the manner in which the question arose and its determination.⁸⁶ It has been held that if the record shows that issues of fact and law were raised, but fails to state the testimony or settlement of facts upon which the order was predicated, the petition presents no question of law for review.⁸⁷ If the questions to be reviewed are not plainly and concisely set forth the court may, in its discretion, dismiss the petition.⁸⁸ The opinion of the district judge on review of an order of the referee, not specially made a matter of record, does not take the place of a finding of facts, although it may be referred to for the purpose of ascertaining the principle of law governing the court in making its decision, or for the general purpose of determining whether the case was decided on the facts or the law.⁸⁹

(3) TIME OF FILING PETITION.—The statute or the general orders do not limit the time within which a petition for review should be filed.⁹⁰ So to be reviewed arose. Devries v. Shanahan (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 10 Am. B. R. 518, 122 Fed. 629; In re Pettingill & Co. (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 757, 137 Fed. 840, in which case the petition was dismissed because the facts were not set forth.

Only those questions of law that are fairly presented by the petition and record will be considered. Ross v. Stroh (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 644, 165 Fed. 628.

Findings of fact by special master.—Upon petition to review in matter of law, under section 24-b of the Bankruptcy Act, an order of the bankruptcy court confirming the report of a referee sitting as special master in a proceeding to establish the ownership of a specific fund, the master's findings of fact so approved by the district judge are not brought up for review. Matter of Caponigri (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 509, 183 Fed. 307.

^{86.} In re Richards (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 3 Am. B. R. 145, 96 Fed. 935.

Record.—A petition for review must present enough of the record in the district court to enable the Circuit Court of Appeals to perceive the issue of law which is sought to be raised. In re Baker (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 4 Am. B. R. 778, 104 Fed. 287. The record should present clearly and unequivocally the issues of law presented, and in order that it may appear that such issues were presented to the court below, findings of fact which involve distinct propositions of law or something else as a substitute therefor are necessary. In re O'Connell (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 237, 137 Fed. 838. But see In re Witherbee (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 30 Am. B. R. 314, 202 Fed. 896, where the petition to revise did not allege that the error complained of was in "matter of law," or assign any specific errors of law, but the court held that where it alleges that no proof was taken in the District Court and no opinion filed, and this is admitted by the trustee's answer, the District Court will be regarded as having denied the petition because as matter of law what is set forth did not entitle petitioner to the relief he sought.

Petition to be accompanied by transcript or findings.—The Circuit Court of Appeals upon a petition for review, unaccompanied either by a transcript of the record and proceedings had below or findings of fact, will not consider and pass upon the regularity and validity of proceedings under which lands belonging to the bankrupt were sold free from liens and the proceeds arising therefrom distributed. In re Throckmorton (C. long as the delay is not unreasonable the petition may be entertained.⁹¹ The ten-day limitation made by § 25-a on the taking of an appeal does not apply. But the necessity has been asserted of limiting the time within which such petitions may be filed to the end that a speedy determination of the bankruptcy may be brought about.⁹² In recognition of this principle it has been held that a petition to review should be filed within six months after the order or decree appealed from was granted, in analogy to the practice in circuit courts of appeals in ordinary actions.⁹³ The time within which the

93. Time within which petition must be filed.—In the case of In re Holmes (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 15 Am. B. R. 689, 693, 142 Fed. 391, the court said: "One of the main purposes of the law was to provide a speedy method whereby a bankrupt might be finally discharged from liability to his creditors and his property might be equitably distributed among them. This object would be entirely defeated if the orders and judgments in bankruptcy were forever open, or were open for an uncertain or unknown time to revision and reversal upon petitions under § 24-b, because in that case they would never become or be known to be either final or conclusive. An uncertainty relative to the time within which such petitions may be maintained necessarily leaves the conclusiveness of the orders of the bankruptcy courts in doubt and thus tends to defeat one of the main purposes of the law. There ought, therefore, to be a well known and certain limit to the time within which such judgments and orders may be challenged in matter of law by petition as well as by appeal. A proceeding in bankruptcy is a proceeding in equity. The acts of Congress prescribed no time within which bills of review must be presented in ordinary cases in chancery and yet the rule is well settled that such bills, to correct errors apparent upon the face of the record, may not be successfully maintained unless they are filed within the times limited for the review by appeal of the decrees they question. . . . This rule is just and salutary. It is an established rule in equity. A petition for revision, like all proceedings in bankruptcy, is a proceeding in equity, and it ought to be and is governed by this rule. A petition to revise or superintend in matter of law under § 24-b, an appealable order or judgment, may not be maintained after the time for the appeal has expired." See also In re Tomlinson Co. Graham* (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 313, 135 Fed. 717.

Appeal from order of distribution.—Where an action was brought by bankrupt's trustee to set aside the conveyance, and a judgment was recovered directing the trustee to hold the proceeds of a sale of the land subject to the order of the bankruptcy court, an order of the bankruptcy court, subsequently made, decreeing that such creditors were entitled to share in the fund, was an order made in a controversy arising in a bankruptcy proceeding, reviewable by an appeal taken within the six months' period prescribed by section 11 of the Circuit Court of Appeals Act, and not a judgment allowing claims, from which an appeal under section 25a of the Bankruptcy Act must be taken within ten days. Petition filed within reasonable time.—In the case of Blanchard v. Ammons (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 590, 592, 183 Fed. 556, the court said: "There is no time fixed in the Bankruptcy Act within which a petition for revision shall be presented, but it is the acknowledged rule that it must be presented within a reasonable time. An appeal from the adjudication of bankruptcy is required to be taken within 10 days, and by analogy it would seem that a petition for petition must be filed is controlled by rule in some circuits; as for instance by Rule 38 of the Rules of the Second Circuit, it is required that the petition be filed within ten days after the entry of the order. Where such a rule exists the petition must be dismissed unless filed within the prescribed time.⁹⁴

(4) OTHER MATTERS RELATING TO PRACTICE.—If not regulated by the rules of the appellate court, the analogies of the statute and general orders suggest that the petition be signed and verified by the party aggrieved, and not by his attorney. On filing, "due notice" to the opposite party is required,⁹⁵ and the case is proceeded with in accordance with the rules and practice of the court;⁹⁶ the respondent answering, and argument being had with or without briefs. The decision of the circuit court of appeals on such a review is not in turn appealable,⁹⁷ but can be transferred to the Supreme Court on certiorari.⁹⁸ Such a petition for revision does not remove the case or that portion of it on review to the highest court, and if, while there pending, the respondent below dismisses it, he should pay the costs of the review.⁹⁹ Nor should it be dismissed for lack of parties, where the missing parties were represented below by the trustee who is a party in the appellate court.¹⁰⁰ Whether a petition can be filed asking revision of the order of the district court of a territory is yet a question.¹⁰¹ If the district court is not within the territorial jurisdiction of any circuit court of appeals it seems that it cannot, though superintendence may perhaps be had in revision of the adjudication of bankruptcy ought to be taken within a similar time, unless there are circumstances excusing delay. But the courts have generally held that a petition for revision must be presented within six months. There are no circumstances which excuse the delay in this case. All the rights of the petitioners were determined on December 19, 1905. If the petitioners were aware that their petition as stockholders had not been specifically mentioned in the order of the court then made, it was their duty to bring the matter to the attention of the court. They waited more than three years before suggesting that on the record one of the petitions remained undetermined. In the meantime the property of the bankrupt was sold, and distributed among creditors. The petitioners' position as stockholders to attack the adjudication of bankruptcy upon the facts alleged in their petition was no stronger than their position as creditors upon the facts alleged in their creditors' petition. The order which they seek here to revise must be deemed to have been made at the time when both petitions were heard and determined, December 19, 1905. The Bankruptcy Law contemplates that the bankrupt's estate shall be administered with all convenient dispatch, so that the property may be distributed among the creditors, and the bankrupt discharged from his debts, and to that end parties litigant shall be alert and active to protect their rights, and to proceed with promptness in asserting the same."

III. APPEALS AS IN EQUITY CASES.

a. In general.—Subsection a of this section specifies the appeals that may be taken, as in equity cases in bankruptcy proceedings from the courts of bankruptcy to the circuit court of appeals. It will be noticed here that the appeals referred to are those “in bankruptcy proceedings” as distinguished from “controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings.” If a claimant appears in bankruptcy court, recognizes the title and possession of the property by the trustee, asserts his lien upon such property and insists that the validity of such lien be recognized and the assets of the bankrupt estate be administered accordingly he institutes “a proceeding in bankruptcy,” as distinguished from a “controversy arising in the course of bankruptcy proceedings,” and, if in other respects within the statute, an appeal will lie from a decision therein.¹⁰⁴ The general jurisdiction over appeals in controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings is discussed under § 24.¹⁰⁵ This subsection supplements and explains such general jurisdiction. As to the three classes of judgments mentioned therein it seems now to be well settled that the jurisdiction here conferred is exclusive.¹⁰⁶

b. As in equity cases.—Congress by conferring appellate jurisdiction upon circuit courts of appeals as in equity cases only intended to provide thereunder for appeals from judgments when trial by jury is not demanded and the court of bankruptcy proceeds on its own findings of fact. In such a case the facts and the law are reviewable on appeal, but if the judgment is entered on the verdict of a jury it is conclusive as to facts and the judgment is reviewable for error of law.¹⁰⁷

c. From what judgments.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection a of this section contemplates that an appeal may be taken under this subsection only from (1) a judgment granting or refusing an adjudication, (2) granting or denying a discharge or (3) allowing or rejecting a claim of five hundred dollars or over. The subsection thus clearly states the cases in which appeals may be taken in bankruptcy proceedings from courts of bankruptcy to the circuit court of appeals.¹⁰⁸ The right to an appeal conferred by this subsection may not be taken away by the court; as given by the statute it can neither be enlarged nor restricted by the district court or the circuit court of appeals.¹⁰⁹

(2) ORDER OR DECISION MUST BE FINAL.—Circuit courts of appeals exercise appellate jurisdiction to review by appeal or writ of error final decisions in the district courts.¹¹⁰ A decision which finally determines the rights of parties to secure in that suit the relief they seek is a final decision, although it does not bar another action or proceeding in the same cause.¹¹¹ If the order or judgment appealed from is interlocutory it is not appealable under this subsection.¹¹²

(3) JUDGMENT GRANTING OR REFUSING AN ADJUDICATION.—(I) In general.—It will not usually be difficult to determine whether a judgment is one granting or refusing an adjudication. An appeal from such a judgment is permissible even though the question of jurisdiction was raised.¹¹³ But an order adjudging a person to be a member of a partnership which has been adjudicated a bankrupt is not appealable.¹¹⁴ An order of dismissal of a petition in bankruptcy on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute an act of bankruptcy is in effect a judgment refusing an adjudication and is appealable.¹¹⁵ An order sustaining a demurrer to a petition filed for the purpose of vacating an adjudication is not a judgment from which an appeal will lie under this section.¹¹⁶

(II) Effect of jury trial.—When an alleged bankrupt demands a jury trial on an issue of fact as to the evidence of one of the grounds for adjudging him a bankrupt, the trial proceeds according to the course of the common law and a judgment rendered therein is revisable only on writ of error.¹¹⁷

The Judicial Code, § 130, states: "The circuit courts of appeals shall have the appellate and supervisory jurisdiction conferred upon them by the act entitled 'An Act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' approved July 1st, 1898, and all laws amendatory thereof, and shall exercise the same in the manner and under the regulations therein prescribed."

117. Effect of jury trial.—In the case of Elliott v. Toeppner, 187 U. S. 327, 9 Am. B. R. 50, 47 L. Ed. 200, the court said: "The distinction between a writ of error which brings up matter of law only, and an appeal which, unless expressly restricted, brings up both fact and law, has always been

Where the right to trial by jury exists and has been invoked, neither the appellate court nor the court below can review the facts, but can only control in matters of law which a writ of error is peculiarly fitted to raise in the appellate court.¹¹⁸

(4) GRANTING OR DENYING DISCHARGE.—An order dismissing an application for a discharge for want of prosecution, is in substance and effect a judgment denying the discharge, and can only be reviewed on appeal.¹¹⁹ A judgment confirming a composition is a judgment granting a discharge, since, under § 14-c a discharge results from the confirmation of a composition, and is therefore reviewable by appeal and not by a petition to revise.¹²⁰

observed by this court and been recognized by Congress from the foundation of the government. So far from any restriction being imposed by section 25-a, the language used is 'appeals as in equity cases,' and on appeal in equity cases the whole case is open. But Congress did not thereby attempt to empower the appellate court to re-examine the facts determined by a jury under § 19 otherwise than according to the rules of the common law. The provision applies to judgments 'adjudging or refusing to adjudge' the defendant a bankrupt when trial by jury is not demanded, and the court of bankruptcy proceeds on its own findings of fact. In such cases the facts and the law are re-examinable on appeal, while the verdict of a jury on which judgment is entered, concludes the issues of fact, and the judgment is reviewable only for error of law."

In the case of Grant Shoe Co. v. Laird Co., 203 U. S. 502, 17 Am. B. R. 1, 51 L. Ed. 292, the court said: "Section 25-a of the bankruptcy act which authorizes appeals as in equity cases to be taken to the circuit court of appeals among other cases, from a judgment adjudging or refusing to adjudge the defendant a bankrupt, was expressly considered in Elliott v. Tseppner, 187 U. S. 227, 9 Am. B. R. 60, 47 L. Ed. 200, and it was held that the provision only applied to judgments adjudging or refusing to adjudge the defendant a bankrupt, 'when a trial by jury had not been demanded and where the court of bankruptcy proceeded on its own findings of fact.' The reasoning upon which the decision was based was in substance that as in the character of proceeding under consideration the right of a trial by jury was absolute, such a trial was a trial according to the course of the common law, and judgments therein rendered are revisable only on writ of error. As in the case at bar a jury was demanded, the trial was before such jury, and their verdict determined the questions at issue; it follows that a record should have been brought to this court by writ of error and not by appeal."

Withdrawal of demand for jury trial.—An appeal lies from an order denying an adjudication, notwithstanding a jury trial was demanded and later withdrawn. Marine Nat. Bank v. Swigart (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 45 Am. B. R. 122, 262 Fed. 254.

118. Writs of error and appeals.—In the case of Duncan v. Landis (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 649, 106 Fed. 339, the court said: "The practice of the courts, but especially the act of Congress establishing the court of appeals already referred to (see Judicial Code, § 123), had designated 'writs of error' and 'appeals,' as those terms are used and understood in our jurisprudence, as the appropriate methods for invoking the appellate jurisdiction. The form, scope and peculiar functions of these two several methods for exercising appellate jurisdiction are well understood, and their peculiar and separate functions clearly established by the decisions and practice of the courts. This practice has so shaped itself that the rulings of a trial court in a jury trial can only be reviewed in the appellate court by a writ of error, while an appeal is peculiarly fitted to equity proceedings where it brings up for review to the appellate court both the law and the facts."

120. Judgment confirming composition.—A judgment confirming a composition is by virtue of § 14-c of the bankruptcy act, a judgment granting a discharge and is only reviewable by appeal to the circuit court of appeals under § 25-a (2), and a petition to revise in matter of law the rulings which culminated in such confirmation will be dismissed for want of jurisdiction. In re Friends (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 13 Am. B. R. 505, 124 Fed. 778; Matter of Bay State Milling Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.) 35 Am. B. R. 112, 223 Fed. 778; Matter of Brookstone Mfg. Co. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 4 Am. B. R. 736, 104 Fed. 802, the single question presented for determination was whether an appeal lies to the circuit court of appeals under § 25-a (2) from an order of the district court refusing confirmation of a composition tendered by the bankrupt and accepted by the requisite number of creditors. The court said: "The act provides an appeal from a judgment which

But a refusal to confirm a composition does not always have the effect of denying a discharge and is not on this account appealable.¹²¹ The question as to whether an order dismissing a petition to review a discharge is appealable under this subsection has not been determined; it would seem, however, that such an order is in effect an order granting a discharge and is therefore appealable.¹²² An order overruling or dismissing objections to a bankrupt's discharge, is not an order granting or refusing a discharge and is in no sense final; an appeal therefrom will not lie to the circuit court of appeals.¹²³ On an appeal from an order granting a discharge the question of abuse of discretion in denying a motion to set aside the discharge is not involved.¹²⁴

(5) ALLOWING OR REJECTING CLAIM.—(1) In general.—The judgment or order appealed from may be one allowing or rejecting a claim. In determining whether it be of such a character, its purpose and effect must be given due consideration. The word "claim" has been held limited to a money demand.¹²⁴ An appeal may be taken under this subsection from an order allowing or disallowing a claim as from a judgment,¹²⁵ or from an order grants or denies a discharge. The meaning of the word discharge is defined by section 1 to be 'the release of a bankrupt from all of his debts which are provable in bankruptcy except such as are excepted by this act.' By section 14 it is declared that a confirmation of the composition shall discharge, i. e., release the bankrupt from his debts except those from which by the other method he was not discharged. But when 'discharge' is the equivalent of the other for the purposes of the act, and both are covered by the same section of the act (§ 14), it relates solely to that subject. Moreover, it is to be observed, that in both methods the procedure is under the control of the judge. In the case of a composition the non-consenting creditors are given the opportunity to contest the confirmation which is to operate as a discharge. It is against that consequence that the contest is directed. It is made because the non-consenting creditors are not satisfied that their claims shall be discharged by the payment of the amount tendered. Questions as important, perhaps, as any that may occur in bankruptcy proceedings may arise upon the hearing. If the composition is confirmed, the contesting creditors are cut off from any further consideration of the facts unless they can appeal; and so of the bankrupt, whichever way the decision goes, it is the end of that endeavor of the debtor and creditors to close the matter. . . It seems to us that the giving effect of a discharge to the order confirming a composition makes it the equivalent of an order in terms discharging the bankrupt; and that the right to appeal is given where either party considers himself aggrieved by granting or refusing, as the case may be, as well where the right accrues by reason of a composition as where the assets of the debtor are taken in hand by the trustee for distribution." In the case of Ross v. Saunders (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 350, 105 Fed. 915, the court distinguishes the case last cited on the ground that in that case there was objecting creditors, issue made and proper parties to the appeal, and holds that where upon an application to confirm a composition no creditors appear in opposition an order refusing to confirm was not appealable. From the reasoning applied in the two cases it must be conceded that they are diametrically opposed to each other.

An order, approving a plan for the reorganization of a bankrupt corporation, which plan is, in effect, a scheme of composition, is reviewable by appeal. Matter of O'Gara Coal Co. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.) 44 Am. B. R. 206, 200 Fed. 742.

R. 322, 200 Fed. 949, holding that an order refusing to confirm a composition on the sole ground that it is not for the best interests of creditors is not a bar to a subsequent discharge and, therefore, is not a final order denying a discharge, from which an appeal will lie. Matter of Graham & Sons (C. reconsidering the allowance of a claim and disallowing a portion thereof, which resulted in the restoration and allowance of the claim as originally allowed.¹²⁶ An order directing a sale of the bankrupt's alleged homestead to satisfy the claim of a creditor thereon is within subdivision 3, and appealable.¹²⁷

An order summarily directing a third person to turn over to the trustee money or property in his possession is not appealable,¹²⁸ nor is a judgment which neither allows nor disallows any sum but only denies priority.^{129a} When a judgment or decree settles two or more distinct controversies, the acceptance of a sum of money, to which appellant is declared to be entitled by one portion of the judgment or decree, does not estop him from appealing from another and independent adjudication therein.¹²⁹

(II) Amount involved.—The amount involved is that which will be put in controversy by the appeal, and not the amount of the original claim.¹³⁰ Where the claim upon which the judgment is based amounts to five hundred dollars or over an appeal will lie.¹³¹

130. Amount in controversy.—In the case of Gray v. Grand Forks Mercantile Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 780, 136 Fed. 344, it was held that the provisions of § 25-a, restricting appeals to the Circuit Court of Appeals from a judgment of the bankruptcy court, "allowing or rejecting a debt or claim of $500.00 or over," has reference not to the amount of the original claim, but to the amount which will be put in controversy by the appeal. The court said: "The purpose of Congress in restricting the right of appeal was evidently to avoid inconvenience, delay and expense to claimants and bankrupt estates which would be disproportionate to the amount in controversy. When read with due regard to this purpose, the restrictions plainly has reference not to the amount of the original claim but to the amount of the allowance or rejection; that is to the amount which will be put in controversy by the appeal."

Presentation of demand and lien.—The presentation for allowance of a demand against a bankrupt's estate is a step in bankruptcy proceedings as to which appeal is specially provided by section 25. If both a demand and a lien to secure it be presented at the same time the procedure for the former dominates, the lien is an incident, and the double presentation is also regarded as a step in the bankruptcy proceeding. Century Savings Bank v. Robert Moody & Son (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 31 Am. B. R. 566, 209 Fed. 775.

lish the validity of a lien against property in the hands of the trustee by a proceeding in a court of bankruptcy, and such property exceeds $500 in value, an appeal will lie from the decision of the court.¹²³ Whether the assertion of a lien in bankruptcy proceedings is in connection with a claim for a debt which it is alleged it secures, or a lien only upon the property, an appeal lies from a decision of a court of bankruptcy establishing the priority of liens.¹²⁴ But it must appear that the property came into the possession of the court through the direct operation of the adjudication in bankruptcy.¹²⁵ If the question of the lien or priority be involved in the appeal independent of the claim it should not be entertained.¹²⁶ Where a party seeks to intervene to establish an alleged equitable mortgage interest in the bankrupt's real property acquired through transactions with a third person, which interest is not connected in any way with the claim against the bankrupt estate, the order of the court dismissing the petition for intervention is not appealable under this Order allowing claim and incidentally establishing lien of another.—The fact that a decree of a referee disallowing a claim incidentally established a lien and affected the interests of another claimant does not destroy the essential character of the proceeding, and an order reviewing the decree is reviewable by appeal under section 24a of the Bankruptcy Act. Sterne v. Merchants' Nat. Bank (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 33 Am. B. R. 205, 216 Fed. 802.

Existence of alleged preferences.—An order which distinctly involves both the rejection and allowance of claims and also a controversy of fact, touching bankrupt's financial condition at the time claimant received alleged preferential payments, and the existence or not of reasonable cause on his part to believe that such payments would, if enforced, effect a preference, is reviewable by appeal. Cooper v. Miller (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 30 Am. B. R. 194, 203 Fed. 383.

Decree denying claim to preference based upon levy.—The remedy of a claimant whose claim to a preference, based upon a levy upon the property of the bankrupt within four months before bankruptcy, has been denied, is by appeal and a petition to superintend and revise should be dismissed. Home Bank for Savings v. Lohm (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 624, 223 Fed. 633.

133. Coder v. Arts, 213 U. S. 223, 22 Am. B. R. 1, 53 L. Ed. 772.

Value of property.—A decision of the district court as to the rights of a landlord and mortgage to priority in the proceeds of the sale of property amounting to $675, is not an allowance or rejection of a claim over $500, so as to authorize an appeal under this section, although the landlord claimed $800 and the mortgagee claimed over $2,000. Bank of Hattiesburg v. Carter (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 36 Am. B. R. 749, 230 Fed. 127.

Appeal from order establishing priority of liens.—Where it is sought by appeal to review a judgment declaring appellants' mortgage liens to be inferior to mechanics' liens of the appellees, it is the amount of the appellants' liens respectively that determines their right to appeal, and not the amount of the several liens of the appellees. New Hamp. Savings Bank v. Wichita Lumber Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 33 Am. B. R. 1, 216 Fed. 721.

Claim secured by specific liens of less than $500 each.—A judgment approving a claim of more than $500, secured by separate and specific liens, none of which amount to $500, is appealable. Stuart v. Britton Lumber Co. (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 719, 227 Fed. 49.

134. New Hampshire Savings Bank v. Wichita Lumber Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 33 Am. B. R. 1, 216 Fed. 721.

135. Property in possession of court.—Where the effect of action taken by claimants in the District Court, as an ancillary tribunal, is to assert priorities, or liens against a fund in the possession of the court, which was not derived through the direct operation of the adjudication in bankruptcy, the action is not to secure a judgment allowing a debt or claim within the meaning of section 25-a(3). Emerson v. Castor (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 37 Am. B. R. 719, 236 Fed. 29.

Claim of lien a priority.—In the case of Hutchinson v. Otis, 190 U. S. 552, 10 Am. B. R. 135, 47 L. Ed. 1179, it appeared that a petition was filed asserting a lien on the proceeds of a seat in the New York Stock Exchange which formerly belonged to the bankrupt. This lien had not been insisted clause.¹³⁷ But the Supreme Court has held that an intervention for the purpose of asserting a claim to property in the possession of the trustee is an intervention in equity, and a decree is reviewable by appeal, as where a claimant submits his claim to accounts in the possession of the trustee which he alleges were assigned to him.¹³⁸ An appeal will also lie from a judgment fixing the amount due on a secured claim.¹³⁹ And a judgment denying the right to file a claim as secured and make substituted proof thereof, after it had been allowed as unsecured in an amount exceeding $500, is only reviewable by an appeal.¹⁴⁰ A judgment of the bankruptcy court that a chattel mortgage is not a valid lien and does not entitle a creditor to preference of payment out of the proceeds of the estate, is appealable,¹⁴¹ and so, also, is any decision of a bankruptcy court in a proceeding by a trustee to have certain adverse claims against, and liens upon the bankrupt estate declared void, and for a sale of the property free and clear of such liens.¹⁴² Likewise a decree of the District Court, rejecting a claim for rent, and allowing a lien covering a portion thereof, is appealable.¹⁴³

(IV) Claims for fees and expenses.—A claim for attorney's fees and expenses incurred by the trustee in the administration of the estate,¹⁴⁴ or by

on by the petitioners because of their impression that they had been effectually paid; no one having changed his position on the faith of their waiver, the District Court allowed the lien; the Circuit Court of Appeals held that this portion of the decree of the District Court was not subject to an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals. The court said: "The argument chiefly relied upon by the appellant is that this is an intervening petition to reach a fund in court and is not a proceeding in bankruptcy. Under the circumstances of this case it seems to us that the petition was incident to the claim, and was a bankruptcy proceeding under section 2, clause 7, within the meaning of section 25, regulating appeals in bankruptcy proceedings, and that the decree upon it was not 'a judgment allowing or rejecting a debt or claim of $500.00 or over,' within § 25-a (3), and was not a ground of appeal." creditors in contesting claims of others, to the benefit of the estate, is not appealable;¹⁴⁵ although it may be otherwise where the claim was for services rendered to the bankrupt either before or after adjudication.¹⁴⁶ So, also, the rejection of charges against a receiver for expenses incurred under his orders or contracts looking to the care or preservation of the bankrupt estate, is within the discretion of the bankruptcy court, and is not appealable.¹⁴⁷

d. Time of taking appeal.—(1) IN APPEALS IN BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS.—An appeal under this subsection in a bankruptcy proceeding, as distinguished from an appeal in a controversy arising in bankruptcy proceedings as provided in § 24-a, can be taken only from a district court sitting in bankruptcy to the circuit court of appeals of its circuit. Such an appeal must be taken, as expressly provided in subsection a, within ten days after the judgment was rendered.¹⁴⁸ But, if the time has expired, the district court may in a meritorious case grant a reargument, so that the ten days may run from the second order.¹⁴⁹ But a rehearing for the purpose of allowing an appeal should not be granted unless clearly warranted by the facts,¹⁵⁰ nor unless the motion for a rehearing is made within the required time.¹⁵¹ It has been held that it should not be granted if the sole purpose is to extend the time of taking an appeal.¹⁵² The time may not be extended by the subsequent entry of an alias adjudication;¹⁵³ nor by any other subsequent proceeding in the case.¹⁵⁴ The time begins from the actual entry of the judgment by delivering the same to the clerk,¹⁵⁵ or in the case of the denial of a motion for a rehearing from the time of the entry of the order upon the records of the court.¹⁵⁶ It is the time of the presentation of the application or petition which controls, and the appeal may not be dismissed because the order allowing it was made more than ten days subsequent to making and filing the decree.¹⁵⁷

(2) IN APPEALS IN CONTROVERSIES ARISING IN BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS.—Appeals in "controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings" under § 24-a must be taken as in other cases in equity under the circuit court of appeals act.¹⁵⁸ The ten-day limitation prescribed in § 25-a does not therefore affect appeals in independent suits to recover assets.¹⁵⁹ The ten-day limit, although applicable when a reversal of an order disallowing a general claim is sought, does not apply to an appeal from a denial of a lien on the property of the bankrupt, for the assertion of a lien may be regarded as presenting a controversy over the title to or rights in specific property, and the appeal is entitled to be considered as taken under § 24-a.¹⁶⁰

c. Parties to appeal.—An appeal must be taken by a party aggrieved.¹⁶¹ All the parties interested in the proceeding should be made parties to the appeal and should be given notice of its pendency and hearing.¹⁶² On an appeal from an order of adjudication the bankrupt should be made a party, but where it appears that, after a motion to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the bankrupt was not a party, the bankrupt voluntarily entered his appearance waiving notice of appeal and other proceedings the appeal should not be dismissed.¹⁶³ Where an appeal is taken from a decree denying an adjudication and dismissing the petition, all creditors who joined in the petition, including those who have intervened under § 59-f, must unite in the appeal, unless an order of reverence has been made as to them, otherwise the appellate court has no jurisdiction.¹⁶⁴ On an appeal from an order confirming a composition, neither consenting creditors nor a representative part of them are necessary parties.^{164a} Where separate judgments are rendered at the same time an appeal from one of them may be brought without making the persons interested in the other judgments parties to the appeal.¹⁶⁵ Where the creditors as a body are aggrieved, the trustee only should appeal.¹⁶⁶ But this right is not, strictly speaking, limited to him. It seems that a creditor may appeal,¹⁶⁷ and, if the trustee refuses to do so, the district court has the power, on a proper application, either to order him to take the appeal, or to direct that a creditor be permitted to do so.¹⁶⁸

f. Practice.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The practice on appeals under subsection a conforms in all respects to other appeals in equity to a circuit court of appeals.¹⁶⁹ General Order XXXVI should be consulted; also the rules of each circuit.¹⁷⁰ The appeal is instituted by a petition, accompanied by an assignment of errors, presented to and allowed “by a judge of the court appealed from or the court appealed to.” Section 997 of the Revised Statutes makes an assignment of errors, a prayer for reversal, and a citation to the adverse party essential parts of the record upon which the rulings of a trial court may be invoked in the appellate courts of the United States.

(2) ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.—The filing of an assignment of errors is indispensable to the perfection of the appeal.¹⁷¹ If the assignment of errors is Right of creditor in opposition to be heard.—An objecting creditor who has filed objections against discharge and not withdrawn them is entitled to be heard by the Circuit Court of Appeals on their merits; his rights cannot be prejudiced by the vote of a majority of the other creditors expressing satisfaction with a proposed compromise of conflicting claims. Matter of Doyle (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 28, 220 Fed. 434.

Where a trustee, though requested, refuses to appeal from an order which affirmed an order of a referee allowing a contested claim, the court in its discretion may allow a dissatisfied creditor to appeal, though the better practice would be to order the trustee to appeal or to allow the dissatisfied creditor to appeal in his name, being indemnified in either case against costs by such creditor. Ohio Valley Bank Co. v. Mack et al. (U. C. A., 6th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 40, 163 Fed. 155; Matter of National Pressed Brick Co. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 32 Am. B. R. 224, 212 Fed. 878.

169. Gen. Order XXXVI (1) provides that “Appeals from a court of bankruptcy to a circuit court of appeals shall be allowed by a judge of the court appealed from or of the court appealed to, and shall be regulated, except as otherwise provided by the act, by the rules governing appeals in equity in the courts of the United States.” See also In re Baker (C. It is the practice in the eighth circuit not to anticipate a further appeal but to await requests for findings and conclusions under General Order XXXVI, and if the decree has then been entered, to vacate it so that the order may be observed. Century Savings Bank v. Robert Moody & Son (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 31 Am. B. R. 586, 209 Fed. 775.

170. No forms are suggested in “Supplementary Forms,” post, for the reason that the customary forms on appeals and writs of error under the Federal practice are available and should be used. For forms to be used on appeals to the Circuit Court of Appeals see Hagar & Alexander's Bankruptcy Forms (2d ed.) Nos. 358-376.

171. Filing of assignment of errors.—In the case of Lockman v. Lang (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 11 Am. B. R. 597, 128 Fed. 279, the court said: “Section 997 of the Revised Statutes makes the assignment of errors, a prayer for reversal and the citation to the adverse party essential parts of the record upon which a review of the rulings of a trial court may be invoked in the appellate courts of the United States. When an appeal is prayed for and allowed in open court the prayer for reversal and the citation may be waived, but the assignment of errors is indispensable to the perfection of the appeal. Rule 11 of this court provides that ‘The plaintiff in error or appellant shall file with the clerk of the court below with his petition for a writ of error or appeal, an assignment of errors which shall set out separately and particularly each error asserted and intended to be urged. No writ of error or appeal shall be allowed until such assignment of errors shall have been filed.’ The reasons for this rule and the importance of compliance with it have been stated in numer-

so defective as not to indicate the error complained of, the court may not take cognizance of them,¹⁷² but it is competent for the court to notice a plain error in the absence of any assignment.^{172a} A single assignment which is party good and partly bad may not be sustained.¹⁷³ An amendment will be allowed when the special circumstances justify it, and the application is promptly made on discovery of the mistake.¹⁷⁴

(3) BOND.—If the appellant is not the trustee,¹⁷⁵ an appeal bond is properly executed either then or on the perfection of the appeal in the appellate court, and must be approved by the judge and filed.¹⁷⁶ It has been held that since the practice on appeals in bankruptcy proceedings under § 25-a are controlled by the rules in equity proceedings, the giving of a bond is not a jurisdictional requisite.¹⁷⁷ A bond on appeal from an order of involuntary adjudication is sufficient although it does not run to all the petitioning creditors.¹⁷⁸ Where an appeal is allowed within the prescribed time, it will not be dismissed because of a delay of a few days in filing the bond.¹⁷⁹ Permission may be given to a bankrupt to appeal in forma pauperis when necessary to safeguard his rights.^{179a}

(4) CITATION.—When the appeal is allowed, a citation is issued to and served on the opposite party,¹⁸⁰ although this is not a jurisdictional

ous opinions of this court. In Frame v. Portland Gold Min. Co., 47 C. C. A. 664, 108 Fed. 750, this court dismissed a writ of error because the assignment of errors was not filed until two days after the issue of the writ. In Webber v. Mihills, 124 Fed. 64, we dismissed an appeal because the assignment of errors was not filed until seven days after the appeal was allowed. . . . The assignment of errors in this case was not filed until the seventh day after the appeal was allowed, and under Rule 11 and the uniform decisions of this court the appeal must be dismissed."

Failure to file assignment of error under Rule 11.—Under Rule 11 of the Circuit Court of Appeals a failure to file assignment of error in cases in which a writ of error is the prescribed statutory method of securing a review of the judgment below, or in an appeal, does not invalidate the writ, or appeal, or prevent the court, into which it is returnable, from acquiring jurisdiction. Where a trustee in open court gives notice of his intention to appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals, which follows the judge's signature to the decree, but does not file assignments of error until four days later when he presents a formal petition for appeal and files his assignments of error, the appeal will be deemed to have been taken and allowed on the date of the notice in open court, and the assignments of error, if necessary, properly in the record, and a motion to dismiss will not be allowed. *Bernard v. We have already ruled that this assignment, so far as it covers the questions last alluded to, is not well taken. requisite.¹⁸¹ It has been held that the citation may be waived.¹⁸² The citation should give the names of all the applicants for the writ.¹⁸³ Citations should issue to all parties having an interest in the controversy; if parties are omitted the court may direct the issuance of an alias citation to them, and time for its service will be allowed if application be made in due time.¹⁸⁴ Defects in citations may be cured after the time limited for taking an appeal.¹⁸⁵

(5) PERFECTING APPEAL.—(I) In general.—The appeal is perfected by the giving and approval of the bond, and the issue of citation. The authorities are conflicting as to whether this must be done within ten days. There are a number of cases holding positively that the appeal is not taken within the prescribed time unless so perfected within the ten days.¹⁸⁶ On the other hand it has been held that the failure to perfect the bond and issue citation within the time prescribed for the appeal does not furnish ground for a dismissal of the appeal.¹⁸⁷ The time to appeal begins to run from the date of the entry of the order upon the records of the court.¹⁸⁸

(II) Record to be certified; contents.—After the filing of the bond and issue of citation the record is certified to the court and printed; the case is then brought on and argued in the usual way.¹⁸⁹ The rule of the circuit court of appeals provides that "no case will be heard until a complete record, containing in itself and not by reference, all the papers, exhibits, depositions, and other proceedings, which are necessary to the hearing in this court, shall be filed."¹⁹⁰ There should be a substantial compliance with this require-

Curing defects in bond and citation.—In the case of Columbia Iron Works v. National Lead Co. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 11 Am. B. R. 340, 127 Fed. 99, the court said: "It appears that the appeal was prayed and allowed within ten days as prescribed by the act, but that the bond was not filed nor the citation issued and served until a few days after the expiration of the ten days. But the general rule is that when an appeal is allowed within the time prescribed by law, it is sufficient for the purpose of moving the case though it is necessary in order to perfect the appeal, that a bond should be filed and that a citation should be issued and served where, as in this case, the appeal is not prayed in open court. The filing of the bond and the service of the citation are steps to be taken in perfecting the appeal, and if these steps are taken before the motion to dismiss the appeal is made, the court will ordinarily decline to dismiss the appeal because of the delay in filing the bond and serving the citation. In the present case the delay was for a few days only and we do not think the interests of the opposite party were to any appreciable extent impaired thereby. The motion to dismiss upon that ground is therefore denied." See also In re Hill (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 17 Am. B. R. 517, 148 Fed. 832, holding that a citation and bond are not jurisdictional requisites, and defects therein may be cured after the time limited for taking an appeal.

ment.¹⁹¹ It is a common practice for the parties to stipulate that certain portions of the record should be certified to the appellate court; where such a stipulation is entered into parts of the record may be certified, although of course the record must be sufficient to enable the appellate court to pass upon the questions submitted.¹⁹² The bankruptcy court is not required to find as to the facts and the record need not contain findings of facts. It is preferable, however, to include such findings as an aid to the appellate court.¹⁹³ It is sufficient if all the evidence on which the district court determined the question is contained in the record.¹⁹⁴ A proceeding in bankruptcy is a proceeding in equity and the taking of testimony therein and the review by appeal are governed by the practice which obtains in suits in equity except where otherwise specified; all the evidence offered by either party should be taken and recorded and, in case of an appeal, be returned to the appellate court. The evidence which is held by the referee or district court to be incompetent, irrelevant or immaterial should be included so that the appellate court may render its opinion as to whether the evidence rejected should or should not have been received.¹⁹⁵ The appellate court need not consider errors not specifically assigned,¹⁹⁶ though this is, of course, discretionary. The record should show when the appeal was perfected.¹⁹⁷ The court from which an appeal is taken may not interfere in the discretion allowed to the appellant in designating the record to be certified.¹⁹⁸ The record should disclose the

From the general rule that all evidence offered must be taken and preserved, the evidence of a privileged witness, evidence plainly privileged and evidence which clearly and affirmatively appears to be so incompetent, irrelevant or immaterial that it would be an abuse of the process or power of the court to compel its production or to permit its introduction, are excepted. Referees, other officers taking testimony and the district court, are governed by the same rule of practice in the taking of evidence and the hearing of controversies in bankruptcy, where the reason for the rule is much stronger than in ordinary suits in equity, because many of the orders and decrees in bankruptcy are reviewable, first in the district court and again in the court of appeals, and the delays would be intolerable if it were necessary for each court to remand for further testimony whenever it found that excluded evidence should have been received."

198. Designation of parts of record.—In the case of In re Robertshaw Mfg. Co. (D. C., Pa.), 14 Am. B. R. 341, 135 Fed. 220, the court said: "The petition of the Imperial Woolen Co. upon which this rule was granted, sets forth such parts of the record as they regard sufficient for a full and com-appearances by the parties, but it will be presumed that the appearances required to be entered by objecting creditors under General Order XXXII were duly and properly entered where no objection thereto had been urged in the court below.¹⁹⁹ Where the record is incomplete the appeal should not be dismissed but the record should be completed upon motion by the appellee to compel the appellant to file a transcript of such other papers and evidence as are deemed necessary.²⁰⁰ If it appears that books and other exhibits cannot be transcribed or represented by photographic copies, an order may be made to present such books and exhibits to the appellate court as a part of the return.²⁰¹ The certification must be made by the clerk of the district court and not by the referee.²⁰²

(6) FORCE AND EFFECT OF FINDINGS OF FACT.—In conformity with the rule in equity the circuit court of appeals will not interfere with findings of facts by the district judge, or by a referee, affirmed by a district court, unless the findings are clearly erroneous, or, as it is sometimes expressed, manifestly against the weight of evidence.²⁰³ When the court has considered conflicting

plete understanding of the case in the appellate court, and we are of the opinion that their judgment is right in this respect, but we know of no law which authorizes the court from which an appeal is taken, to designate what records in the court below shall be certified upon which the appellate court shall determine the appeal; in fact, the judge of the court from which the appeal is taken ought not in the least to interfere in the discretion allowed by the general terms used in the act of Congress and rules of court in designating the record to be certified in cases of appeal, as his judgment is to be reviewed and his opinion of the importance and relevancy of matters contained in the record might in the estimation of counsel for one side or the other be as faulty as it is claimed his judgment is from which an appeal is taken; and if an order of the court from which the appeal is taken should have the effect of restricting the record in all cases where such a defect had been made, there would be the possibility of a feeling upon the one side or the other that they had not secured a fair hearing on the full record."

Cost of supplying additional matter.—Where on the appeal by the debtor from an adjudication in involuntary proceedings it appears that an alleged amount of evidence in the case has not been inserted in the record because claimed by the appellant to be immaterial on the appeal, a motion of the appellee to include such evidence in the record will be allowed, with the reservation of power in the appellate court to ultimately determine who shall pay the cost incident to the supplying of such additional matter. Herman Keck Mfg. Co. v. Lorsch (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 705, 179 Fed. 485.

Remedy for incomplete record.—When the certificate of the clerk of the district court does not show that the record is a full and complete record of the entire proceedings, the appeal should not be dismissed, but if it does not appear by stipulation or otherwise that the record contains all that is necessary to the determination of the matters involved in an appeal, and if the appellee is not content with the transcript as filed, he should promptly move the court to require the appellant to complete the record by filing a transcript of such other papers in evidence as he deems necessary and points out. The motion papers should show that the documents and proofs desired constitute a part of the record upon which the judgment of the district court was rendered, and not simply that such documents and proofs constitute the original evidence upon which the referee made the findings which were subsequently reviewed by the district judge. *Cunningham v. evidence and made a finding or decree it is presumptively correct and unless some obvious error of law has intervened or some serious mistake of fact has been made the finding or decree must be permitted to stand.³⁰⁴ But if the finding of the District Judge be a deduction from established facts or uncontradicted evidence, the Circuit Court of Appeals is at liberty to draw its own inferences and deduce its own conclusion.³⁰⁵ An order of adjudication will be reversed on appeal where a stipulation, in which all proved or provable claims against the bankrupt are represented, is filed, asking that the order be reversed and the appeal dismissed.³⁰⁶

Where findings of a district judge, that a bill of sale and a chattel mortgage executed by the bankrupt effected a preference, are based on inferences drawn from undisputed facts and the statements of bank officials and representatives, they will not be reversed merely because the answer is verified and a denial therein is supported by an oath. Lake View State Bank v. Jones (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 40 Am. B. R. 148, 242 Fed. 321.

Review of discretionary rulings.—In the case of Gold v. South Side Trust Co. (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 578, 179 Fed. 219, it was held that where a ruling concurred in by both referee and district judge in an administrative matter involves the exercise of discretionary power, the court's action should not be reversed upon appeal unless it clearly appears wrong was done. This case was an appeal from an order of the bankruptcy court confirming a report of the referee which rejected a claim of a real estate broker for commissions, and the court said: "No legal liability existed and while it may be that under the facts here disclosed the referee might have allowed compensation, such allowance would be an exercise of discretionary power and not an enforcement of legal right. Indeed, the counsel for the defense conceded at the argument in this court that the allowance of this claim by the court and referee was discretionary. Such being the case and although there may be merit in the appellant's contention, we are strongly averse unless it clearly appears wrong was done, to reverse a ruling concurred in by both referee and district judge in any administrative matter. If abuses threaten to creep into bankruptcy procedure, those charged with local administration are in better position to prevent such abuses than are appellate tribunals. It follows therefore that in such matters the court's action should not be reversed unless unmistakably wrong."

Findings of fact, dependent upon conflicting testimony.—By a judge, master or referee, who have seen and heard the witnesses testify, have every reasonable presumption in their favor, and should not be set aside or modified, unless it clearly appears that there was error or mistake on their part. Finlayson v. Barrows (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 420, 231 Fed. 906.

When findings of district court not to be disturbed.—An appeal "as is equity," under section 25a of the Bankruptcy Act, presents the controversy for determination de novo under the new rules as under the old rules; but where the trial judge has heard the testimony in open court his finding of fact should not be disturbed unless the record very clearly discloses either a misapprehension of the testimony or a mistaken application of the law. Matter of Kaplan (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 37 Am. B. R. 101, 234 Fed. 803.

Conflicting evidence.—When a trial court has considered conflicting evidence, made his findings and decrees thereon, they will be held by appellate courts to be presumptively correct, and unless an obvious error has intervened in the application of the law, or some serious mistake has been made in the consideration of the evidence, the findings must stand. Nichols v. Elken et al. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 305, 225 Fed. 660.

(7) EFFECT OF APPEAL AND DECISION.—Whether an appeal acts as a stay on proceedings in the court below is a question not often important. It may be obviated by an application to the judge below for a supersedeas.³⁰⁶ When the appellate court confirms or reverses an order of the court below and remands the same to such court, the court below is bound to obey the mandate and carry it into effect without any change or limitation.³⁰⁷

(8) COSTS OF APPEAL.—Costs follow the practice and rules of the court, but where, in an appeal against a trustee, the order below is reversed on a proposition brought forward by the appellate court itself, no costs will be allowed.³⁰⁸ The bankrupt is not entitled to have the cost of the transcript and the printing of the record paid out of the funds of the estate because he is without the necessary means to defray the expense.³⁰⁹

IV. REVIEWS BY SUPREME COURT.

a. From a circuit court of appeals.—(1) EFFECT OF ACT OF 1915 LIMITING APPEALS.—All decrees and judgments of the circuit courts of appeal in cases arising under the bankruptcy act are made final by Act of Congress of January 28, 1915 (38 Stat. at Large, 804, ch. 22), as amended by Act of Congress, approved September 6, 1916, (ch. 448 of Laws of 1916), as follows: "That judgments and decrees of the circuit courts of appeals in all proceedings and causes arising under 'An Act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' approved July first, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, and in all controversies arising in such proceedings and causes; also, in all causes arising under 'An Act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases,' approved April twenty-second, nineteen hundred and eight; also, in all causes arising under 'An Act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon,' approved March fourth, nineteen hundred and seven; also, in all causes arising under 'An Act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes,' approved March second, eighteen hundred and ninety-three; and, also, in all causes arising under any amendment or supplement to any one of the aforementioned Acts which has been heretofore or may hereafter be enacted, shall be final, save only that it shall be competent for the Supreme Court to require by certiorari, upon the petition of any party thereto, that the proceeding, case, or controversy be certified to it for review and determination, with the same power and authority and with like effect as if taken to that court by appeal or writ of error."

The language of this act is very comprehensive, and embraces proceedings and cases arising under the bankruptcy act and controversies arising in such proceedings, and provides that the judgments and decrees of the Circuit Court of Appeals in such controversies, proceedings, and cases shall be final.^{309a}

The purpose of the act is obvious. It is to relieve the Supreme Court from the necessity of considering cases in bankruptcy, where a determination is made by a circuit court of appeal, except when brought to the Supreme Court by writ of certiorari.^{309b} It will be observed that the Supreme Court may require the case

"to be certified to it for review and determination, with the same power and authority as if taken to that court by appeal or writ of error." It would appear that the intent was to limit the right of review under this act to the cases in which an appeal might be brought under § 25-b of the bankruptcy act. In this view, many of the determinations of the Supreme Court under that section are now applicable. The practice on review will be that prescribed where writs of certiorari are issued out of the Supreme Court. It may be useful to retain references to former cases on appeal to the Supreme Court, and for that reason we have included the following paragraph as to appeals to the Supreme Court.

(2) FORMER APPEALS TO SUPREME COURT.—Under the law as it existed prior to the act of January 28, 1915, above referred to, appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States were, in bankruptcy, limited by § 25-b of the act to controversies on claims of over $2,000,²¹⁰ where a Federal question, so-called, is involved, or, if no such question is involved, where a justice of that court has certified that the decision of the question in controversy "is essential to the uniform construction of the act throughout the United States."²¹¹ In the absence of a certificate an appeal from a decision of a circuit court of appeals allowing or rejecting a claim where the amount in controversy exceeds $2,000, may not be taken unless a Federal question of the kind described in § 237 of the Judicial Code is involved.²¹² Sections 239-241 of the Judicial Code, providing for appeals and writs of error from circuit court of appeals to the Supreme Court have no relation to the revisory power conferred by § 24-b of the bankruptcy act and parties having elected to litigate in such court under these sections, the proceedings terminate there unless the case is one arising under § 25-b and is properly certified to the Supreme Court as therein required.²¹³ Under the Judicial Code the jurisdictional amount is $1,000; under § 25-b it is $2,000; of course the two cannot stand together. If the case relates to establishing a lien on real property, and involves a question which might arise independently of a proceeding in bankruptcy, it is appealable to the Supreme Court under the above sections of the Judicial Code.²¹⁴ If the appeal is from a decision allowing or rejecting a claim offered in proof in bankruptcy the jurisdiction conferred by the bankruptcy act is exclusive.²¹⁵ Authority to appeal from an order disallowing a claim in bankruptcy proceedings must be found in the provisions of the bankruptcy act, since the modes

^{210.} The plain purport of the act seems to limit an appeal by a certificate of a justice of the Supreme Court to a claim in controversy which exceeds the sum of $2,000. See Hutchinson v. Otis (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 10 Am. B. R. 275, 123 Fed. 14; Barrie v. Barrie, 5 How. (U. S.) 103; Gordon v. Ogden, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 33.

^{211.} Federal question involved.—Where the appellant insisted upon a construction of the bankruptcy act which would defeat the lien, and the construction contended for by appellee would give it validity, a construction of the bankruptcy act was directly involved in the determination of the question as to the validity of said lien, and the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals was appealable to this court under section 25-b. Coder v. Arts (Sup. Ct.), 22 Am. B. R. 1, 213 U. S. 223, 53 L. Ed. 772.

Determination of question.—The question whether a case arises under the laws of the United States, so as to permit an appeal to the Supreme Court from a judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals, must be determined, not on questions which may have arisen or which might arise in the subsequent progress of the case, but upon the grounds of jurisdiction set forth in the petition. Lovell v.

Newman & Son, 227 U. S. 412, 29 Am. B. R. 482, 57 L. Ed. 577.

Claim for damages on breach of contract.—A decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals that a claim for damages for an anticipatory breach of contract caused by bankruptcy is provable but that the damages should be limited to six months after filing the petition because the contract was mutually obligatory for that period only, does not involve a Federal question, and is not appealable under section 25-b (1) of the Bankruptcy Act. Central Trust Co. of Ill. v. Chicago Auditorium Assoc., 240 U. S. 581, 36 Am. B. R. 679.

of review of questions arising in steps in bankruptcy proceedings, therein specifically provided for, are exclusive.²¹⁶ An order of the district court allowing an exemption in bankruptcy proceedings is not a "final decision allowing or rejecting a claim," within the meaning of subsection b, and an appeal from a decision of the circuit court of appeals in respect thereto does not lie to the Supreme Court.²¹⁷ No appeal lies from a judgment of the circuit court of appeals, affirming a judgment refusing to grant a discharge.²¹⁸ The decision allowing or rejecting the claim must be final. A referee's order disallowing a claim "for the present" so as to permit the claimant to vote for a trustee without prejudice to the claimant's right to present the claim thereafter is not a final decision allowing or rejecting a claim so as to permit an appeal to be taken to the Supreme Court.²¹⁹ An objection to the want of proof of an act of bankruptcy which was not raised in the court below may not be raised for the first time on appeal.²²⁰

b. Practice.—The practice on appeal to the Supreme Court, as regulated by General Order XXXVI (2) (3),²²¹ is now abrogated by the act of January 28, 1915, which prohibits appeals from determination of circuit courts of appeals, and authorizes reviews of such determination under writs of certiorari. An appeal from a final order of the circuit court of appeals affirming an order allowing a claim was required to be taken within 30 days after the making of the order, as required by General Order XXXVI, and such time cannot be extended by filing a petition for a rehearing.²²² The record must contain ²²⁰ Order allowing or rejecting a claim.—Where the district court made an order, which was not appealed from, directing that the claim of bankrupt's president should be postponed to the claim of intervener, and, subsequently, an order was made that the dividend on said claim be paid to the intervener, which order was reviewed by the Circuit Court of Appeals where the controversy was limited to a complaint as to the mode of distribution, no issue being raised or contention made as to the prior order, held that the question whether the prior order was correctly interpreted by the referee and district court in the distribution directed by the subsequent administrative order was not one concerning the allowance or rejection of a claim but was a matter arising in the administration of the bankrupt estate, which the Supreme Court was not empowered to review. Wynkoop, Hallenbeck, Crawford Co. v. Gaines (U. S. Sup. Ct.), 227 U. S. 4, 29 Am. B. R. 369, 57 L. Ed. 391.

²²⁰ Armstrong v. Fernandez, 208 U. S. 324, 19 Am. B. R. 746, 52 L. Ed. 514, holding that where the only question contested below was whether or not the alleged bankrupt was a person engaged chiefly in agriculture, and the opposing creditors make no objection to the want of proof of the act of bankruptcy alleged, an objection first raised on appeal that other findings should have been made in respect to the act of bankruptcy comes too late. As to objections first raised on appeal, see Frank v. Volkommer, 205 U. S. 521, 17 Am. B. R. 806, 51 L. Ed. 911. See also Wood v. Wilbert's Sons Shingle & Lumber Co., 226 U. S. 384, 29 Am. B. ²²² Conboy v. First Nat'l Bank, 203 U. S. 141, 16 Am. B. R. 773, 51 L. Ed. 128. In the case of Hobbs v. Head & Dowst Co. (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 27 Am. B. R. 484, 191 Fed. 811, it was held that the limit of 30 days prescribed in the General Order only applies to appeals taken expressly under the Bankruptcy Act.

Time for taking appeal.—The time within which an appeal to the United States Supreme Court, under section 7 of the Act of March 3, 1891, must be taken, is one year, the thirty-day limitation contained in section 7 being applicable only to appeals thereunder to the Circuit Court of Appeals. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Bray, 225 U. S. 205, 28 Am. B. R. 207, 56 L. Ed. 1053.

the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the court below as required by General Order XXXVI (3), otherwise the appeal will be dismissed; the omission may not be supplied by reference to the opinion of the court below.²²³ One who contemplates an appeal to the Supreme Court should make a request for findings of facts before the decree of the circuit court of appeals is entered.²²⁴ The rule that where two courts have concurred in findings of fact the Supreme Court will accept those findings unless clear error is shown, will always be applied.²²⁵ The general order is limited to cases where either party is entitled to take an appeal to the Supreme Court under the bankruptcy act; it is therefore limited in its application to appeals in respect to claims of the required amount; it has no reference to appeals and controversies arising in bankruptcy proceedings which are appealable to the Supreme Court under the Judicial Code; in such a case the requirement as to special findings of fact and conclusions of law does not apply.²²⁶ A judgment that a person is not a bankrupt on a verdict by the jury in the trial of the cause, is reviewable in the Supreme Court only by writ of error.²²⁷ This method of reviewing the judgment of a circuit court of appeals is, because of the limitations hedging it in, very rare.

V. NO APPEAL BOND REQUIRED OF TRUSTEE WHO APPEALS.

The words of the statute are clear. Appeal bonds are required from all appellants save trustees. Appeal bonds are not required on petitions to revise. It would seem that this subsection applies also to writs of error from the highest courts of the State. It does not, however, relieve a trustee from the obligation to give such a bond as is required by the Revised Statutes of any litigant where supersedeas is desired.^{227a}

VI. CERTIFICATE AND CERTIORARI.

a. Certificates to the Supreme Court.—The reference as to certification to the Supreme Court is clearly to the Evarts act (now Judicial Code, §§ 239–241).²²⁸ This power may be exercised by either a circuit court of appeals or a district court. If from the district court, the question certified must be

Request for findings.—Where an appeal to the United State Supreme Court is contemplated, a suggestion of such intention should be made to the Circuit Court of Appeals at the argument, so that such court may render separate findings of fact and conclusions of law thereon, as provided in General Order No. 36. Lumpkin v. Foley (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 29 Am. B. R. 673, 204 Fed. 372. See also Knapp v. Milwaukee Trust Co. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 671, 162 Fed. 675.

Ed. 610, in which case it appeared that a trustee in bankruptcy had filed a petition to sell all the stock-in-trade and other property of the bankrupt and the appellant had intervened to establish the lien of a chattel mortgage on such property to be satisfied out of the proceeds of sale and the validity of such a mortgage had been attacked by the trustee; it was held that the controversy was one arising in a bankruptcy proceeding, and the procedure upon appeal was the same as in like cases under the court of appeals act of 1891 (Judicial Code, §§ 239–241), and no special findings of fact and conclusions of law are required since General Order XXXVI does not apply to such a case.

after final judgment,²²⁹ and one of judisdiction.²³⁰ The certificate is a matter of right, provided a jurisdictional question has been decided. If from the circuit court of appeals, any question on which the court desires instruction may be certified up; but the certificate is discretionary. It seems also that here a final judgment is not necessary.²³¹ Such certificates bring up only questions of law.²³² The practice and precedents are already numerous,²³³ though there are few cases which originated in bankruptcy.

b. Writs of certiorari from the Supreme Court.—Here again the reference is to the Evarts act. Such a writ (a) can be directed to the circuit court of appeals only, and (b) may be asked only in those cases where the ultimate decision of that court is final. While the Supreme Court has often disclaimed an intention to use this writ,²³⁴ it has grown quite common. The statute gives the court a wide discretion as to time,²³⁵ but, as a rule, such a writ should not be asked until a final decision is had below. The application is by petition to the Supreme Court, accompanied by a printed record of the case, and the question on which the writ is desired is, after due notice, moved on a motion day and submitted by written briefs. The effect of the writ if granted, is to remove the question to the Supreme Court; and it is thereafter proceeded with there, as if brought up on an appeal.²³⁶ The precedents on certiorari under the Evarts act (now Judicial Code, §§ 239-241) are already numerous and may be consulted with profit.²³⁷ Where a mandate has issued from the Supreme Court directing the district court to modify its decree in accordance with the Supreme Court's opinion, a peremptory mandamus may issue from the circuit court of appeals enforcing obedience of such mandate.²³⁸ But a writ of mandamus is no proper substitute for a writ of error, and mandamus will not lie to compel a court of bankruptcy to dismiss proceedings in bankruptcy against an alleged bankrupt on the ground that the petition in bankruptcy failed to show that the alleged bankrupt was subject to the jurisdiction of the court.²³⁹

ARBITRATION OF CONTROVERSIES.

§ 26. Arbitration of Controversies.—a The trustee may, pursuant to the direction of the court, submit to arbitration any controversy arising in the settlement of the estate.

b Three arbitrators shall be chosen by mutual consent, or one by the trustee, one by the other party to the controversy, and the third by the two so chosen, or if they fail to agree in five days after their appointment the court shall appoint the third arbitrator.

c The written finding of the arbitrators, or a majority of them, as to the issues presented, may be filed in court and shall have like force and effect as the verdict of a jury.

Analogous provisions: In U. S.: Act of 1867, § 17, R. S., § 5061; Act of 1800, § 43.

I. ARBITRATION.

a. In general.— Under subsection a of this section, "any controversy arising in the settlement of the estate," may be submitted to arbitration. General Order XXXIII controls as to the application for the submission of such a controversy to arbitration.

b. Scope and practice.— This section provides a means to judgment by lay judges. It resembles a similar practice in most of the States; and is availed of as rarely. Under the English law, no application to court is necessary: the trustee may submit to arbitration, if the committee of inspection consent.¹ With us, the direction of the court must first be obtained. The proceeding is initiated by a petition, which should specify "the subject-matter of the controversy and the reasons why the trustee thinks it proper and most for the interest of the estate that the controversy should be settled by arbitration or otherwise."² Both the law and general orders are silent as to what notice is required; the analogies of the statute suggest the same notice as that required on the settlement of controversies.³ The notice should, however, take the form of an order to show cause. The granting of the order is discretionary. Under the former law, it could not be addressed to the register.⁴ Now it can, and almost invariably will be, to the referee.⁵

II. ARBITRATORS, HOW CHOSEN.

Subsection b provides the method of choosing arbitrators. The statute requires no elucidation. It is construed strictly. The arbitrators must be chosen in one of the ways indicated, or their finding will be set aside.⁶ Once chosen, the practice thereafter should conform to that on arbitrations in the State courts. The inquiry is necessarily somewhat informal, but the findings must be reduced to writing and signed by the arbitrators, or a majority of them.⁷ It should be filed, not with the referee, but in the district court clerk's office.

III. EFFECT OF ARBITRATION.

The findings when filed become in effect the verdict of a jury. They need not be formally approved by the court. But they may be set aside by the district judge;⁸ they are also subject to review in the same way a verdict is. If not set aside by the judge or on appeal, the findings are res adjudicata on all parties to the proceeding, even in a collateral action.⁹

COMPROMISES.

I. Compromises, 613

a. Scope of section, 613

b. Practice, 614

c. Approval of court, 614

I. COMPROMISES.

a. Scope of section.—This section should not be confused with § 12 on compositions. It is intended to supply a summary and inexpensive way of settling questions arising in the administration of bankrupt estates. It is most often used in connection with contests on claims filed against the estate, or the contested collections of claims due the estate. It cannot, of course, be resorted to where the matter in controversy is the right to a discharge. But any controversy arising in the administration of the estate may be compromised.¹ There is no authority to compel dissenting creditors of a bankrupt corporation to give up their existing claims and in their stead to accept stock in a new corporation to be formed to take over all the assets of the bankrupt, and to assent to many other provisions such as are usually contained in a contract of reorganization, even though such a plan may seem desirable and the usual course of administration is certain to result in a heavy loss.²

1. In re Northampton Portland Cement Co. (D. C., Pa.), 25 Am. B. R. 565, 179 Fed. 726.

It is an unsettled question whether the term "controversy" has any application to a voluntary offer by the bankrupt to pay a sum of money to the trustee in satisfaction of a larger amount due, the trustee being willing to accept such voluntary payment in full satisfaction.

b. Practice.—Here also the proceeding is initiated by a petition, which may be made by the trustee, the bankrupt, or a creditor.³ It should be filed with the referee, if the case has been referred. The subject-matter of the controversy and the reasons why there should be a compromise must be clearly and distinctly set forth.⁴ The referee, on the filing of such a petition, sets a day and place for the hearing and gives notice to all creditors and persons interested, in the usual way.⁵ The notice should also contain a direction to show cause why the proposed compromise should not be allowed. The hearing is before the referee, not the judge, and conforms to like hearings on similar notice or order.

c. Approval of court.—The compromise must be "with the approval of the court," which means that even the action of the creditors on the proposition is not final.⁶ The court will ordinarily approve a compromise which results in an increase of the assets of the estate and will prove beneficial to the creditors, but it will not sanction such compromise if coupled with an agreement not to furnish evidence in a criminal prosecution against the bankrupt, or in any way to stifle such prosecution.⁷ A minority of the creditors will not be permitted to prevent a compromise of an action against the estate, where it appears that the defense would probably be unsuccessful, delay the settlement of the estate and add materially to the cost of administration, unless such creditors indemnify the estate.⁸ The referee may disapprove the action of creditors. His decision may be reviewed by the district judge, on proper and timely application.⁹ Compromises are often agreed to informally at

5. Though the general order seems to leave the kind and duration of the notice to the referee, it should be by publication and mailing and a ten days' notice. See Bankr. Act, § 58-a(7)-b-c.

Approval by the court; compromise proposed by debtor.—In the case of In re Heyman (D. C., N. Y.), 5 Am. B. R. 808, 104 Fed. 677, Brown, District Judge, said: "I am of the opinion that section 27, and section 58(7) and section 56-a, so far as the latter affect settlements of claims or controversies between the trustees and others, are to be construed together; that any compromise proposed by the trustees under section 27 should be submitted to the creditors in accordance with section 58(7), and that the action of the creditors thereon under section 56 is not absolutely conclusive, but may for good cause be disallowed by the court under section 27; and that a compromise in like manner proposed to creditors by the debtor is equally subject to the judgment of the court under section 27. There is no specific provision as to what shall be the consequence of the mere approval by the creditors at a creditors' meeting of a proposed compromise submitted to it by the debtor. The case, as it seems to me, must necessarily come ultimately under section 27, from the fact that no compromise with the debtor, and no release to him can possibly be effected except through the trustee. Notwithstanding any previous vote by creditors, the compromise must still be carried out and executed by the trustee. It becomes, therefore, a compromise by and through the trustee, and hence falls under section 27, and must therefore have the 'approval of the court.'"

Compromise of claims by trustee; approval by court.—Where it appeared that the schedules of a bankrupt included among the assets a steam shovel valued at $2,500, that upon the sale of the assets, at which $1,500 had been offered for the shovel, the receiver withdrew it claiming title in his own right, and subsequently sold it for $1,200, and that there was doubt as to the validity of his title, the court should, under this section, withhold approval of an order of the referee permitting the trustee to accept an offer of the receiver for $500 in settlement of all claims of the bankrupt estate "upon or by reason of a certain steam shovel." Matter of Stier March Contracting Co. (D. C., Pa.), 38 Am. B. R. 74.

meetings of creditors where more than a majority in number and amount are present. This practice is, however, unsafe, as the section is construed strictly.¹⁰ The reported cases are few and, other than those previously referred to, are set out in the foot-note.¹¹

SECTION TWENTY-EIGHT.

DESIGNATION OF NEWSPAPERS.

§ 28. Designation of Newspapers.—a. Courts of bankruptcy shall by order designate a newspaper published within their respective territorial districts, and in the county in which the bankrupt resides or the major part of his property is situated, in which notices required to be published by this act and orders which the court may direct to be published shall be inserted. Any court may in a particular case, for the convenience of parties in interest, designate some additional newspaper in which notices and orders in such case shall be published.

DESIGNATION OF NEWSPAPERS.

I. NEWSPAPERS.

a. Comparative legislation.—All bankruptcy notices in England are officially gazetted by the Board of Trade, and published, if in London, in the London "Gazette;" if elsewhere, in a local paper.¹ In Canada they must be published in a local paper and the Canada Gazette.^{1a} Under our law of 1867, the marshal attended to the publication, the paper being fixed by the judge before the amendment of 1874, and the papers, one or more, being designated by the marshal thereafter.² The present provision is, therefore, new. It makes for uniformity.

b. Result of section.—The result of this section has been a standing order in each district, specifying the newspaper in each county in which bankruptcy notices are required to be published. This general designation is in practice made by the judge. A referee, being also a court of bankruptcy in each case referred to him, can designate the paper in which the notice in that case shall be published, provided the judge shall not already have designated one for that county. It sometimes becomes wise to designate an additional newspaper in a particular case, as where partnership bankrupts reside in different districts. The judge or the referee is empowered so to do by the statute. The only notice which must be published is that of the first meeting.³ After that, there is no publication, unless "the court shall direct."

I. BANKRUPTCY CRIMES IN GENERAL.¹

a. Comparative legislation.—An enumeration of offenses is properly no part of a bankruptcy law. The debtors act of 1869 in England gives a long catalogue of acts or omissions on the part of the bankrupt which constitute crimes punishable by imprisonment at hard labor for from one to two years.² Officers and other persons, indeed, even the bankrupt, may also be punished for other offenses, such as malfeasance in office or false swearing, under general statutes or the common law. This seems to have been the rule in this country prior to the act of 1867. That statute³ made many wrongful acts on the part of the bankrupt—some covered and some not by the present law—misdemeanors punishable by not to exceed three years' imprisonment; while any officer who intentionally took excessive fees⁴ was liable to a like imprisonment, as well as a fine and the forfeiture of his office. But offenses against the law by others were not made crimes or misdemeanors by the statute. The present section differs greatly from those in the former law, and the older cases are comparatively of little value. The new Canadian act enumerates a number of offenses by bankrupts and others which are punishable by fine or imprisonment or both.^{4a}

b. How section is construed; application.—Being highly penal in its effect the section must be strictly construed.⁵ This is a familiar rule of statutory interpretation and is specially applicable to a provision like this where new offenses are created and denounced.⁶ This section does not make criminal an act of the bankrupt committed before the bankruptcy;⁷ although the offense

5. Construction of section.—Field v. U. S. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 607, 137 Fed. 6, holding that where a statute is plain and unambiguous, the courts may not lawfully extend it by interpretation to a class of persons who are excluded from its effect by its terms for the reason that their acts may be more mischievous than those of the class whose deeds it denounces.

5 Wheat. 96, 5 L. Ed. 37; U. S. v. Clayton, Fed. Cas. No. 14,814; In re McDonough, 49 Fed. 309.

7. Acts prior to bankruptcy.—In the case of In re Steed (D. C., N. Car.), 6 Am. B. R. 107 Fed. 682; United States v. Cohn (D. C. N. Y.), 15 Am. B. R. 357, 143 Fed. 933, the court said: "This provision of the bankrupt act does not make any act of the bankrupt before the bankruptcy criminal. But if a bankrupt, before the bankruptcy, has concealed his property and, after his trustee is appointed, continues to conceal it from the trustee, he is criminally liable under this section, and, if indicted for such crime, evidence of his acts of concealment before the bankruptcy, as well as those subsequent thereto, would undoubtedly be admissible as a part of the res gestae."

may be continued after bankruptcy and thus the bankrupt become amenable to its provisions.⁸

c. Offenses knowingly and fraudulently committed.—The offenses, punishable by imprisonment pursuant to this section, all involve the element of conscious fraud, namely, knowingly and fraudulently transferring or embezzling property, or concealing it from the trustee, and committing perjury by taking a false oath during the proceeding.⁹

d. Jurisdiction.—The district court sitting in bankruptcy has jurisdiction to arraign, try, and punish any person who has committed any of the offenses enumerated in this section.¹⁰ So had the circuit court.¹¹ So, it seems, have the State courts, under State laws making the same acts crimes.¹² Likewise, the Federal courts in the exercise of their customary criminal jurisdiction, have power to try and punish for crimes committed in bankruptcy proceedings, other than those enumerated in the law.¹³

e. Indictment or information.—(1) IN GENERAL.¹⁴—The use of word "information" in § 29-d seems to indicate that a prosecution under this section can be by information.¹⁵ Since In re Wilson,¹⁶ and Mackin v. U. S.,¹⁷ however, it may be doubted whether any offense referred to in subsections a and b—each one being a crime, rather than a misdemeanor—can be proceeded on save by indictment. The debtor being technically a bankrupt¹⁸ from the time even an involuntary petition is filed, an indictment will lie before an adjudication.¹⁹ Where the indictment has been drawn under U. S. R. S., § 5392, relating to false statements, and a conviction had, the judgment will be reversed and the cause remanded to the trial court with instructions to enter a new judgment imposing such punishment as § 29 permits.²⁰ All matters necessary to constitute the offense must be clearly pleaded.²¹ It is not sufficient to set forth the offense in the words of the statute, unless these words are sufficient to include all the elements of the offense, without uncertainty and ambiguity.²² Objections as to the sufficiency of the indictment, erroneous, did not involve an entire failure of prosecution, and the judgment of conviction might be reversed and the cause remanded to the trial court with instructions to enter a new judgment imposing such imprisonment as § 29 of the bankruptcy act permits.

The indictment itself controls.—It is immaterial what statute the district attorney had in mind when he drew the indictment, if the charges made are embraced by some statute in force. The indictment itself must be looked to, and if it properly charges an offense under the laws of the United States, that is sufficient to sustain it, although the representative of the United States may have supposed that the offense charged was covered by a different statute. Williams v. U. S., 168 U. S. 389.

21. U. S. v. Prescott, Fed. Cas. 16,084. Thus, an indictment charging perjury for omitting assets from schedules is defective unless it charges directly that there was other property. Bartlett v. U. S. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 678, 106 Fed. 884.

taken after the verdict by motion in arrest, must relate to matters of substance; formal or artificial insufficiencies are waived.²³ Useful precedents will be found in cases cited in the foot-note.²⁴ Cases construing those subsections of the law of 1867 which made the obtaining of property on credit on false representation an offense, are no longer in point. Such offenses can, however, still be punished by a proper proceeding under the State laws.

(2) FALSE OATH; INDICTMENT.—The indictment need not allege that the oath was corruptly false,²⁵ but it should charge that the alleged false oath was wilfully false.²⁶ An allegation in indictments for perjury that the defendant's testimony was false and that they believed it to be false is sufficient without alleging the actual facts.²⁷ An indictment, charging that defendants conspired to give false oaths in a bankruptcy proceeding, should state what false oaths were to be given, or the subject thereof with such reasonable particularity that the defendants may be apprised of the nature of the charge against them.²⁸ If the alleged false oath pertains to a statement of assets in the bankrupt's schedule, the indictment must allege in what respects the statement was deficient, by stating that property was omitted, and describing such property.²⁹

(3) CONCEALMENT OF PROPERTY; INDICTMENT.—The statute referring to the offense of a person having "knowingly and fraudulently concealed, while a bankrupt or after his discharge, from his trustee any property belonging to his estate in bankruptcy," sets forth all the elements of the offense, and an indictment which uses the words "unlawfully, knowingly and fraudulently" to characterize the word "conceal" is good, and plainly excludes unintentional acts. The indictment need not charge that the alleged bankrupt, at the time

27. United States v. Freed (C. C., S. Dak.), 25 Am. B. R. 89, 179 Fed. 236, holding that there is no necessity that the record negative the exceptions of the statute, alleging that the indicted corporation was in fact engaged principally in one of the occupations mentioned in § 4-b of the bankruptcy act.

Allegation of falsity of statements.—An indictment which charges in substance that the defendant committed perjury when he swore, upon examination before the referee, that his books of account were burned on a certain date, that instead of having been burned on that date, they were in existence and in his possession up to the date of the examination, and that he knew he was making false oath when he swore that they were burned, sufficiently charges that the statements made by the defendant were false. Kovaloff v. United States (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 767, 202 Fed. 475.

Allegation of belief as to falsity of statement.—An indictment charging a bankrupt with perjury upon his examination in testifying as to the giving of a check in payment of a debt, which recites the testimony of the defendant, that he was indebted to the payee in the amount named, that he paid him such sum and that such payment was a liquidation of the indebtedness, and then continues, "of which statement the said (bankrupt) did not believe to be true," sufficiently alleges no belief as to the veracity of the statement. Daniels v. United States (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 27 Am. B. R. 790, 196 Fed. 459.

28. United States v. Waldman (C. C., N. Y.), 26 Am. B. R. 677.

29. Bartlett v. U. S. (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 678, 106 Fed. 884.

Filing false schedules.—An indictment charging the filing of a schedule which the defendant "knew well to be false," is insufficient. There must be allegations that the schedule was false or to show wherein it was false. United States v. Baker (D. C., R. I.), 39 Am. B. R. 244, 26 Fed. 741.

Sufficiency of description.—An indictment against the president of a bankrupt corporation for making a false oath to its schedules, may describe the assets charged to have been fraudulently and knowingly omitted from such schedules as "one hundred and fifty thousand dollars in lawful money of the United States." U. S. v. Lake (D. C., Ark.), 12 Am. B. R. 270, 129 Fed. 499.

of the alleged concealment of his property, knew that a trustee had been appointed or the name of the trustee. The mode of the concealment is also entirely immaterial and need not be set forth in the indictment, and no allegation of ownership is made essential by the statute, save that the property was property "belonging to his estate in bankruptcy."³⁰ It is sufficient to charge that the bankrupt has "knowingly and fraudulently concealed and secreted" property.³¹ In indicting a bankrupt corporation for fraudulently concealing assets, there is no necessity, in order to show the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, to adjudicate, that the record should negative the exceptions of the statute, alleging that the corporation was in fact engaged principally in one of the occupations mentioned in § 46.³² An indictment, charging that defendant unlawfully, knowingly, wilfully and fraudulently concealed from his trustee certain property, carries with it a sufficient averment that defendant knew that said property belonged to his estate in bankruptcy.³³ A general allegation that the property alleged to have been concealed consisted of goods, wares, and merchandise, the character, kind, and particular description of which is to the grand jury unknown, is permissible from necessity only, when the grand jury does not have and cannot obtain a knowledge of the facts.³⁴

(4) CONSPIRACY TO CONCEAL PROPERTY; INDICTMENT.³⁵—An indictment, under § 5440 of the U. S. R. S., of a conspiracy to violate § 29-b, which charges defendants with conspiring that a bankrupt corporation shall conceal its assets, is not insufficient, because it appears that the defendants were not bankrupts.³⁶ If the act of conspiracy was committed prior to bankruptcy it Unnecessary allegations.—An indictment which commences and concludes with averment substantially in the language of the statute to the effect that the bankrupt concealed money from the trustee, is not subject to a demurrer because it contains an averment that the defendant "then and there knowingly, wilfully and fraudulently, and while he was a bankrupt as aforesaid, concealed the aforesaid sum of money from his said receiver which said sum of money belonged then and there to the bankruptcy estate of the said Morris M. Meyer." As the indictment averred every fact necessary to be proved to constitute the offense denounced by the statute, its sufficiency was not impaired by the unnecessary averment as to a concealment from the receiver. Such an indictment need not allege a demand on the defendant by the trustee for the property claimed to have been concealed. Meyer v. United States (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 33 Am. B. R. 877, 220 Fed. 822.

It is not necessary to allege that the property was not exempt from execution under the laws of the State of the bankrupt's domicile. United States v. Greenbaum (D. C., Mich.), 42 Am. B. R. 286, 252 Fed. 259.

Duplicity.—An indictment for concealing property which alleges the crimes in the words of the statute is not duplicitous because it alleges the concealment of several different kinds of property and the manner and places in which it was concealed. Tugenshaft v. United States (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 45 Am. B. R. 310, 263 Fed. 562.

Use of word "conceal".—It is sufficient to allege a concealment by using the word "conceal" without stating how and in what manner the alleged concealment was accomplished. United States v. Greenbaum (D. C., Mich.), 42 Am. B. R. 286, 252 Fed. 259.

Time and place.—An indictment sufficiently states the time and place of the alleged offense where it is averred that it took place in a city named on a certain day of the month. United States v. Greenbaum (D. C., Mich.), 42 Am. B. R. 286, 252 Fed. 259.

36. Cohen v. United States (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 19 Am. B. R. 8, 157 Fed. 651, affg. 15 Am. B. R. 387; United States v. Young & Holland Co. (Cir. Ct., R. I.), 22 Am. B. R. 484, 170 Fed. 110, holding that an indictment for conspiracy to conceal the assets of a corporation in anticipation is not demurrable on the ground that there was no existing bankruptcy when the conspiracy originated.

Indictment date of offense.—Indictments charging conspiracy under section 5440, U. S. R. S., and concealment under section 29-b of the bankruptcy act, as of June 9, 1909, the date when a demand for the property had been made by the trustee, properly charge the offenses as of that date, notwithstanding that the evidence given thereunder shows the offenses to have been committed thirty days before filing the petition in bankruptcy, for a refusal to produce the property upon demand constitutes a continuance of the offenses as of the date charged. United States v. Stern (D. C., Pa.), 26 Am. B. R. 110, 186 Fed. 854, affd. 26 Am. B. R. 101.

Sufficiency of indictment for concealment of assets.—Counts of an indictment, alleging that the bankrupt had a large number of provable claims and insufficient assets to pay the same, and that, while the "company" must be alleged that it was in contemplation of such bankruptcy,³⁷ and must allege the commission of an overt act after bankruptcy.³⁸ An indictment which charges that defendants, contemplating bankruptcy proceedings against the bankrupt, a corporation, conspired to conceal from the trustee in bankruptcy property belonging to the estate in bankruptcy of the said corporation and that in pursuance of such conspiracy they removed the bankrupt's entire stock of goods from its place of business, sold the same and concealed the proceeds from the receiver and trustee in bankruptcy, but contains no allegations that any of the defendants were officers of or connected in any way with the bankrupt, does not state a crime, it being no criminal offense under the bankruptcy act for a person who is not a bankrupt to conceal the bankrupt's property from the trustee.³⁹ An indictment under this section for conspiracy to commit the criminal offense of knowingly and fraudulently concealing property of a partnership from their trustee in bankruptcy, is not insufficient because it fails to allege that a trustee was actually appointed, where the indictment avers that the conspirators contemplated, anticipated and planned that an involuntary petition in bankruptcy should be filed and the partners should be adjudicated bankrupts and a trustee should thereafter be appointed for their estate.⁴⁰ Neither is it necessary to allege in an indictment for conspiracy to conceal the assets of a corporation to allege the insolvency of the corporation at the time of the disposition of the assets, since conspiracy by a solvent corporation to conceal assets in contemplation of insolvency would be a crime.⁴¹ But § 29-d providing that "a person shall not be prosecuted for any offense arising under this act unless the indictment is found or the information filed in court within one year after the commission of the offense," is inapplicable to an indictment under § 5440 of the U. S. R. S. for conspiracy to commit an offense arising under the bankruptcy act.⁴² The omission of the words "knowingly and fraudulently" or any equivalent therefor, from an indictment for conspiracy to conceal from the trustee assets of a bankrupt estate, is fatal on demurrer.⁴³ was bankrupt, the defendant (an individual) did conceal from the trustee in bankruptcy the proceeds of a certain sale of property of the bankrupt, but does not allege that there was any concealment by the bankrupt or any receipt of assets after the filing of the petition or any act by officers acting for the corporation, are demurrable. United States v. Rosenstein (D. C., N. Y.), 33 Am. B. R. 730, 211 Fed. 738.

37. An indictment for conspiracy to conceal assets of a bankrupt estate, which shows that the conspiracy was entered into and the assets removed and concealed prior to the bankruptcy, but that said acts were done in contemplation of bankruptcy, is not alleged nor the commission of any overt act after the bankruptcy, no offense under section 5440 of the United States Revised Statutes is charged, even though a further conspiracy to continue to conceal the alleged concealed property is alleged. United States v. Grodson (D. C., Ill.), 21 Am. B. R. 68, 164 Fed. 157. An indictment for conspiracy, the substance of which was that B, one of the defendants, should purchase goods and that A, the other defendant, should conceal them, and that afterward B should go into bankruptcy, and that the concealment should continue, with the intention that at some subsequent time the profit by the concealment should be divided between the conspirators, sufficiently charges an offense under section 29-b(1) of the bankruptcy act, 1898, which punishes a concealment of property "while a bankrupt." Alkon v. United States (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 22 Am. B. R. 489, 163 Fed. 810.

Anticipation of involuntary bankruptcy.—An indictment is sufficient which charges that the defendants concealed their property in anticipation of bankruptcy proceedings by their creditors. Meyer v. United States (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 43 Am. B. R. 690, 258 Fed. 212.

f. Practice in general.—There being no rules or forms prescribed for the practice under this section, that practice should conform to criminal proceedings other than in bankruptcy in the court where the trial is had.⁴⁴

II. OFFENSES BY A TRUSTEE AND PUNISHMENT.

a. What constitute the offenses.—Subsection a is new. Its purpose is plain, and the words used are of such simple yet comprehensive meaning as to cover every intentional withholding of or parting with the property of the estate, or the concealment or destruction of a document, by a trustee. The words "transfer,"⁴⁵ "document,"⁴⁶ and "trustee"⁴⁷ have enlarged meanings in this law. An allegation that the person named in the indictment was "duly appointed trustee," is sufficient;⁴⁸ although it is better practice to give details as to his appointment and qualification. That the act was "knowingly and fraudulently" done must be distinctly charged and clearly proven. It seems also that a trustee may commit the offense specified in § 29-b (2).⁴⁹ A trustee cannot be compelled to give testimony which may tend to show that he has misappropriated the funds of the bankrupt's estate.⁵⁰

b. Punishment.—The penalty under subsection a is imprisonment and the only limitation is that the time shall not be more than five years.

III. OFFENSES BY OTHER THAN OFFICERS AND PUNISHMENT.

a. By a bankrupt.—This subject has already been discussed elsewhere.⁵¹ Any offense which, if committed by a bankrupt, can be punished under this subsection is also an objection to his discharge. Under the rule that a penal statute must be strictly construed, the word "person" as used in clause b of this section has been held not to include an officer of a corporation which is declared a bankrupt,⁵² but the better rule would seem to be that the officers of a corporation may be indicted for the crime of concealing its assets, if they participated in its commission.⁵³

b. Concealment of property.⁵⁴—(1) IN GENERAL.—It is a felony to conceal the assets of a bankrupt from his trustee.⁵⁵ This section applies to both voluntary and involuntary bankruptcy.^{56a}

The somewhat elastic meaning of the word "conceal" should be borne in

44. Trial; disqualification of counsel.—The fact, that the attorney for the petitioning creditors, the receiver appointed by the court, and the trustee in bankruptcy, aided, as a duly appointed special assistant U. S. district attorney in the prosecution of an indictment under the Federal statute against a bankrupt for fraudulent concealment of assets, is not a ground for reversal, although such counsel would have been disqualified under the state statute. *Terry v. mind.⁵⁶ Likewise, the necessity of charging and proving that the act was "knowingly and fraudulently" done, as this is an essential element of the crime.⁵⁷ Concealment of property was also an offense under the former law, and the cases then decided will be found valuable.⁵⁸

(2) CONTINUING CONCEALMENT.—The well-recognized doctrine of "continuing concealment" should also be considered, for the continuance of a concealment by a bankrupt after bankruptcy may constitute the offense,⁵⁹ and evidence of his acts of concealment prior to bankruptcy is admissible as part of the res gestae.⁶⁰

(3) WHAT CONSTITUTES OFFENSE.—The offense is completed, if the property was concealed knowingly and fraudulently before bankruptcy, and on the appointment of a trustee, the bankrupt fails to surrender it or to disclose the disposition he has made of it.⁶¹ A concealment from a trustee after his appointment and a failure to deliver over to him upon demand any property or cash which the bankrupt may have in his possession, is an offense as of any date that the concealment continues.⁶² So, a concealment of property by a

56. A criminal concealment of property by a bankrupt is the continuous concealment of the property from the trustee during the whole course of the bankruptcy proceedings or beyond, but to prove such concealment it is not necessary to take up each moment of the bankrupt's life while the proceedings last and to prove what he did as a means of proving what he did not. Johnson v. U. S. (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 724, 163 Fed. 30.

R. 29; In re Griffin Bros. (D. C., Ala.), 19 Am. B. R. 78, 154 Fed. 537; Klein v. Powell (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 23 Am. B. R. 494, 174 Fed. 640; Matter of Agnew and Sherman (D. C., N. Y.), 35 Am. B. R. 709, 225 Fed. 650.

Essential elements.—The essential elements of concealment, etc., are that it must be by the bankrupt, while a bankrupt or after his discharge, and from his trustee, of property belonging to the estate in bankruptcy, and such concealment must be "knowingly and fraudulently" done. United States v. Rhodes (D. C., Ala.), 32 Am. B. R. 523, 212 Fed. 513.

58. Consult Vol. 6, Am. Dig., Century Ed., "Bankruptcy," § 735.

"The term 'concealed' used in this section [in § 68 of the act of 1799] is one of plain interpretation and obviously applies to articles intended to be secreted and withdrawn from public view on account of their being so subject to duties, or from some fraudulent motive." U. S. v. 350 Chests of Tea, 12 Wheat, 493, 6 L. Ed. 702.

59. See under Section Fourteen of this work, subtitle "Continuing concealment." United States v. Rhodes (D. C., Ala.), 32 Am. B. R. 523, 212 Fed. 513; Conetto v. United States (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 42 Am. B. R. 189, 251 Fed. 42.

Continuing concealment.—Thus if a bankrupt has disposed of property belonging to him, prior to the adjudication, and has the proceeds thereof in his possession or within his authority, to use and appropriate subsequently, there is a continuing concealment, for which he is amenable to the law, although the fact of concealment by intent and purpose took place while he was not a bankrupt. In re Jacobs & Verstandig (D. C., Ore.), 17 Am. B. R. 470, 147 Fed. 797.

60. U. S. v. Cohn (C. C., N. Y.), 15 Am. B. R. 357, 152 Fed. 983; United States v. Rhodes (D. C., Ala.), 32 Am. B. R. 523, 212 Fed. 513. Compare Matter of Gilroy (D. C., N. Y.), 14 Am. B. R. 627, 633, 140 Fed. 733, where Judge Holt says: "It is a serious defect in the bankrupt law that it contains no adequate provisions for criminal punishment for the fraudulent concealment of property in contemplation of bankruptcy."

Evidence of continuing concealment.—Testimony of facts indicating concealment of property before bankruptcy is admissible in proof of its concealment continued and completed after bankruptcy. As evidence of acts committed before bankruptcy is admissible in proof of concealment then begun and thereafter completed, so evidence of acts before bankruptcy is admissible in proof of fraudulent intent with which concealment is completed after bankruptcy. Glass v. United States (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 36 Am. B. R. 558, 222 Fed. 773.

A., 5th Cir.), 29 Am. B. R. 555, 199 Fed. 753, holding, that where one conceals property before bankruptcy keeps it concealed after bankruptcy and the appointment of a trustee, and fails to surrender it, he is guilty of the crime of concealing assets, although the initial concealment was before he became a bankrupt, the offense in such case being complete when he fails to surrender the property to his trustee in bankruptcy or to disclose to him its whereabouts.

voluntary bankrupt after he has filed his petition and before the appointment of a trustee is an offense under this section.⁶³ Likewise, it is a crime to fraudulently conceal property from the trustee, even though the property had been disposed of before an order to pay over to the trustee was made.⁶⁴ The offense of fraudulently concealing assets is committed where the bankrupt dishonestly applies money or property to his own use or purposes so that he himself or some other person whom he may desire to benefit receives advantage and profit by the concealment; the application of money in good faith to the payment of a debt after a petition in voluntary bankruptcy is filed does not necessarily constitute a fraudulent concealment, although as a result of the payment the creditor receives an undue advantage.⁶⁵

(4) CONCEALMENT FROM TRUSTEE.—The appointment of a trustee in bankruptcy is an essential element of the offense of knowingly and fraudulently concealing a bankrupt's property from his trustee; but such appointment of the trustee is not an ingredient of the crime of conspiring to commit such offense.⁶⁶ The bankruptcy act does not make it a criminal offense for a person who is not a bankrupt to conceal the bankrupt's property from the trustee.⁶⁷ Thus, there can be no conviction unless it is shown that the defendant had been adjudicated a bankrupt.⁶⁸

(5) CONCEALMENT BY CORPORATION OR PARTNERSHIP.—A bankrupt corporation is capable of committing the criminal offense of knowingly or fraudulently concealing its property from its trustee.⁶⁹ Although it has been held that the concealment must be by the bankrupt, and that an officer of a bankrupt corporation is not liable to punishment under § 29 for concealment by such corporation,⁷⁰ the more effective rule seems to be, that, if the officers of a

R. 755, 132 Fed. 789, in which the court said: "It is true that clause 1 applies to concealing property from the trustee, and that in the case at bar the alleged concealment was prior to the appointment of the trustee. But when a person files his voluntary petition in bankruptcy, he knows that a trustee will be appointed, and that such trustee takes title as of the date of the adjudication. It follows that a concealment of property after the adjudication, even if before the appointment of the trustee, is a concealment from the trustee."

R. 8, 157 Fed. 653, and held inapplicable where the indictment charges a conspiracy that a bankrupt corporation should conceal its assets, as distinguished from a conspiracy that the officers of a bankrupt corporation should conceal its assets.

corporation have participated in the commission of the offense, they may be indicted and punished therefor.⁷¹ A member of a bankrupt partnership, although not himself adjudicated a bankrupt, may be prosecuted for the fraudulent concealment of firm property from its trustee.^{71a}

(6) CONCEALMENT BY THIRD PARTY IN AID OF BANKRUPT.—It has been ruled that while a third person cannot be convicted under this section of concealing property he may be convicted under the United States Criminal Code as a principal under the provision making all who aid and abet the commission of a crime liable as principal.⁷²

(7) OMISSION TO SCHEDULE PROPERTY.—It is not an offense under this section to omit to name property in the schedule by accident or mistake,⁷³ or worthless claims upon which an action could not be maintained,⁷⁴ or property which the debtor did not know that he owned,⁷⁵ or property which the bankrupt honestly thought did not pass to the trustee,⁷⁶ or where the evidence does not show that a legally consummated gift or transfer has been made.⁷⁷ But if it appear that property was omitted from the schedules with the fraudulent purpose of concealing it, an offense is committed.⁷⁸ The omission if fraudulent will constitute the oath to the schedule, a false oath, and as such a distinct offense from that of concealing property from the trustee.⁷⁹ The advice of counsel has been held to be no defense.⁸⁰ The offense may not be retrieved by the subsequent good conduct of the defendant, although the court may consider such conduct in imposing sentence.⁸¹

(8) EVIDENCE OF CONCEALMENT.—The court may exclude evidence of facts, which, though relevant, is too remote to be material in the circumstances.⁸² The act to constitute a concealment need not be a physical act in the nature of a conversion, begun and completed after bankruptcy, and hence evidence of acts committed before bankruptcy may be admitted as showing intent.⁸³ And, for the same purpose, conversations with the bankrupt prior to the concealment are admissible.^{83a} Neither a bankrupt's schedules in bankruptcy nor his examination before the referee, if objected to by the bankrupt, are admissible on an indictment for concealment of property.⁸⁴ The books of the bankrupt are admissible in evidence upon a trial of the indictment although he claims his privilege.⁸⁵ The nature of the act of concealment is such that it can rarely be proved by direct testimony; the evidence must be largely if not wholly circumstantial, and "such as in practical affairs of life tends to produce belief and conviction in the minds of those to whom such evidence is addressed."⁸⁶

c. False oath.⁸⁷—(1) IN GENERAL.—The fifth amendment of the United States Constitution does not prohibit the imposition of a punishment for false swearing on a compulsory examination.⁸⁸ Nor does the immunity provision of § 7 (9) of the bankruptcy act, that no testimony given by a bankrupt upon his examination "shall be offered in evidence against him in any criminal proceeding" exempt him from a criminal prosecution for giving false testimony on such an examination.⁸⁹ The insertion of this common-law offense in the statute simply creates a different penalty for a crime already defined,⁹⁰ and where a defendant, in a proceeding in bankruptcy, has been indicted under this section, and also under the Penal Code, he can only be prosecuted under this section.^{90a} The false oath must have been "knowingly and fraudulently" made.⁹¹

(2) WHAT CONSTITUTES FALSE OATH.—What is a "false oath" in bankruptcy is considered elsewhere.⁹² The words "false oath," as employed in this section, comprehend false swearing by the bankrupt in a proceeding to investigate the truth of specifications filed against his discharge.⁹³ And also false testimony given by a witness before a special commissioner, appointed under § 21-a, prior to the bankrupt's adjudication,⁹⁴ but it does not embrace the verification by the bankrupt of schedules from which he has omitted property transferred in fraud of creditors more than four months before the filing of the petition;⁹⁵ although it may include a verification of schedules from which property which should have been transferred to the trustee has been fraudulently omitted.⁹⁶ The making of a false oath either in or out of bank-

Failure to schedule not a concealment.—The offense denounced by the provisions of section 29-b contemplate the concealment of property by some other act or acts upon the part of the bankrupt than merely omitting it from the schedules, and affirmative false statements of some material fact or facts by the bankrupt, wilfully and intentionally made by him, knowing the same to be false. The mere fact that a man was president of a corporation and as such had opportunity to find out that a considerable portion of the stock in trade of the corporation had disappeared, and that he frequently visited the place of business of the corporation, but took no active part in its management, is not sufficient to show that he knowingly and fraudulently concealed the assets of the corporation. Wolf v. United States (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 106, 238 Fed. 902.

ruptcy proceedings is perjury, and punishable as such; if made in a bankruptcy proceeding it is punishable as prescribed in this section, rather than as prescribed in the Federal Penal Code.⁹⁷ Although this section prescribes no punishment for one who suborns another to make a false oath in a proceeding in bankruptcy, one who is guilty of such subornation is punishable under the Penal Code,⁹⁸ but the crime of false swearing in bankruptcy proceedings is not equal in enormity to the crime of perjury.⁹⁹ The offense, when once committed, cannot be retrieved by right and lawful conduct on the part of the defendant in assisting his trustee in gathering assets which ought to have been disclosed before.¹⁰⁰ The making of a "false account" is not a crime except as here prescribed. These latter words when applied to a debtor are not important, as an unverified account by the bankrupt is practically unknown. Not so where the false account is filed by the trustee or receiver; it is often not verified, but this would not save the guilty officer from the penalty of the statute. This subsection then refers to the perjury of, or the making of a false account in the proceeding by, any person.

(3) ADMINISTRATION OF OATH.—In a trial of an indictment under this clause, it must be shown that the oath was administered by an officer authorized to administer it.¹⁰¹ A referee may administer such an oath.¹⁰²

(4) EVIDENCE OF FALSE OATH.—Evidence should be clear and satisfactory.¹⁰³ In a prosecution for false swearing evidence which not only contradicts the testimony of the defendants, but so far preponderates it as to justify the jury in finding that the latter was not only false but was made by the defendant knowingly and fraudulently is all that is necessary to prove the crime of making a false oath.¹⁰⁴ Proof that the defendant took the oath either before he began to testify or when he finished and signed the testimony is sufficient to support the charge of perjury.¹⁰⁵

An inquiry as to assets or liabilities of a bankrupt may be carried back as far as is necessary, and everything bearing upon the question at the time of bankruptcy is material. Hence a question with respect to the financial condition of the business of the said bankrupt; and with respect to the amount of assets and liabilities of the said bankrupt, is material, although relating to the bankrupt's financial condition several years before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. *United States v. Evidence of business relations between defendant and bankrupt.—Where the defendant testified before the referee that he received cash for a check delivered to the bankrupt, while the prosecution claimed that he merely received checks in return, the object being to pad the bankrupt's bank account, evidence may be admitted tending to show close business and confidential relations between the accused and the bankrupt to show motive. *Ulmer v. d. Punishment.—Here, too, the only punishment is by imprisonment; but the maximum is two, not five, years.¹⁰⁶ If perjury is charged and the indictment is laid under the general law, the punishment prescribed by that law will, of course, follow a conviction.

e. Offenses by others.—(1) IN GENERAL.—While the word "person"¹⁰⁷ includes the officers¹⁰⁸ named in the law, and thus any of the offenses enumerated in subsection b may be chargeable to an officer, yet the last three subdivisions of subsection b are manifestly intended to meet acts or omissions by others than the bankrupt or such officers. These subdivisions are new, and have as yet received little attention from the courts.

(2) PRESENTING A FALSE CLAIM.—The presenting of a false claim under oath against a bankrupt's estate is a crime.^{109a} Though the clause is phrased somewhat awkwardly, it is thought that it applies to an attorney who presents such a claim in an ordinary proceeding, as well as in one for a composition. The intention clearly is to penalize the filing of false claims, and to make both the claimant and any one who acts in his stead in presenting the claim liable therefor. The words "used any such claim in composition" enlarge the scope of the clause in such proceedings; it may have been presented without knowledge of its falsity, but acted on, as by assenting to the offer of composition, after that fact became known. Knowledge of falsity is essential, but that the presentation or use was fraudulent does not seem a necessary element. On a prosecution for this offense testimony given by the defendant on a hearing in bankruptcy is admissible.^{109b} The books of the bankrupt, accompanied by explanatory evidence by accountants and statements made by the bankrupt to credit companies, are admissible on the question whether the defendant made a loan to the bankrupt.^{109c}

(3) RECEIVING PROPERTY WITH INTENT TO DEFEAT THE ACT.—The elements of pleading and proof here are: (a) The receipt of a material amount of property belonging to the bankrupt, (b) after the filing of the petition,¹¹⁰ and (c) with intent to defeat the act.¹¹¹ This offense can, therefore, not be committed by one who is the unconscious beneficiary of a fraudulent transfer or preference before bankruptcy,¹¹¹ though intent to defeat the act is palpable. On the other hand, only intent, not also the result, need be shown. But intent will never be presumed where the acts complained of are made the foundation of an indictment; it must be proved. This offense will, in the nature of things, be rare, and occur only in involuntary cases before actual adjudication.

106. Three counts in an indictment for a false oath under section 29, where the defendant made substantially the same statement at three different times, charge but one offense, and in such a case imprisonment for more than two years specified in such section is unauthorized. Uimer v. United States (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 143, 219 Fed. 641.

Effect of Revised Statutes, § 5392.—While the effect of section 5392 of the United States Revised Statutes, making oral and written false statements perjury, when sworn to before any competent tribunal, officer or person in any case in which a law of the United States authorizes an oath to be administered, is restricted by section 29 of the Bankruptcy Act, both sections may be construed together as providing a stated penalty for the crime of false swearing, with the proviso that when the offense is committed in a bankruptcy proceeding the offender, upon conviction, shall be subjected to a different penalty. Wechsler v. United States (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 19 Am. B. R. 1, 158 Fed. 579, revg. 16 Am. B. R. 1.

107. Bankruptcy Act, § 1 (19).

108. Bankruptcy Act, § 1 (18).

109a. Advice of counsel.—Where the defendant did not detail all the facts and circumstances to his counsel as to the entire transaction but merely stated to his counsel that he had loaned money to the bankrupt, he was not entitled to a binding instruction for acquittal on the ground that he acted on the advice of counsel in filing his claim and therefore did not knowingly present a false claim under oath. Levinson v. United States (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 45 Am. B. R. 305, 263 Fed. 257.

109b. Levinson v. United States (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 45 Am. B. R. 305, 263 Fed. 257.

110. See U. S. v. Latorre, Fed. Cas. 15,567, 8

(4) EXTORTING MONEY.—The fifth subdivision is clearly aimed at those creditors who seek an advantage as a consideration for consenting to a proposed composition. It may, of course, be availed of where pressure, including a money payment, is exerted, resulting in the withdrawal of objections to a discharge. Whether it is available where a debt is not proven in consideration of a new promise may be doubted; such a new promise is neither money nor property.¹¹² Cases are conceivable, too, where the bankrupt may commit this offense. The broad meaning of "person" should be remembered.¹¹³ The mere attempt to extort is enough. But extortion is not shown where a creditor loaned money to a bankrupt for use in paying the consideration of a composition and the bankrupt promised that when the composition was confirmed he would pay the creditors the balance of their claim, after deducting their share of the consideration of such composition.¹¹⁴

(5) CONSPIRACY.¹¹⁵—Under § 5440 of the U. S. R. S. (now § 37 of the United States Criminal Code) it has been held that a person who conspires with another to commit an offense against the bankruptcy act is liable to prosecution.¹¹⁶ If a bankrupt conceal his property before the appointment of a trustee and continue to conceal it after the appointment he violates the bankruptcy act and a conspiracy that he shall do so violates the conspiracy statute.¹¹⁷ Insolvent debtors can be convicted of conspiracy to conceal property in anticipation of involuntary bankruptcy proceedings against them.^{117a} The offense of conspiracy, as defined by § 37 of the U. S. Criminal Code, is not one arising under the Bankruptcy Act.¹¹⁸ Individuals may be guilty of the offense of conspiring to conceal the assets of a corporation, although the corporation, as such, was not a party to the conspiracy.¹¹⁹ Circumstantial evidence is admissible to prove the crime of conspiracy to conceal assets,¹²⁰ as the crime, from the nature of the case, can rarely be proved by direct oral evidence. If the proof shows a previous meeting and a concert of action thereafter, each of the parties doing some act contributing toward the accomplishment of an unlawful purpose, a jury is justified in finding that they were conspiring to accomplish that purpose.¹²¹ Upon a prosecution for conspiracy, the schedules are admissible in evidence.¹²² Evidence not only of the fraudulent concealment of assets by a bankrupt, but of the joint participation of the defendants in the acts by which the fraudulent concealment was accomplished is sufficient to sustain a conviction for con-

112. Where an alleged bankrupt, without suggesting the pendency of bankruptcy proceedings permits an action at law by the principal petitioning creditor to go to judgment, and pays the same, if the payment is received with intent to take no further action in the bankruptcy proceedings, it may constitute the receipt of money "after the filing of the petition, with intent to defeat this act," within the meaning of section 29b (4) of the bankruptcy Act. spiracy.¹²³ Each one of joint defendants may take the stand in his own behalf and his testimony is admissible for and against his codefendant.¹²⁴ Proof that some of the assets alleged to have been concealed were preferentially transferred merely, does not make a conviction improper where there is proof that other assets were concealed in pursuance of the conspiracy.^{124a}

(6) PUNISHMENT.—The punishment for either of these offenses, like those committed by the bankrupt, is imprisonment for not more than two years.

(7) ATTORNEYS VIOLATING ACT.—An attorney who designedly defeats or attempts to defeat the operation of the bankruptcy act is subject to suspension,^{124b} or disbursement.^{124c}

IV. OFFENSES BY A REFEREE AND PUNISHMENT.

a. In general.—The former law penalized the taking of unlawful fees. This subsection is, therefore, new. There are no cases yet reported under it. For what will make a referee "directly or indirectly interested," see under section thirty-nine, post; also for what constitutes his duty as to giving information. But the offense defined in subdivision 3 cannot be committed until the referee has been directed by the court, which here means the judge, to permit the inspection.

b. Punishment.—Here the punishment does not involve imprisonment; but ousts the guilty officer from office and makes him liable to a fine of not more than $500. This offense is, therefore, not an infamous crime.¹²⁵

V. NO PROSECUTION AFTER ONE YEAR.¹²⁶

The limitation contained in subsection d is absolute. The indictment must be found or the information filed within one year after the commission of the offense.¹²⁷ This subdivision has no application to an indictment under § 37 of United States Criminal Code for conspiracy to commit an offense arising under the bankruptcy act.¹²⁸

126. See also Am. B. R. Dig., § 1199.

127. Continuing concealment; indictment barred by statute of limitations.—The fact that concealed property remains concealed does not continue the offense; and where an indictment which charged bankrupt with having knowingly and fraudulently concealed assets from his trustee, was found more than twelve months after the filing of the bankruptcy petition and schedules and more than twelve months after bankrupt's adjudication and the appointment of a trustee, but the evidence as to defendant's acts in relation to the property all related to a period prior to his filing his petition in bankruptcy. He having done nothing since that time but remain passive and silent, the prosecution for the offense was barred by section 29d of the Bankruptcy Act, which provides that an indictment for concealing assets shall be found within one year after the commission of the offense. Warren v. United States (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 29 Am. B. R. 555, 199 Fed. 753.

An unsupported statement of the district attorney as to when a defendant accused of false swearing was sworn in the bankruptcy proceeding, is insufficient to establish that the offense occurred within the limitation prescribed by this subdivision. *Rosenthal v. RULES, FORMS, AND ORDERS.¹

a. Comparative legislation and meaning of section.—The English bankruptcy authorizes the lord chancellor, with the concurrence of the president of the board of trade, to make, revoke, and alter general rules in bankruptcy, which, when laid before parliament, have the same effect as if previously enacted by that body.² The general rules in England are, therefore, as much law as the statute. The provisions in the Canadian Act are similar to those in the English Act.^{2a} Our system does not permit judicial legislation of this character. The former act gave the justices of the Supreme Court power to frame general orders for a variety of purposes.³ The orders then framed and the forms prescribed for carrying them out have been used as models for those now in vogue,⁴ and the court will construe the present general orders as the general orders under the earlier statute were construed.⁵ The purpose is, of course, to accomplish uniformity in practice throughout the States.⁶

b. Those prescribed should be followed.—It has been distinctly held that the general orders promulgated by the Supreme Court in accordance with this section are binding upon courts of bankruptcy. They confer rights as well as prescribe rules of practice.⁷ The rules and forms prescribed by the Supreme Court under and by virtue of the bankruptcy act have the force and effect of law.⁸ It is the duty of referees and trustees to conform therewith.⁹ Filing has been refused to papers not in accordance with the official forms.¹⁰ The general orders are not to be taken as enlarging the statute, but must, if possible, be construed consistently with it.¹¹ But the general orders are not always in tune with the law; and the forms show a want of harmony at times both with the law and the general orders. In such cases, the law, of course, controls.¹² The general orders and forms have not, in respect to procedure, the full force and effect of law.¹³ In any event they do not abrogate the law. The orders being simply an amplification of the law with respect to procedure, they should not be construed as extending the powers granted to the court by virtue of the law itself.¹⁴ Rules may not enlarge the statute, but are merely prescribed to carry the act into effect.¹⁵

c. Supplemental rules and forms.—The general orders are intended only to confine the practice in bankruptcy within certain broad limits. They are not exclusive, and most of the district courts have prescribed supplemental rules; these should always be consulted. Even these have not always been found sufficient, and local rules are sometimes promulgated by the referees.¹⁶ Rules of the district courts may not conflict with the rules and forms pro-

Effect on jurisdiction.—A rule, not expressly authorized by some law of Congress, cannot confer judicial power on a District Court, to set aside or disregard the findings of fact of a referee, in an action by a trustee in bankruptcy to recover an alleged preference, where the parties had expressly stipulated to have the matter tried and determined by the referee. 14. Orcutt Co. v. Green, 204 U. S. 96, 17 Am. B. R. 72, in which the court, in considering the effect of General Order 21, said: "There is nothing in that provision inconsistent with, or opposed to, anything stated in the bankruptcy law upon the subject, and we must therefore take the statute and read them together, the order being simply somewhat of an amplification of the law with respect to procedure, but nothing which can be construed as beyond the powers granted to the court by virtue of the law itself."

mulgated by the Supreme Court.¹⁷ Likewise of the forms. Some of the more valuable, as well as many new ones suggested by experience, will be found under "Supplementary Forms," post. Where there is no rule to the contrary, or official form which is applicable, they may be used. Existing forms, too, may often be modified to fit a particular case; so, also, two or more prescribed forms may be combined.¹⁸ The goal to be reached is the important consideration. If without much violence done to prescribed rules and forms, the practitioner does so, he need concern himself as little about a technical observance of them as the court will with a captious objection on the other side.¹⁹

SYNOPSIS OF SECTION.

COMPUTATION OF TIME.

I. Computation of Time, 638.

a. In general, 638.

b. By months and years, 638.

c. By days, 638.

d. By fractions of a day, 638.

I. COMPUTATION OF TIME.

a. In general.—The rule stated in this section is familiar. The English law is similar.¹ The Canadian act is along the same line as our own but more elaborate.^{1a} The law of 1867 differed only in the words prescribing what days were holidays.² This the present statute does elsewhere.³ But the rule does not permit the exclusion of Sundays or holidays, save those coincident with the "day last included."⁴

b. By months and years.—The phrases "four months" and "one year" are frequent in the act. The present section speaks only of "time enumerated by days." Under the former statute, however, it was held that the same rule applied when the time was enumerated by months and years.⁵ So, also, under the law of 1898.⁶ While the first six words of the section would seem to indicate that it was not intended to apply where the time is enumerated by months or years, the following words "or in any proceeding in bankruptcy" makes it applicable to any proceeding in bankruptcy where the number of days is material.⁷ In the dissolution of attachments made within four months this section has been applied in computing those months.⁸

c. By days.—Here the statute is self-explanatory. Time limitations, based on days, are found in many sections;⁹ also in some of the general orders.¹⁰ Cases on the timely filing of petitions will be found in the footnote.¹¹

d. By fractions of a day.—Here the rule seems to be that fractions of a day will be disregarded. This doctrine is the composite of an ancient controversy. Cases under the present law and its predecessor are cited in the footnote.¹² There can now, however, be no question about the rule being as stated.¹³

SECTION THIRTY-TWO.

TRANSFER OF CASES

§ 32. Transfer of Cases.—a In the event petitions are filed against the same person, or against different members of a partnership, in different courts of bankruptcy each of which has jurisdiction, the cases shall be transferred, by order of the courts relinquishing jurisdiction, to and be consolidated by the one of such courts which can proceed with the same for the greatest convenience of parties in interest.

I. TRANSFER OF CASES.

Meaning and scope.—This section is intended to avoid conflicts of jurisdiction between the courts of different districts. Three different district courts might have jurisdiction, i. e., where the bankrupt resides, where he has his domicile, and where he has his principal place of business.¹ Three petitions even might be filed, were the case involuntary. The possible complications increase when partnerships are considered. Therefore, the Supreme Court, under the former law, influenced doubtless by the analogy of the last clause of § 36 of that law prescribed by rule² that the court first acquiring jurisdiction should keep it. This rule is now General Order VI, but with a sentence added to make it conform to the section under discussion. The latter is new. It seems intended to modify the hard and fast rule of seniority formerly applied, by permitting one of the courts having jurisdiction to relinquish it and to order a consolidation, if “for the convenience of parties in interest.”³ Neither the act nor Transfer for convenience of parties in interest.—Where petitions have been filed in different districts, the case should be heard in the district of the bankrupt's domicile, or else be transferred to the district where it would be for the greatest convenience of the parties in interest. In re Wixelbaum (D. C., N. Y.), 3 Am. B. R. 392, 98 Fed. 589.

Where a petition has been filed against a corporation in the district of its domicile, and thereafter a petition is filed against it in a district in another State, the court in which the first petition is filed, unless satisfied that it is for the greatest convenience of all parties in interest that the case should be transferred, is required to retain jurisdiction until the proceedings are closed. In re Tybo Mining & Reduction Co. (D. C., Me.), 13 Am. B. R. 68, 132 Fed. 697.

Where proceedings in bankruptcy against a corporation had been commenced in Alabama, Tennessee and New Jersey, in order the general order attempts to define the terms, "greatest convenience" or "parties in interest." The interpretation placed upon them by the court,⁴ that the term "parties in interest," covers every party having any interest in or connection with the case, including priority, secured and unsecured creditors, as well as the bankrupts themselves, and that the term, "greatest convenience," depends upon all the circumstances—proximity of a majority of creditors and the place of business of the bankrupts to the court, proximity of witnesses whose attendance is desired in any hearing, and, perhaps numerous other factors—would seem to be the correct view.⁵ Jurisdiction so to do is conferred by § 2 (19). The expressed preference of a majority of the creditors for a transfer, while worthy of careful consideration, is not conclusive upon the question of convenience; the burden of proving greater convenience is upon those seeking the transfer.⁶ Save as modified by this section, however, the practice in vogue under the former law is continued under the present. Unless the court in which the first petition is filed is satisfied that it is for the greatest convenience of all parties in interest that the case should be transferred, it will retain jurisdiction,⁷ and may stay the other court or courts from further proceeding until an adjudication is made or refused.⁸ The petitioners in the named, and the proceeding in the latter State, including the adjudication therein, is by order transferred to the Tennessee court, an order of the Alabama court transferring the proceeding therein to the Tennessee court, upon the ground of "greatest convenience of parties in interest," is only reviewable by appeal from the order of transfer, although the court granting such order may have made an erroneous finding that the Tennessee court had jurisdiction of the proceeding therein. Kyle Lumber Co. v. Bush (C. O. A., 5th Cir.), 13 Am. B. R. 535, 133 Fed. 688.

A motion to transfer a proceeding against a domestic corporation commenced in the Southern District of New York three days prior to the filing of a petition against it in Colorado, will be granted, and the proceedings consolidated. Matter of The General Metals Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 12 Am. B. R. 770, 133 Fed. 84.

6. Burden of proving convenience.—Matter of United Button Co. (D. C., Del.), 13 Am. B. R. 454, 137 Fed. 668, which construes generally the provisions of this section.

In a proceeding before the bankruptcy court first taking jurisdiction of a bankruptcy case, to determine the question which of two bankruptcy courts should proceed with the case for the greatest convenience of parties in interest, the burden of satisfying the court by a fair preponderance of the evidence that it would be for the greatest convenience of parties in interest to transfer such case to the other court is under section 32 of the Bankruptcy Act and General Order VI, upon the party seeking the transfer, and where ample notice of the time and object of a hearing upon the matter has been given to all parties in interest and no creditor appears in favor of a transfer and nothing in support of such petition to transfer is offered by the petitioner against an array of facts and circumstances constituting a great preponderance of the evidence in favor of the court first taking jurisdiction retaining and proceeding with the case, such petition to transfer should be denied. Bankrupt corporations.—The word "individual," as used in General Order VI, providing that "in case two or more petitions shall be filed against the same individual in different districts, the first hearing shall be had in the district in which the debtor has his domicile," is equivalent to "person," and as such includes a corporation. Matter of United Button Co. (D. preferred district must proceed with diligence to secure their rights, for if there be an adjudication in another district, jurisdiction thereon to administer the estate is obtained.⁹

Where the business transactions of two alleged bankrupt corporations organized in different jurisdictions are so intermingled as to be impossible of separation, the court which first acquires jurisdiction may proceed. In re South-Western Bridge & Iron

I. CREATION OF OFFICES OF REFEREE AND TRUSTEE.

a. Comparative legislation.—The corresponding officers under the English system are registrars and trustees; under the law of 1867, registers and assignees.¹ No statute heretofore, however, has formally created the offices.

b. Referee and trustee.—The statute elsewhere prescribes that the word "officer" shall include clerk, marshal, receiver, referee, and trustee.² The two former existed before the law was passed; the third comes into being only in those cases where the court finds him necessary and appoints him.³ It is a little difficult to understand why this section was necessary; § 34 provides for the appointment of referees, § 44 of trustees. Each, though thus an officer, has but intermittent functions. The effect of this doctrine on the limitations of § 72 is considered later.⁴ The referee is formally designated for a special term,⁵ and is vested with powers only as to such cases as have been referred to him. The trustee is, save for this section, not an officer at all, but a liquidator, appointed by the creditors.⁶ For the jurisdiction, duties, and compensation of these officers, and the like, reference should be had to the succeeding sections.⁷

SECTION THIRTY-FOUR.

APPOINTMENT, REMOVAL, AND DISTRICTS OF REFEREES.

§ 34. Appointment, Removal, and Districts of Referees.—a Courts of bankruptcy shall, within the territorial limits of which they respectively have jurisdiction, (1) appoint referees, each for a term of two years, and may, in their discretion, remove them because their services are not needed or for other cause; and (2) designate, and from time to time change, the limits of the districts of referees, so that each county, where the services of a referee are needed, may constitute at least one district.

Analogous provisions: In U. S.: As to appointment, Act of 1867, § 3, R. S., § 4993; Act of 1841, 5; Act of 1800, § 2; As to removal, Act of 1867, § 5, R. S., § 4997.

a. Appointment, 644.

b. Removal, 645.

c. Term, 645.

d. Limits of district, 645.

I. APPOINTMENT, REMOVAL, AND DISTRICTS OF REFEREES.

a. Appointment.¹—Under the present law, the judge of each district appoints the referees. By the former law, the registers were appointed by him, but on the nomination of the chief justice.² The power to appoint is limited

1. See also Am. B. R. Dig., § 66.

2. Act of 1867, § 3, R. S., § 4993.

within the territorial limits of the court; a judge of one district while holding court in another district cannot appoint a referee for the latter district. The "court" must appoint the referee, and not "the judge."³ But a district judge holding a court of bankruptcy, may appoint or remove a referee, though there is another district judge in the district having equal and concurrent authority.⁴ The appointment is usually in the form of a court order, designating the limits of the referee's district and his term of office. From that time and during such term all bankruptcy cases arising in his district are usually referred to him, unless he is absent, disqualified or removed;⁵ they may, however, for the convenience of parties be referred to any referee within the territorial jurisdiction of the court,⁶ or the court may appoint a special referee to hear a particular case in the event of the disqualification of the regular referee.⁷ The order of designation being discretionary the circuit court of appeals will not undertake to review it.⁸ If there is more than one referee in the referee district, the cases are distributed in such manner as the court directs.

b. Removal.⁹—This is, like the appointment, discretionary. But it must be either because the services of a referee are not needed, or for other cause. The cause should be stated in the order of removal. It is not thought that the words "for cause" here give the right to notice and a hearing. As long as the judge finds the cause sufficient, it is enough.¹⁰ The circuit court of appeals may not control the discretion of a district court in the matter of the appointment or removal of a referee.¹¹

c. Term.—The register held office until the judge deemed his assistance unnecessary. The term of the referee is, however, fixed at two years. There is nothing in the statute which invalidates the acts of a referee after the expiration of his term. He continues a referee in each unclosed case previously referred. If removed, the order of removal will doubtless remove him as to such cases. Without any standing order of appointment, the court can continue to refer cases in his district to him, provided there is no other regularly appointed referee in his district, and the order of reference will in itself confer jurisdiction and be deemed an appointment to that extent.

d. Limits of district.—Under the former law, at least one register was appointed in each congressional district. This seems to have been dropped out when that law was fused into the Revised Statutes.¹² Now the referee district is fixed by the judge, but should be so that each county "may constitute at least one district." This seems to mean that referee districts cannot be larger than a single county, a provision apparently ignored in many jurisdictions.¹³ There is warrant, however, for the practice, for the judge may conclude that the services of a referee are not needed in a particular county and combine it with another county or counties into a single referee district.

SECTION THIRTY-FIVE.

QUALIFICATIONS OF REFEREES.

§ 35. Qualifications of Referees.— a Individuals shall not be eligible to appointment as referees unless they are respectively (1) competent to perform the duties of that office; (2) not holding any office of profit or emolument under the laws of the United States or of any State other than commissioners of deeds, justices of the peace, masters in chancery, or notaries public; (3) not related by consanguinity or affinity, within the third degree as determined by the common law, to any of the judges of the courts of bankruptcy or circuit courts of the United States, or of the justices or judges of the appellate courts of the districts wherein they may be appointed; and (4) residents of, or have their offices in, the territorial districts for which they are to be appointed.

a. In general, 646.

b. Disqualification, 647.

I. QUALIFICATIONS OF REFEREES.¹

a. In general.— A referee is a judicial officer;² and this section sets proper limits on nepotism in his appointment or the enjoyment by him of more than one office.³ The former law contained no restriction save that the register

1. See also Am. B. R. Dig., §§ 67, 68.

N. Dak.), 11 Am. B. R. 245, 12 N. Dak. 51 94 N. W. 901.

3. In unpopulous districts, this is often a hardship, as a referee by this section is clearly disqualified from holding any other must be a counselor-at-law of the district or the State courts.⁴ Further restrictions were prescribed in his oath of office, and he was prohibited from acting as attorney or counselor in any bankruptcy case in his district, especially after the amendment of 1874.⁵ Now a referee must be (a) a resident of, or have offices in the district for which he is appointed,⁶ and (b) competent to serve; (c) provided he does not hold any other office of profit or emolument (except certain offices here enumerated) or (d) is related to certain judicial officers of the United States by consanguinity or affinity within the third degree.

b. Disqualification.—Referees, although duly appointed, if not strictly within the terms of this section, would probably be disqualified to act at all. Disqualification often occurs in specific cases.⁷ Whether he is disqualified is usually a matter either of discretion on the part of the judge or of conscience on the part of the referee. This matter is discussed elsewhere.⁸

office, either legislative, executive, or municipal (with the exceptions specified in this section), provided it is one of profit or emolument. The restriction is, however, on the whole, a wise one. It is sufficiently unfortunate that referees must practice their profession as a means of livelihood, thus, one day sitting in judgment, the next perhaps pleading in another court against him who was a pleader in the referee court but yesterday. They certainly should not exercise other functions of a political or public character.

struction Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 17 Am. B. R. 279, 147 Fed. 868, holding that a court of bankruptcy of one district has no power to appoint a referee residing without its territorial jurisdiction.

7. When referee not disqualified.—A debtor who owes an alleged bankrupt a debt which is not denied by the debtor, and whose status as a debtor cannot be changed by any of the proceedings in bankruptcy, and whose liability would be unaffected by such proceedings, is not disqualified to act as referee in bankruptcy. Bray v. Cobb (D. C., N. Car.), 1 Am. B. R. 153, 91 Fed. 102.

OATH OF OFFICE OF REFEREES.¹

This provision emphasizes the difference between the register under the former law and the referee under the present. The register was merely an assistant to the judge, his functions largely clerical;² the referee is, in effect, in all cases referred to him, save in name and concerning a few matters reserved to the judge by the statute, a court of original jurisdiction.³ Therefore, this section requires him to take the same oath as that taken by other Federal judges.⁴ This is the historic oath found in § 712 of the U. S. R. S. and from it incorporated into Form No. 16. It should be taken before the district judge.⁵

I. NUMBER OF REFEREES.

This section should be read with § 34. The former act gave a like discretion.¹ The only limit on the number of referees in any given district is that only so many shall be appointed as may be necessary "to assist in expeditiously transacting the bankruptcy business" pending in such district.² The authority of the court of bankruptcy to appoint referees is confined in number only within the discretion of the court itself.³

SECTION THIRTY-EIGHT.

JURISDICTION OF REFEREES.

§ 38. Jurisdiction of Referees.—a Referees respectively are hereby invested, subject always to a review by the judge, within the limits of their districts as established from time to time, with jurisdiction to (1) consider all petitions referred to them by the clerks and make the adjudications or dismiss the petitions; (2) exercise the powers vested in courts of bankruptcy for the administering of oaths to and the examination of persons as witnesses and for requiring the production of documents in proceedings before them, except the power of commitment; (3) exercise the powers of the judge for the taking possession and releasing of the property of the bankrupt in the event of the issuance by the clerk of a certificate showing the absence of a judge from the judicial district, or the division of the district, or his sickness, or inability to act; (4) perform such part of the duties, except as to questions arising out of the applications of bankrupts for compositions or discharges, as are by this act conferred on courts of bankruptcy and as shall be prescribed by rules or orders of the courts of bankruptcy of their respective districts, except as herein otherwise provided; and (5) upon the application of the trustee during the examination of the bankrupts, or other proceedings, authorize the employment of stenographers at the expense of the estates at a compensation not to exceed ten cents per folio for reporting and transcribing the proceedings.

I. JURISDICTION OF REFEREES IN GENERAL.¹

a. Comparative legislation.—The English act of 1883 has a similar section.² The jurisdiction of registrars in bankruptcy is, however, both larger and smaller than that of our referees. They, as a rule, cannot act save on applications unopposed, yet they have the very important power of making interim orders in cases of urgency and, if of the high court, may grant discharges and confirm compositions. The jurisdiction of registrars in Canada is similar to that of the English registrars.^{2a} Under our law of 1867, the registers had power to transact administrative or ex parte business,³ but issues of law or fact were always heard by the judge.⁴ A comparison of the two sections will indicate the great difference between their functions and those of the present referees.

b. Scope and meaning of section.—Manifestly this section is one of limitation. Unless jurisdiction is given or can reasonably be inferred from its words, it cannot, as a rule, be exercised by the referee.⁵ However, the broad terms of subdivision 4 coupled with, in many districts, rules conferring on them all the powers and functions of the judge that are not by the statute or the general orders specifically reserved to the court proper, make the section almost unlimited in its scope, and read into it the numerous other sections conferring jurisdiction on the court itself. The breadth and importance of these functions are discussed later.⁶ It should be noted, however, that (a) this jurisdiction is territorial, i. e., it must be exercised "within the limits of their districts;"⁷ and (b) it is always subject "to a review by the judge."⁸ A referee is a judicial officer, and all his acts are presumed to be legal within the scope of his authority.⁹ The findings of referees acting within their jurisdiction are entitled to the respect and credit given to officers acting judicially,¹⁰ and on matters within their jurisdiction have the same force and effect as if rendered by any court of general jurisdiction,¹¹ and are conclusive upon State courts.¹² It is especially provided in this section that all the referee's acts are subject to review by the judge.¹³ The practice on review is considered hereafter under the next section.¹⁴ Some of the illustrative cases are collated in the foot-note.¹⁵

Findings as res judicata.—Although a referee has specific power to hear and determine all questions arising upon claims filed and objections thereto, he has no power to bring a claimant before him to determine the validity of the claim; but where the claimant voluntarily appears seeking relief a determination of the referee, disallowing the claim unless the claimant surrenders to the trustee preferences in accordance with section 57-g of the Bankruptcy Act, is a valid adjudication of the facts involved in a subsequent suit by the trustee to recover the preferences, in so far as it was necessary for the referee to consider the facts. *McCluch v. II. EXPRESS POWERS.

a. To make adjudications or dismiss petitions.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Subdivision 1 confers upon referees the power to consider petitions in bankruptcy referred to them by the clerk and to make adjudications or dismiss the petitions. This clause has reference to petitions in bankruptcy which have been referred by the clerk to a referee when the judge is absent from the judicial district, or division of the district in which the petition is pending, as provided by § 18-f of the act.¹⁶ In such cases the referee has jurisdiction to make the adjudication or dismiss the petition. This refers to involuntary as well as voluntary cases, and charges the referee with a distinct duty, which, where a petition does not show the jurisdictional facts, should result in a dismissal. A referee cannot, however, grant an adjudication in any other case.¹⁷ The form used should be an adaptation of Forms Nos. 11 and 12.

(2) GENERAL ORDER XII.¹⁸—The Supreme Court has supplemented the statute with a rule which is in turn supplemented by the terms of Forms Nos. 14 and 15. The first paragraph of this general order requires the court to fix a day upon which the bankrupt shall attend before the referee, and provides that from that day the bankrupt shall be subject to his orders and that all proceedings shall thereafter be before the referee. This has sometimes been thought to withhold jurisdiction from the referee until the day set. The better opinion is that—the limitation on jurisdiction imposed being clearly against the manifest purpose of the statute to vest the referee with complete jurisdiction at once the order of reference is made—he immediately has power to exercise any of the functions or perform any of the duties prescribed, and even before the order of reference is actually received. The second paragraph of this general order is of little importance. Referees invariably fix the times and places when they will act. It would be both confusing and impracticable if the judges did so. In important districts the referee's court has a stated place for sittings, often specified by a standing order, and frequently in courtrooms or chambers set apart for them in the local Federal building; the time is specified either by a general order or in each notice or order.

(3) PRACTICE AFTER REFERENCE IN INVOLUNTARY CASES.—On receiving or making an adjudication in an involuntary case, the referee should forthwith enter and have served on the bankrupt an order directing him to prepare and file his schedules as required by § 7 (8),¹⁹ this that the case may be presently proceeded with, or, the bankrupt, if recalcitrant, reported in con-

Compare In re Scott (Ref., Mass.) 7 Am. B. R. 35, wherein it was held that, after an adjudication of bankruptcy, the referee has original jurisdiction to entertain a creditor's petition to dismiss the proceedings upon the ground that the bankrupt was not at the time of the filing of his petition a resident of the district.

See also Am. B. R. Dig., § 73.

17. For effect of erroneous adjudication, if jurisdictional question is not promptly raised, see In re Polakoff (Ref., N. Y.), 1 Am. B. R. 358; In re Ohlsdell (D. C., N. Y.), 4 Am. B. tempt. Where the bankrupt is absent or has absconded, it is customary first to call on his attorneys of record, if any, to prepare and file such schedules. Where he has none or they have not the facts to do this—the practice suggested by General Order IX being usually out of the question—the practice has grown up of issuing subpoenas to any or all persons who seem likely to know of the bankrupt's business affairs and, after an examination of them and the debtor's books, to make out as complete schedules as possible. To this end, the referee, who is charged with this duty,²⁰ usually drafts the attorneys of the petitioning creditors as his assistants. Schedules so prepared should be in triplicate, but need not be verified; they will often require amendment. Not, however, until they are prepared and filed, should a first meeting be called. The expense of this preliminary proceeding is chargeable to the estate.

b. Power to administer oaths, conduct examinations, etc.—Subdivision 2 of this section grants to referees the power to administer oaths, examine witnesses, require production of documents and generally to conduct examinations. These powers would also flow from subdivision 4. The previous statute gave similar, though not as comprehensive, functions to the register.²¹ Subpoenas are not to be issued by the referee under any circumstances, but by the clerk.²² The power to swear witnesses is distinct from that conferred on referees to administer the oaths "required by this act" by § 20-a (1).²³ The formula used in swearing witnesses is similar to that in the local courts, but its phraseology should always be adapted to the proceeding or trial in which the witness is sworn. The power expressly conferred upon referees by subdivision 4 to perform "such part of the duties except, etc., as are by this act so conferred on courts of bankruptcy and as shall be prescribed by rules or orders of the courts of bankruptcy of their respective districts," has been thought sufficient to authorize them to pass upon the competency, relevancy, or materiality of any question considered in the course of an examination.²⁴ Rules have been promulgated in several of the districts conferring power in this regard.²⁵ The weight of authority seems now to favor the rule that a referee acting as such, or as a special commissioner may not exclude evidence which he deems inadmissible; it is his duty under General Order XXII to receive the evidence which is offered, to note objections and to record the evidence.²⁶ But this is clearly subject to the exception that evidence should not be permitted to be introduced, or its production compelled, where it is plainly privileged or so clearly and affirmatively incompetent.

R. 41, 146 Fed. 89, holding that the Bankruptcy Law expressly authorizes an oath to be administered by a referee in bankruptcy to a witness appearing voluntarily or under compulsory process to give testimony in support of claims presented by alleged creditors.

26. Power to exclude evidence.—Bank of Ravenswood v. Johnson (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 16 Am. B. R. 206, 143 Fed. 463; In re Romine (D. C., W. Va.), 14 Am. B. R. 723, 114 Fed. 328; First National Bank of Philadelphia v. Abbott (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 436, 165 Fed. 862. But in Matter of Wilde's Sons (D. C., N. Y.), 11 Am. B. R. 714, 131 Fed. 142, it was held that a referee in bankruptcy, whether acting in his charac-irrelevant and immaterial that such introduction or production would be an abuse of the process of the court.²⁷ If the proceeding is one originally instituted before the referee, as for the discovery of concealed assets, it has been held that he has full power to exclude irrelevant testimony, and that General Order XXII does not prevent the exercise of such power in such a proceeding.²⁸ And in any case the referee should determine, in the first instance, the question of the witness' competency or the admissibility of his testimony; he should certify the question to the court when requested to do so in a proper manner; such a method of procedure will tend to expedite the proceeding and avoid confusion.²⁹ The requirement in such general order that the testimony of a witness must be read over to him and be signed, does not exclude or render useless testimony given under oath; but upon the death of the witness before signature it may be proven by the oath of the stenographer who reported it, or by a witness who heard it.³⁰ If a referee fails to include rejected evidence with objections noted, the remedy is an application to the district court, or failing there, to the circuit court of appeals for an order that such evidence be taken and preserved.³¹ Documents may be ordered in the usual way. When the bankrupt is present, the direction is often verbal. If he is not present, or the document is in the possession of a third person, a subpoena duces tecum, or an order to the same effect, is customary.³² The concluding clause of this subdivision reserves to the judges the right to commit, and doubtless, therefore, to attach a balky witness.³³

c. Power to seize and release property.—Subdivision 3 seems to refer to a power to seize and hold property conferred upon the judge by § 69. A like power is suggested by § 3-e; and it seems, given by § 2 (15). This subdivision will, however, probably be construed as such a limitation on the general words of the two sections last mentioned as to prohibit the referee from exercising this jurisdiction, save in cases where the clerk has issued a certificate showing the inability of the judge to act for one of the reasons specified.^{33a} The power is an important one in involuntary cases.³⁴ It is ter as referee or as special commissioner, has a right to exclude evidence which he deems inadmissible.

Duty to take all testimony.—It is the duty of examiners, masters, referees, and the court taking evidence in controversies in bankruptcy, in the absence of a jury, to take, record, and, in case of an appeal, to return to the reviewing court, all the evidence offered by either party, that which they hold to be incompetent or immaterial as well as that which they deem competent and relevant, to the end that if the appellate court is of the opinion that evidence rejected should have been received it may consider it, render a final decree, and thus conclude the litigation without remanding the suit to procure the rejected evidence. Missouri Electric Co. v. Hamilton Brown Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 270, 272, 185 Fed. 283.

stituted before him to compel a bankrupt to turn over concealed assets, acts in a judicial capacity, being regarded as a judicial officer, invested with the same powers and duties in bankruptcy matters as a district judge, and having full power to exclude irrelevant testimony.

33. See Bankruptcy Act, § 41. See also Am. B. R. Dig., §§ 1164, 1165.

33a. "Division of the district."—A referee is not authorized to exercise the powers of a judge when the latter is absent from the territorial jurisdiction of the referee, which is usually a county. The phrase "or the division of the district" as used in said section does not apply to the jurisdictional limits of a referee but to a division of a district for the purpose of holding court. Matter of Veles (D. C., Porto Rico), 39 Am. B. R. 307, 9 P. R. Fed. 404.

34. In re Knopf (D. C., S. Car.), 16 Am. B. R. 432, 144 Fed. 245, holding that the referee may make a summary order authorizing the seizure of property in the hands clear that this provision of the Bankruptcy Act refers to the appointment of receivers, or the releasing of property, in involuntary cases, and is to be read in connection with section 18-f.³⁵ It is apparently the only instance where the referee as such has jurisdiction before an order of reference. Perhaps the clerk's certificate has the effect of such an order.

d. Power to exercise generally the statutory jurisdiction of the judge, except in certain matters.— (1) IN GENERAL.—The referee is given, by subdivision 4, power "to perform such duties, except, etc., as shall be prescribed by the rules and orders of the courts of bankruptcy in their respective districts, except as herein otherwise provided." The exact effect of the words "and as shall be prescribed," etc., has not yet been authoritatively declared. "Jurisdiction" and "duties" are, of course, widely different things. While a court of bankruptcy may direct referees to perform "duties" not enumerated in § 39, it cannot by rule confer a "jurisdiction" it does not itself have. Further, this clause occurs in a section devoted to the "jurisdiction of referees." It seems to follow that "duties" is here used in the sense of jurisdiction; and, therefore, that to be vested with jurisdiction other than that expressly conferred by this section or charged with duties other than those set out in § 39, referees must be given such jurisdiction by a standing or special rule of the district court.³⁶ The question is not without difficulty and the opposite view seems sometimes to be taken for granted. It is not, however, often important. The district courts have quite generally supplied the necessary rule.³⁷ It seems that the word "herein" refers to the whole statute.³⁸ Under this clause, it has been held that the referee may grant stays,³⁹ appoint receivers,⁴⁰ issue summary orders to compel restitution of property,⁴¹ of an alleged fraudulent vendee, where it is necessary for the preservation of such property.

Taking possession and releasing property.—Referees in bankruptcy are invested, subject always to a review by the judge, within the limits of their district as established from time to time, with jurisdiction to exercise the powers of the judge for taking possession and releasing of the property of the bankrupt, in the event of the issuance by the clerk of a certificate showing the absence of the judge from the judicial district, or the division of the district, or his sickness or inability to act. Darrough v. First National Bank of Claremore (Okla. Sup. Ct.), 37 Am. B. R. 75, 156 Pac. 191.

36. General Order XII (1). And see In re Sabine (Ref., N. Y.), 1 Am. B. R. 315, for a case where jurisdiction to stay was exercised before there was any rule giving it.

The duties of a referee do not begin until the case has been referred to him, and his jurisdiction, therefore, includes only such parts of the bankruptcy jurisdiction of the District Court as are carried by the reference. Matter of Weidhorn (D. C., Mass.), 39 Am. B. R. 338, 243 Fed. 756.

Where the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction, the referee has also jurisdiction except when the case is referred to him for a special purpose, or where the bankrupt asks to be adjudged a bankrupt or seeks a discharge. Matter of Brenner (D. C., Pa.), 26 Am. B. R. 646, 649, 190 Fed. 209.

37. Thus, the following rule was early promulgated in the Northern District of New York, and adopted by the Western District of the same State:

XXVI. Powers delegated to referees.—The referees heretofore or hereafter appointed for the Northern District of New York are hereby, respectively, vested with the jurisdiction which, by the Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, and the general orders of the Supreme Court, promulgated at the October term of 1898, the court or judge may delegate to or confer upon said referees; and they are, respectively, empowered and authorized to do all acts, take all proceedings, make all orders and decrees, and perform all duties so authorized to be delegated by said act, and said general order, without special authority in each case and under the general authority conferred by this order.

See also Am. B. R. Dig. § 76.

Surrender of property.—To justify an order that a bankrupt pay over money or deliver property to his trustee, the referee should find as a fact that the bankrupt, since filing his petition, had concealed and withheld from the trustee property belonging to the bankrupt estate. In re Felson (D. C., N. Y.), 10 Am. B. R. 716, 124 Fed. 288. The referee or the district court may compel bailees or agents of the bankrupts to surrender property. Matter of Cohn (Ref., Cal.), 18 Am. B. R. 786.

It is proper practice for a trustee to apply to a referee for an order to compel the bankrupt to turn over assets and after his finding to review it, if so advised, by filing with him a petition for review by the district judge, as provided by General Order XXVII. Matter of Nanken (C. Compelling restoration of assets.—Where the treasurer of a bankrupt corporation submits to the jurisdiction of the referee in attempting to establish a claim against the bankrupt, jurisdiction is thereby acquired to make an order under proper circumstances compelling him to turn over money improperly withdrawn from the treasury of the bankrupt. Matter of Auto Safety Signal Lamp Co. (D. C., Pa.), 37 Am. B. R. 17, 237 Fed. 299. Where property was in the bankrupt's possession, under a claim of ownership by him at the time when his voluntary petition in bankruptcy was filed and adjudication thereon occurred, the referee may entertain summary proceedings to compel the restoration of such property or its value to the bankruptcy officials. Matter of First (D. C., Mass.), 37 Am. B. R. 512.

Determination of validity of claims or liens.—The power to determine the extent, character, or validity of claims or liens asserted against property in the hands of the bankruptcy court is necessarily broad. Hence, where a holder of bonds issued by the bankrupt appeared in response to a petition by the trustee to determine the validity of all liens, and litigated the question of the validity of the bonds, the referee had jurisdiction. Matter of Valecia Condensed Milk Co. (D. C., Wis.), 37 Am. B. R. 504, 233 Fed. 173.

Determination of fact of possession.—A referee may determine upon conflicting testimony whether property claimed by the trustee has or has not come into the possession of a third party. This because no question of the "right to possession" is thus determined. Matter of Kramer and Muchnick (D. C., Pa.), 33 Am. B. R. 223, 218 Fed. 138.

an order authorizing the trustee to intervene in an attachment suit for the purpose of maintaining it for the benefit of the bankrupt estate.⁴⁸ A referee, in the exercise of functions pertaining to a court of bankruptcy, may entertain plenary jurisdiction over suits or proceedings for the setting aside of preferences,⁴⁹ or the recovery of property fraudulently transferred.⁵⁰ A referee is not vested with power to order the trustee to specifically perform a contract of the bankrupt,⁵¹ nor has he jurisdiction to compel the specific performance by third persons of an agreement with the bankrupt.⁵² And a plenary proceeding should be brought on the equity side of the court for the reformation of a contract entered into by the bankrupt.⁵³ The numerous functions of a court of bankruptcy which, through this subdivision, may be performed by the referee are pointed out in the "cross-references." For the law and practice in the exercise of them, reference should be had to the appropriate sections of this work.

54. Specific performance.—A referee in bankruptcy has no jurisdiction of a suit by the trustee to compel the specific performance of an agreement by promoters of a corporation to issue stock to the bankrupt in payment for services. Matter of Ballou (D. C., Ky.), 33 Am. B. R. 21, 215 Fed. 810, holding that section 23b of the bankruptcy act providing that "Suits by the trustee shall only be brought or presented in the courts where the bankrupt, whose estate is being administered by such trustee, might have brought or prosecuted them if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted, unless by consent of the proposed defendant," except suits under sections 60, 67 and 70, does not confer jurisdiction upon a referee of a suit by a trustee to compel specific performance of an agreement between promoters of a corporation and the bankrupt. The word "courts" in said section does not include a court of bankruptcy.

55. Holding that an application to reform a contract made to a referee in bankruptcy, with request that if he thinks he lacks jurisdiction to entertain it he should forward it to the court, does not bring the matter before the court in a proper manner. Matter of Bondurant Hardware Co. (D. C., Ga.), 37 Am. B. R. 308, 231 Fed. 247.

applications for discharges are original questions for the court,⁵⁷ and the referee has no jurisdiction to decide any question unless it has been referred to him.⁵⁸ The words of the subdivision extend such limitation not only to applications for discharge or composition, but "to questions growing out of" the two specified proceedings. Thus, a referee has no jurisdiction over a proceeding for the revocation of a discharge or for setting aside a composition.⁵⁹ This limitation in actual practice is often one of nomenclature rather than fact. As previously observed, save when a jury trial is had, on objections to a discharge the referee usually sits on the case as a special master in chancery, and reports the facts and his opinion to the court for its guidance.⁶⁰ The practice on such references is discussed under § 14, ante.

(3) POWER OF REFEREE TO GRANT INJUNCTIONS.—The third paragraph of General Order XII supplements subdivision 4 of this section and withdraws jurisdiction from referees to grant injunctions to stay proceedings of a court or officer of the United States or of a State.⁶¹ Where the rules adopted by the district court negative the right of a referee to issue injunction orders, such power does not exist.⁶² But the referee may have jurisdiction to issue injunctions, directed to any party not an officer of the United States or of a State, unless the injunction stays the proceedings of the court.⁶³ In some districts it is the custom for referees to grant temporary injunctions returnable before the judge.⁶⁴

A referee, as a special master, upon the hearing of a specification of objections to a discharge, should not base a finding upon the original examination of the bankrupt before him as referee. In re Murray (D. C., Conn.), 20 Am. B. R. 700, 162 Fed. 983.

Objecting to discharge.—The referee cannot, of his own motion, raise objections to the bankrupt's discharge. Matter of Walsh (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 43 Am. B. R. 266, 256 Fed. 653.

60. See discussion under Section Fourteen of this work.

61. "The reason for section 2 of General Order XII seems to me to be obvious; the Supreme Court had in mind the dignity of other courts, Federal and State, and of other officers, and provided that they might only be interfered with by a tribunal of equal rank, and not by a subordinate official, unless for definitely described reasons action by the latter should be unavoidable." In re Berkowitz (D. C., Pa.), 16 Am. B. R. 251, 143 Fed. 598.

62. In re Siebert (D. C., N. J.), 13 Am. B. R. 348, 133 Fed. 781. In this case it was held that, if, by consent of the parties in a case, the referee acquires jurisdiction to hear a motion for injunction, he may hear it, and advise the judge of his decision by filing it with the clerk of the court. The judge of the court, and he only, may then, if the decision of the referee be that an injunction should issue, make an order for injunction. The referee may also, without consent of the parties, in order to prevent injury to the property of the bankrupt, grant a temporary stay of judicial proceedings; but such stay should be but for a few days, and only until the applicant can have an opportunity to move for an injunction before the judge.

63. In re Steuer (D. C., Mass.), 5 Am. B. R. 209, 214, 104 Fed. 976, 980, approved in In re Berkowitz (D. C., Pa.), 16 Am. B. R. 251, 143 Fed. 598. See also Am. B. R. Dig. § 77.

An injunction granted by the referee will be sustained where the parties have submitted to him for disposition the question at issue between them. In re Benjamin (D. C., Pa.), 15 Am. B. R. 351, 140 Fed. 320.

Injunction re-issued by court.—Where a district court upon its own motion broadens and issues anew an injunction restraining the prosecution of a suit in a state court, it is immaterial whether the referee had authority to order the stay in the first instance. In re Roger Brown & Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 28 Am. B. R. 336, 196 Fed. 758.

A referee, acting as special master, has no authority, and none can be granted to him by the court, to make an order in the nature of an injunction. Matter of Gordon (D. C., Cal.), 41 Am. B. R. 500, 250 Fed. 798.

Ejectment proceedings.—Where at the time of the appointment of a receiver in bankruptcy the bankrupt was in possession of premises under a written lease and the lessor had instituted ejectment proceedings in the State court, alleging a breach of condition, it was proper for the referee to temporarily enjoin said proceedings in order to give the receiver an opportunity to decide whether or not to defend and try to retain the lease for the benefit of the estate. Matter of Lombardy Inn Co., Inc. (D. C., Mass.), 44 Am. B. R. 44.

64. See In re Sabin (Ref., N. Y.), 1 Am. B. R. 315; In re Rogers (Ref., Ky.), 1 Am. B. R. 541; In re Siebert (D. C., N. J.), 13 Am. B. R. 348, 133 Fed. 781; In re Mussey, 2 N. B. N. Rep. 113.

(4) EMPLOYMENT AND COMPENSATION OF STENOGRAPHERS.—The meaning of subdivision 5 of this section would seem to be that a referee in bankruptcy may make use of the services of a stenographer, when the trustee considers that the testimony should be taken, and that in such case the rate is fixed, but this rate has nothing to do with the employment of a stenographer on isolated and unusual occasions, where, at the request of the creditors or of the receiver, a special hearing is had before a special commissioner.⁶⁵ The purpose of this subdivision is clear—to permit the use of modern methods in preserving testimony. But, strictly, a stenographer will not be employed save “upon the application” of the trustee,⁶⁶ or where there has been a stipulation of the parties or money has been deposited for the expense as provided by General Order X;⁶⁷ though, it seems, the necessary expense of a referee in perpetuating testimony may be called for in advance, and is probably an expense of administration.⁶⁸ In a proper case,⁶⁹ the referee will doubtless direct the trustee to make such an application. Where the taking of the testimony was necessary to the estate or resulted

65. Matter of Stark (D. C., N. Y.), 18 Am. B. R. 467, 155 Fed. 694, holding that the provisions of section 38, subdivision 5, do not apply to hearings before a special commissioner.

Discretion of referee.—Whether the testimony of a bankrupt, upon the hearing of an application by the trustee to compel him to turn over certain property, shall be heard orally, taken in long hand or by a stenographer is within the discretion of the referee. Matter of Goldstein (D. C., N. Y.), 19 Am. B. R. 96, 155 Fed. 695.

66. Expense of a stenographer cannot be allowed to a referee, except where he is employed upon the application of the trustee under section 38, and a referee's allowance to himself of $250 for stenographer's fees in “adjustment, correspondence and notices in matters of claims and other business of the state,” should be disallowed as unauthorized. In re Mammoth Pine Lumber Co. (D. C., Ark.), 8 Am. B. R. 651, 116 Fed. 731.

An allowance made to stenographers for services in taking testimony in proceedings before the referee commented upon, and the allowance reduced to forty cents per page for three copies of testimony. In re Ellett Electric Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 28 Am. B. R. 453, 197 Fed. 400.

Although under section 38, subdivision 5, an examination of the bankrupt and the employment of a stenographer therefor may, as a general rule, be allowed at the expense of the estate, that should not be allowed for the benefit of general creditors at the expense of the wages claims of workmen objecting thereto, when the funds in hand are only sufficient to pay the preferred claims. Such expenses should be at the charge of the general creditors alone. In re Rozinsky (D. C., N. Y.), 3 Am. B. R. 830, 101 Fed. 229.

Charges for clerk hire and stationery may be disallowed to the referee, there being no voucher for the stationery and the employment of the clerk by the referee being unauthorized by statute. In re Carolina Cooperage Co. (D. C., N. Car.), 3 Am. B. R. 184, 96 Fed. 950.

67. Stipulation as to payment of stenographer's fees.—In re Mammoth Pine Lumber Co. (D. C., Ark.), 8 Am. B. R. 651, 116 Fed. 731; In re Todd (D. C., N. Y.), 6 Am. B. R. 8, 109 Fed. 265. In this case the court said: “The rule established by the late Mr. Justice Blatchford in this court, and ever since followed in regard to stenographer's fees, was that when not provided for by law, they could not be taxed in any cause, except upon a written stipulation between the attorneys. Such has been the uniform practice in this court, the attorneys usually dividing and paying the expense of taking and transcribing the stenographer's notes, and taxing in accordance with the stipulation in favor of the successful party the sums paid by him for his share of the notes.”

Agreement as to appointment and payment of stenographer.—Where the petitioning creditors and the alleged bankrupt agreed that the testimony should be taken before the referee by certain stenographers, and that each side should pay one-half of the expense thereof, but no order was made by the referee, it must be impliedly agreed that the stenographer's bill for taking the testimony and furnishing a transcript to the referee should go into the costs against the losing party. But such agreement does not cover the cost of a transcript of the testimony ordered by a party for his own use. Matter of Pearce (D. C., Mass.), 37 Am. B. R. 710, 235 Fed. 917. See Am. B. R. Digest, §§ 79, 284.

68. See General Orders X and XXXV(2): § 64-b(3).

69. Compare In re Todd (D. C., N. Y.), 6 Am. B. R. 88, 109 Fed. 265.

to its advantage, such an order can, it is thought, be made nunc pro tunc. The subdivision is also often supplemented by district or referee district rules.⁷⁰ The exigencies of speedy administration and the multitude of cases which have arisen in important jurisdictions early made the employment of regular stenographers imperative. It is thought that the very liberal interpretation of this subdivision thus far prevailing will continue. The method of taking testimony is prescribed by General Order XXII.

70. Thus, in the Western District of New York:

Rule 11. Perpetuation of testimony.—(1) The examination of the bankrupt and any witnesses at meetings of creditors or otherwise, and all testimony offered on contested claims, or for any other purpose, will be taken down by the official stenographer in the form of question and answer, and transcribed. One copy thereof will be inserted in the record book of the referee and the other copy will be delivered to the trustee. The expense of thus perpetuating testimony will be at the rate of ten cents (10c.) a folio for both copies, and shall be paid as follows: Where there are no assets, for one reasonable examination on one day, by the bankrupt, and thereafter by the creditor or party in interest for whose benefit or at whose request such examination is had; where there are assets, as may be ordered by the referee in each particular case.

(2) After the testimony has been transcribed, the attorney in charge of the case will produce each witness before the referee, that such testimony may be signed, as provided in General Order XXII.

(3) If indemnity is not demanded, all moneys advanced by the referee in publishing or mailing notices, or for traveling expenses, or for procuring the attendance of witnesses, or in perpetuating testimony, or otherwise, shall be paid to the referee prior to, or at the time, application is made to him for the report or certificate called for by District Rule X (that on the bankrupt's application for a discharge).

SECTION THIRTY-NINE.

DUTIES OF REFEREES.

§ 39. Duties of Referees.—a Referees shall (1) declare dividends and prepare and deliver to trustees dividend sheets showing the dividends declared and to whom payable; (2) examine all schedules of property and lists of creditors filed by bankrupts and cause such as are incomplete or defective to be amended; (3) furnish such information concerning the estates in process of administration before them as may be requested by the parties in interest; (4) give notices to creditors as herein provided; (5) make up records embodying the evidence, or the substance thereof, as agreed upon by the parties in all contested matters arising before them, whenever requested to do so by either of the parties thereto, together with their findings therein, and transmit them to the judges; (6) prepare and file the schedules of property and lists of creditors required to be filed by the bankrupts, or cause the same to be done, when the bankrupts fail, refuse, or neglect to do so; (7) safely keep, perfect, and transmit to the clerks the records, herein required to be kept by them, when the cases are concluded; (8) transmit to the clerks such papers as may be on file before them whenever the same are needed in any proceedings in courts, and in like manner secure the return of such papers after they have been used, or, if it be impracticable to transmit the original papers, transmit certified copies thereof by mail; (9) upon application of any party in interest, preserve the evidence taken or the substance thereof as agreed upon by the parties before them when a stenographer is not in attendance; and (10) whenever their respective offices are in the same cities or towns where the courts of bankruptcy convene, call upon and receive from the clerks all papers filed in courts of bankruptcy which have been referred to them.

b Referees shall not (1) act in cases in which they are directly or indirectly interested; (2) practice as attorneys and counsellors at law in any bankruptcy proceedings; or (3) purchase, directly or indirectly, any property of an estate in bankruptcy.

1. MISCELLANEOUS DUTIES OF REFEREES.

a. In general.—Subsection a of this section prescribes the general duties of referees. There is nothing exactly similar to this section in previous statutes. Manifestly, it is in the nature of an appendix to § 38. Though captioned "Duties of Referees," some of its clauses confer jurisdiction.

The more important duties of referees are here enumerated. But the section is not exclusive,¹ even in its prohibitions stated in subsection b. The referee has many other duties. The only distinction between them and those here specified seems to be that, as to the former, he has some discretion; as to the latter, little, perhaps none. It is apparently the intent of the statute that the supervision of the administration of the bankrupt's estate be left with the referee.²

b. To declare dividends and prepare dividend sheets.—This duty is required by subdivision 1 of subsection a. The general subject of dividends is discussed under Section Sixty-five. In actual practice, dividend sheets are prepared by the trustee or his attorney, and checked over and verified by the referee. Form No. 40 may be used, or, better, a schedule somewhat like it, the same to be attached to and made a part of the formal order of distribution. By General Order XXIX, the referee is also required to countersign all dividend checks drawn by the trustee. Since the amendatory act of 1903, there must always be two dividends, if any.

c. To examine and amend schedules and lists of creditors.—This duty is an important one. It seems that the schedules are not a part of the petition.³ They must, however, conform substantially to the law⁴ and the forms.⁵ Thus, the court proper is not called upon to investigate the sufficiency of the schedules. The referee must. If they seem incomplete or defective, he should suspend further proceedings until they are amended.⁶ An opinion by the author of the first and second editions of this work in the case of *In re Mackey*⁷ is illuminating both as to the duties of the referee in such cases and concerning what are defects or omissions.

d. To furnish information.—Subdivision 3 of this subsection should be read in connection with § 29-c (3), though mere failure to furnish information other than as there specified is not an offense. This duty clearly refers to replies to letters of inquiry, as well as to answers to oral questions and permission to inspect papers on file. Replies to letters may be franked. But

6. Matter of Spiller (D. C., Mass.), 36 Am. B. R. 399, 230 Fed. 490, holding that the jurisdiction of the referee is not necessarily suspended pending the amendment of the schedules.

7. Duty of referee to examine schedules.—The provisions of section 39-a(2) as to the examination of schedules of property and lists of creditors is mandatory. It is the duty of the referee to make the examination and to order an amendment in case of defects or omissions, even though no interested party may move in the matter. Since an examination should be made immediately after the reference of the matter to the referee and prior to the meeting of creditors, in voluntary proceedings, at least, the examination should be made before many of the interested parties will, in the natural course of procedure, have entered their appearance. In re Mackey (Ref., N. Y.), 1 Am. B. R. 593.

it has been held that a referee is not required to furnish copies of papers.⁸ The duty here enjoined is often a burden. Some referees have adopted forms for answers, especially where information is sought concerning the total of claims shown and assets scheduled. The referee can be reimbursed for such specific expenses as are actually and necessarily incurred in giving the desired information.^{9a}

e. To give notices to creditors.—There is an unimportant conflict between subdivision 4 and § 58-c. The referee should give all notices. Some of the more common notices are specified in § 58-a, which see. General Order XVI prescribes another notice that the referee is supposed to give, but which in actual practice is rarely found necessary.⁹ As a rule, while the original notice must be signed by the referee, the clerical work of preparing and posting is done by the attorney in charge. In districts where no allowance was made for the giving of notices, such a practice has been necessary; if done by the referee, indemnity for the expense incurred can be demanded.¹⁰ Whatever the method, the "official business" envelope can be used. This subject is also considered under Section Fifty-eight.

f. To make up records and transmit them or copies to the clerk.—Subdivisions 5, 7 and 8 relating to records and papers are largely supplemented by § 42, which see. The size and completeness of the record book there prescribed varies in the different districts; in some it is a mere docket, with brief entries indicating the meetings held and orders granted; in others a detailed running account of the whole proceeding from day to day. Subdivision 7 requires the referee to keep records and to transmit them to the clerk when the case is concluded.¹¹ Subdivision 8 provides for the transmission to the clerk of such papers on file with the referee, or copies thereof, as shall be needed in the court proper before the whole case is sent up as provided in the previous subsection. By General Order XXIV, referees are also required to transmit forthwith to the clerk a list of claims proven. This is an inheritance from the law of 1867,¹² does not fit into the present system of administration, serves no useful purpose, and is rarely observed.¹³ The referee is also required to file monthly statements of disbursements with the judge.¹⁴

g. To prepare and file schedules in certain cases.—Section 7 (8) makes it the duty of the bankrupt to prepare, verify and file schedules of his property.¹⁵ If the bankrupt fails in this duty, subdivision 6 of this section requires the referee to prepare and file schedules of property and lists of creditors, or cause the same to be filed. We have already considered this duty of the referee under the preceding section.¹⁶

h. To preserve evidence when no stenographer is present.—The referee may determine whether testimony shall be heard orally, taken in longhand, or written out in the form of stenographer's minutes. If the bankrupt desires the testimony to be perpetuated, the obligation would seem to be on him to provide the means therefor.¹⁷ As indicated elsewhere,¹⁸ a referee has ample power to secure the attendance and assistance of a stenographer. This subdivision is, therefore, unimportant.

i. To call for papers at the clerk's office.—Subdivision 10 of this section is supplemented by section 51 (3), which should be read in this connection. Even in the same town or city, papers are transmitted by the clerk to the referee by mail.

II. PROHIBITIONS ON REFEREES.

a. Cannot act in cases where interested.—The general disqualification of persons who might otherwise be referees is mentioned elsewhere.¹⁹ A referee duly appointed cannot, however, act in all cases. What amounts to disqualification must be determined in each case.²⁰ Relationship by blood or affinity, even though remote, is usually enough. But owing a debt to the bankrupt,²¹ or, perhaps, being a scheduled creditor of the bankrupt, at least in a no-asset case, does not disqualify. A prior relation of attorney to the debtor, likewise, does not.²² Pending litigation with the bankrupt, it is thought, will. If disqualified, the referee should immediately file a certificate to that effect, stating the reasons for disqualification, with the clerk; and a reference will then be made to another referee. Disqualification sometimes does not appear until the case is far along, and then only in some single matter. In such cases, that matter may be considered by the judge, on receipt of this certificate, or he may refer it specially to another referee. A referee who acts in a case where he is interested commits an offense under the law, and forfeits his office.²³

b. Cannot practice in bankruptcy proceedings.—There was a similar prohibition under the law of 1867.²⁴ The limitation here seems to be on practice "in any bankruptcy proceedings." Under the former law, a register could not practice "in or out of court" in any suit or matter pending in his own district or circuit. The difference between the statutes in literal significance is great; in effect, there should be none. The propriety of giving counsel in pending bankruptcy questions, even in another district, may be doubted. General counsel to clients or other attorneys concerning questions not yet in court seems, however, not to be prohibited and may not be thought improper. There are as yet no cases construing this clause. A violation of this prohibition is not an offense.

c. Cannot purchase property of a bankrupt estate.—This provision is new, and requires no comment. The purchase of the property of a bankrupt

17. Payment of stenographer's fees.—Where, upon the hearing of an application by the trustee to compel the bankrupt to turn over certain property, the trustee has no funds, and the bankrupt claims to be absolutely without means, his motion that the trustee be directed to pay for the stenographer's minutes of the bankrupt's testimony and the referee's fees and disbursements will be denied. Matter of Goldstein (D. C., N. Y.), 19 Am. B. R. 96, 155 Fed. 695.

21. A debtor who owns an alleged bankrupt a debt which is not denied by the debtor, and whose status as a debtor cannot be changed by any of the proceedings in bankruptcy, and whose liability would be unaffected by such proceedings, is not disqualified to act as referee in proceedings against his creditor. Bray v. Cobb (D. C., N. Car.), 1 Am. B. R. 153, 91 Fed. 102.

estate, either directly or indirectly, by a referee is an offense whereby he forfeits his office and becomes liable to a fine of not to exceed five hundred dollars.²⁵

III. REVIEWS BY THE JUDGE.²⁶

a. In general.—Subdivision 5 of this section relating to records embodying the evidence seems to refer to such records as are needed on reviews, and should be read with General Order XXVII. Thus, a party to an order made by the referee, after hearing on the merits, cannot have a review of it, unless he pursues the mode prescribed by this general order.²⁷ It has been held, however, that notwithstanding the use of the word "creditor" in General Order No. 27, if the interests of several creditors are affected by the rulings or the allowances of the referee, a review should be taken by the trustee as their representative,²⁸ and that in case of a refusal by the trustee, the suitor's remedy is by a motion or petition filed with the court, asking that the trustee be ordered to take a review as to any questions of procedure or allowance.²⁹ A review should be asked by petition; if from an order, this is the only way.³⁰ In the absence of a petition the court is not authorized to review the action of the referee.³¹ A general review of the proceedings before the referee or a review of rulings not directly affecting an order made was not intended either by the bankruptcy act or the general order.³² Ordinarily a review by the judge will be confined to the errors pointed out in the petition,³³ and will be limited to the questions involved in the issues before the referee.³⁴ Where a referee dies after the entering of an order disallowing a claim, before perfecting his findings, the claimant is entitled to a review on both the facts and the law.³⁵

b. When review should be asked.—The time within which a review must be asked for is not specified either by the law or by the general orders.³⁶

General Order 27 does not fix the time within which petitions for review of orders of referees shall be taken. A compliance with a local rule, requiring that they be filed within ten days from the date of the order sought to be reviewed, is sufficient. Matter of Kruse (D. C., Iowa), 37 Am. B. R. 687, 234 Fed. 470.

As there are no terms in bankruptcy and

It is fixed in some districts by a standing rule.³⁷ In the absence of a rule the application should be made within a reasonable time. The cases are not uniform as to what constitutes a reasonable time; the time within which the petition is to be filed is discretionary with the court and will not be disturbed unless such discretion is abused;³⁸ it has been held that a petition for a review should be filed within the time fixed for an appeal from the same class of orders, and that this should be regarded as a reasonable time.³⁹ The right no provision in the Bankruptcy Act limiting the time within which an order of a referee in bankruptcy may be reviewed or an order of the District Court reheard, a petition for an order directing the trustee to pay over moneys collected pursuant to an order of the referee may be filed nine months after the granting of said order. Matter of Barker Piano Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 37 Am. B. R. 271, 233 Fed. 522.

37. In some districts a review must be asked within ten days. See Erie County (N. Y.), Rule 16, 1 N. B. N. 115; Matter of Isert (D. C., Cal.), 36 Am. B. R. 431, 232 Fed. 484; Matter of Jackson Light & Traction Co. (D. C., Miss.), 44 Am. B. R. 222.

The effect of a special district rule, taken in connection with General Order 27, was considered in Re Greek Manufacturing Co. (D. C., Pa.), 21 Am. B. R. 111, 164 Fed. 211, and the court decided that under the rule and the general order a decision of a referee may only be reviewed by petition, and that such petition must be presented within the period specified by the rule, or afterward only upon special allowance by one of the judges; otherwise, the referee's order (unless, perhaps, when it is obviously beyond his jurisdiction) is no longer subject to review after the ten days have expired. And it was also decided that an order once entered is not subject to be reviewed or altered by the referee himself. In re Leasher & Son (D. C., Pa.), 25 Am. B. R. 218, 176 Fed. 650. 38. Reasonable time, what constitutes.—Bacon v. Roberts (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 17 Am. B. R. 421, 146 Fed. 729, holding that a dismissal of a petition filed fifty days after the order should be sustained; In re N. Y. Economical Printing Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 697, 106 Fed. 839; In re Milgram (D. C., Pa.), 13 Am. B. R. 337, 133 Fed. 802, holding that three months was not a reasonable time; Crim v. Woodford (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 302, 136 Fed. 34; In re Foss (D. C., Me.), 17 Am. B. R. 439, 147 Fed. 790, holding that thirty days is a reasonable time; In re Grant (D. C., R. I.), 16 Am. B. R. 256, 143 Fed. 661, holding that a petition filed three and one-half months after the making of the order should be dismissed; In re Chambers (Ref., R. I.), 6 Am. B. R. 709, holding that a petition filed eighteen months after the decision should be dismissed.

Where, more than six months after the allowance of a claim and three months after a refusal to expunge the claim at the request of the trustee, the referee, upon the creditors' petition for a review of the order allowing his claim, filed a certificate presenting only his refusal to expunge, the certificate will be dismissed upon the ground that the petition for review was too late. In re Milgram (D. C., Pa.), 13 Am. B. R. 337, 133 Fed. 802.

Where a referee made and signed an order dated January 24, 1914, disallowing a claim, a petition for review filed February 3, and an amendment filed February 12, are in time. Matter of Wray (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 37 Am. B. R. 28, 233 Fed. 468.

Circumstances and conditions must be extreme which will excuse a delay of more than thirty days in asking for a review of an order of the referee; and where the only excuse offered for a delay of nearly five months in filing a petition to review an order disallowing a claim, is the pendency of an appeal, taken by another party from an order disallowing part of another claim, which prevents the closing and final settlement of the estate, the petitioner is not entitled to an order compelling the referee to make the certificate for review, required by General Order No. 27. In re Verdon Cigar Co. (D. C., Mich.), 27 Am. B. R. 56, 193 Fed. 813.

Effect of mistake in filing.—Where a petitioner to review an order of a referee in bankruptcy filed its petition by mistake with the clerk instead of the referee as required by General Order No. 27, in the absence of a special rule prescribing an express limitation of time for initiating proceedings for such review, an application for special leave to file its petition anew is addressed to the discretion of the district court, even though the ten days which it has been customary to allow for making such applications has elapsed. In re Nippon Trading Co. (D. C., Wash.), 25 Am. B. R. 695, 182 Fed. 952.

39. In re Nichols (D. C., N. Y.), 22 Am. B. R. 216, 166 Fed. 603.

The time to file a petition to review an order of a referee commences to run upon the entry of the order, and the right to review is not waived by a motion to open the hearing and produce further evidence, made before the signature or entry of the order. Matter of Place (D. C., N. Y.), 35 Am. B. R. 426, 224 Fed. 778. See also Matter of Wood (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 40 Am. B. R. 810, 248 Fed. 246.

to file such petition may not be so exercised as to unreasonably and unnecessarily delay the distribution of the assets of the bankrupt.⁴⁰ A person who is not a party to proceedings for review may not intervene several months after they were begun, and, upon the withdrawal of the petitioner, be substituted as a party.⁴¹

c. Order only reviewable.—It seems that a review can be asked only after the granting of an order,⁴² though it would seem that the referee may certify a specific question also.⁴³ A petition for a review of the "decision" of the referee would be defective.⁴⁴ The courts will properly hesitate to review an interlocutory order of a referee; such a practice tends to delay the final disposition of the controversy, and will not be encouraged.⁴⁵

d. Contents of petition.—The petition should clearly point out the error complained of, and ask a review.⁴⁶ The matters of law sought to be reviewed should be set out fully.⁴⁷ New facts may not be set up unless by express leave of the court, and this will not be granted unless the evidence is material and likely to produce a different result.⁴⁸

e. Effect of referee's decision on facts.⁴⁹—The position of the referee and his duties are analogous to those of a special master directed to take evidence and report his conclusions, and the rule applicable to a review of a referee's findings of fact must be substantially that applicable to a master's report.⁵⁰ Findings of fact by the referee are presumed to be correct until the contrary is shown, and the burden of proof rests with the persons objecting thereto.⁵¹

The findings of the master, concurred in by the court, are to be taken as presumptively correct, and will be permitted to stand unless some obvious error has intervened in the application of the law, or some serious or important mistake has been made in the consideration of the evidence, but are not

But findings, based on undisputed facts, which are set out in the record, are entitled to no presumption in their favor.⁵² No arbitrary rule can be laid down for determining the weight which should be attached to findings of fact by a referee or special master in bankruptcy. Much must depend upon the character of the findings.⁵³ But when there is neither pleading or proof respecting an issue a finding by the referee must be disregarded.⁵⁴ If the findings be deductions from established facts, they will not carry any great weight, for the judge, having the same facts, may as well draw inferences or deduce conclusions as the referee.⁵⁵ So, where the evidence is not in serious conflict, the court is not bound by the conclusions of the referee because the witnesses appeared before him and gave testimony.⁵⁶ But if the findings are based upon conflicting evidence involving questions of credibility and the referee has heard the witnesses much greater weight

Review of order dismissing petition in reclamation proceedings.—Where a referee has denied a petition by an alleged conditional vendor to reclaim chattels, all presumptions of evidence are in favor of the validity of his order, and the court must not assume that evidence with respect to any matter was given which would be inconsistent with the conclusion reached by the referee, unless such evidence is sufficiently set forth in the record. Matter of Farmers' Dairy Association (D. In re McDonald & Sons (D. C., S. Car.), 24 Am. B. R. 446, 178 Fed. 487, affd. 25 Am. B. R. 948, Brawley, district judge, said: "The rule is upon an appeal from a referee to accept his conclusions on questions of fact, unless the same are manifestly erroneous, and that is because he hears the testimony, can note the demeanor of witnesses, and is in a better position to determine the weight of the spoken words. If there was any conflict in the testimony, any question the determination of which was effected by the credibility of witnesses, I would refuse to disturb his conclusion. Such is not the case here, for there is no conflict in the testimony, and the case turns upon the inferences to be drawn from the proved or admitted facts, and I can no more escape drawing my own inference than from the performance of any other judicial duty."

Where the evidence is not in serious conflict, and the inferences drawn by the referee from a peculiar state of facts are not sufficiently supported by the evidence the court on review of the referee's order is not bound by his conclusions. In re People's Department Store Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 20 Am. B. R. 244, 159 Fed. 286; in this case Judge Hazel said: "Nor is the court bound by the conclusions of the referee because the witnesses appeared before him and gave testimony. The evidence is not in serious conflict, and the conclusions are principally based upon inferences to be drawn from a peculiar state of facts. The inferences drawn by the referee are not thought to be sufficiently supported by the evidence, and therefore there can be no valid objection to a decision based upon the facts and circumstances according to the judgment of this court."

In the case of In re Swift (D. C., Mass.), 9 Am. B. R. 237, 114 Fed. 947, Judge Low discusses the weight to be given to findings of fact made by a referee and intimates that where they depend upon inferences to be drawn from admitted facts, the court will exercise its own judgment as to whether such findings should be reversed. As to such findings he observes that the court may interfere although they are not "clearly erroneous."

Findings of referee not disturbed.—Thus, the findings of a referee, upon conflicting evidence, that the specifications of objections to a discharge have not been sustained cannot be disregarded where there is sufficient testimony to support them. In re Forth (D. C., N. Y.), 13 Am. B. R. 184, 151 Fed. 951; Matter of Black Lick Mining Co. (D. C., Pa.), 36 Am. B. R. 4.

Where a referee, upon conflicting testimony, determines the amount due a secured creditor, his finding should not be disturbed. In re MacKissic (D. C., Pa.), 22 Am. B. R. 817, 171 Fed. 269. So, a finding of a special master that a deed was in fact fraudulent will not be set aside unless clearly and manifestly erroneous. Fouche v. Shearer (D. C., Ga.), 22 Am. B. R. 828, 172 Fed. 592. Decision of referee, allowing the bankrupt a rebate upon his purchases as against the creditor's claim, affirmed, although the court might not have come to the same conclusion. In re Douglass & Sons Co. (D. C., Conn.), 8 Am. B. R. 113, 114 Fed. 772. The court will not disturb the referee's findings of fact as to attorney's fees, except for manifest error. Matter of Atcherley (D. C., Hawaii), 25 Am. B. R. 827.

In the case of Matter of Utica Pipe Foundry Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 34 Am. B. R. 617, 221 Fed. 787, Judge Ray said:

"It has always been the practice of this court to adopt and approve the findings of the referee or special master on questions of fact, where there was a sharp dispute in the testimony, unless it clearly appeared that the finding and conclusion was either unsupported by the evidence or clearly against the weight of the evidence. It is not enough that the court thinks it might itself have arrived at a different conclusion. It must be satisfied on the record that the referee or special master was wrong in his conclusions. In this case this court cannot so say or find. It was a fair question of fact for the special master, who, as stated, saw and heard the witnesses, to decide."

Findings of fact, made upon conflicting evidence by a referee in bankruptcy, who heard and saw witnesses, and could thus judge of their credibility, will not be disturbed, unless by a clear preponderance of evidence it appears that the referee was not justified in his conclusions. In re O'Neill (D. C., N. Y.), 27 Am. B. R. 5, 189 Fed. 1010; In re Hodge (D. C., N. Y.), 30 Am. B. R. 522, 205 Fed. 824.

The weight given to a referee's findings applies more particularly to cases in which such findings are deducted from conflicting evidence and depend upon the credibility of witnesses and not to cases upon which inferences are to be drawn from facts established. In re Big Cahaba Coal Co. (D. C., Ala.), 25 Am. B. R. 761, 183 Fed. 662; Baumbauer v. Austin (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 385, 186 Fed. 260, revg. 24 Am. B. R. 750, 179 Fed. 966.

In re Swift (D. C., Mass.), 9 Am. B. R. 237, 118 Fed. 349, Judge Lowell said: "No precise quantitative weight is in this district sideration as those of a district judge upon conflicting evidence.⁵⁸ The bearing of the witness, his appearance, his general intelligence and deportment are, in many cases, as important in determining the truth of evidence as the words he uses, and therefore the court should not always set aside findings which do not conform to the written evidence.⁵⁹ Where the evidence is not reported the findings of the referee must stand unless they appear to be erroneous on the face of the certificate.⁶⁰ The findings of the referee are not conclusive upon the court as is a verdict of the jury or the findings of facts made by a judge in an action at law, where a jury has been waived.⁶¹ However it is proper for a assigned to the findings of fact made by a referee. If those findings are based largely upon the good or bad faith of witnesses seen and heard by the referee, this court will always bear in mind that the referee's means of judgment are in an important respect better than its own. If, on the other hand, the findings depend upon inferences to be drawn from admitted facts, this court's means of judgment are nearly as good as the referee's. The weight to be assigned to the referee's findings in the two cases supposed is by no means the same. No labor-saving formula will determine the weight of the findings, or show just how strongly the court must incline against it in order to reverse it. To say that the finding should not be set aside unless it is 'clearly erroneous,' 'manifestly erroneous,' 'so manifestly erroneous as to invoke the sense of justice of the court,' or 'unless it discloses prejudicial errors by the referee, some of which may, without exaggeration, be denominated gross' is to darken counsel, if more is meant than that the court will not set aside the finding unless it is deemed erroneous after due allowance for the circumstances under which it was made. Artificial and quantitative presumptions of fact are foreign to the spirit of the common law, and the introduction of these presumptions has been rare and unfortunate."

"It is the recognized rule of the federal courts—and especially in matters of bankruptcy—that on review of the decisions of a referee, based upon his conclusions on questions of fact, the court will not reverse his findings unless the same are so manifestly erroneous as to invoke the sense of justice of the court. This rule must, of necessity, be observed by the courts where the findings and conclusions of the referee are based upon conflicting testimony. He sees and hears the witnesses, and his vantage ground is much better than that of the court for determining the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of their testimony." In re Stout (D. C., Mo.), 6 Am. B. R. 505, 109 Fed. 794.

In Georgia the rule, that the finding of the referee on the facts will not be interfered with unless there is clear error, is particularly applicable to a finding as to good or bad faith on the part of the bankrupt in connection with his right to an exemption. In re West (D. C., Ga.), 8 Am. B. R. 564, 116 Fed. 767; In re Waxelbaum (D. C., Ga.), 4 Am. B. R. 120, 101 Fed. 228.

"The findings of fact by a special master who attended the examination of the witnesses, thus giving him an opportunity of seeing them testify, while not as conclusive as the findings of facts by a jury or a trial judge sitting as a jury, are very persuasive and if there is substantial testimony to sustain his findings uninfluenced by any mistaken conclusions of law they will not be disturbed by the court hearing the cause on a transcript of the evidence without opportunities to see the witnesses, and thus to judge of their credibility in the same manner as was enjoyed by the master." In re Harr (D. C., Wis.), 16 Am. B. R. 213, 143 Fed. 61. The findings of fact of a referee acting as special master, unless clearly erroneous will not be disturbed. Love v. Export Storage Co. (C. C. Effect of verdict of jury.—The findings of facts made by a referee where the referee is to hear and determine the action have the effect of a verdict of a jury. tive acts of referees, of which the approval of the choice of a trustee is a typical example, should not be disturbed by the court, unless a plain and injurious error of law or abuse of discretion is disclosed.⁶⁹

f. What must be certified for review.—The record usually consists of a certificate,⁷⁰ prepared and signed by the referee, which should state the question⁷¹ on which the review has been asked and the ruling of the referee, and, either in the certificate or in a schedule annexed to it, give the evidence or a summary of it,⁷² and a copy of the order,⁷³ if any. He is not required to certify objections made to his rulings upon the admissibility of evidence, where the reference was to ascertain facts above designed to aid the court in determining whether a bankrupt should be discharged.⁷⁴ All ambiguities are resolved against the person seeking the review, and the burden is upon him to make his right and the referee's error appear.⁷⁵ The practice in the several districts necessarily varies as to the formalities to be observed in seeking a review by the judge of the orders or other proceedings of a referee; in some districts it is held sufficient to set out the substance of the matter in dispute without requiring the filing of formal exceptions to the referee's findings or rules.⁷⁶ Documents also may be handed up; if so, they should be numbered and either referred to or summarized in the certificate. This subdivision implies that the evidence must be agreed upon by the parties to the review. It is presumable that, if they do not agree, the referee will either settle the record as justice requires or send up the whole case. He must make up this record himself. It seems he is entitled to no additional compensation for so doing. By analogy with other clauses of the law and the general orders, however, he is entitled to his expenses in preparing the same and to an indemnity therefor.⁷⁸

71. The precise question ruled upon must be certified; this requirement is not complied with by a mere transmission to the clerk of the notes of testimony, the referee's opinion and the creditor's petition for review. In re Kurtz (D. C., Pa.), 11 Am. B. R. 129, 125 Fed. 992.

Effect of insufficient report of referee.—Where, upon a petition for review of an order of a referee, his report does not state the facts with sufficient definiteness to enable the court to pass upon the questions which may arise, the case should be sent back to the referee, with instructions to grant a rehearing. Matter of Hawley, etc., Furnace Co. (D. C., Pa.), 32 Am. B. R. 635, 214 Fed. 500.

72. The procedure prescribed by section 39 of the act, and General Order 27, should be followed. It is not an "appeal," but a petition to review, and is heard upon the certificate of the referee and such evidence as he sends to the judge. "A case on appeal" and a "counter case" are not required. Matter of Humphreys (D. C., N. Car.), 34 Am. B. R. 655, 221 Fed. 997 (citing text).

General Order XXVII requires the referee to certify the question presented, "a summary of the evidence relating thereto, and the finding and order of the referee thereon." It has been held that the plain meaning of this order is to require the referee to make a summary of the evidence in order to save the judge "the labor of examining what is often a mass of testimony on many different questions, and of extracting so much as may be relevant to the point immediately in hand." In re Kurtz (D. C., Pa.) 11 Am. B. R. 129, 125 Fed. 992; Matter of Hook Smelting Co. (D. C., Pa.), 15 Am. B. R. 83, 125 Fed. 954. Petitioners should not be deprived of the opportunity to be heard upon questions of substantial right because the referee omitted to summarize the evidence. Crim v. Woodford (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 14 Am. B. R. 302, 126 Fed. 84.

The evidence taken before a referee should be taken and recorded, and in case of an appeal returned to the reviewing court; it should include that deemed irrelevant as well as that deemed competent, so that the appellate court may determine whether the evidence rejected should have been received. From this rule evidence clearly privileged or incompetent may be excepted. Missouri Elec. Co. v. Hamilton Brown Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 270, 165 Fed. 253.

Agreed statement.—The bankruptcy court will not review a determination of a referee on an agreed statement of facts made by the parties. Matter of Petersen (D. C., Nev.), 4 Am. B. R. 637, 252 Fed. 846.

g. Hearing of reviews.—The referee must certify up a review “forthwith.” It is usually brought on for hearing on notice of motion, and heard on any rule day, or, by consent of the judge, at any time.” The practice here is often fixed by district rules. Jurisdiction “to consider, confirm, modify, or overrule or return, with instructions for further proceedings,” is conferred on the district court by § 2 (10). The order then made is entered in such court and a copy of it, with the papers on review, transmitted to the referee.⁷⁸

III. Compensation on Reference to Two or More Referees, 683.I. COMPENSATION OF REFEREES IN GENERAL.¹

a. Comparative legislation.—In England, the registrars receive salaries, not fees.² Under previous laws in this country, the officers corresponding to the present referees have always been paid by fees, fixed sometimes by rules, sometimes by the statute, sometimes by both.³ The fee bills under the law of 1867 grew so long and proved so onerous that they were largely responsible for the repeal of that law.⁴ The difference between the two laws in this respect is marked; precedents will be found of little value. Then compensation depended largely on the number of hearings had and papers drawn; now, besides the fixed filing fee, the compensation of referees is determined by the number of claims proven and the amount of assets administered.

b. Under the original law.—Prior to the amendatory act of 1903, the inadequacy of the referee's compensation was conceded. Indeed, this condition was met in some districts by rules that went outside the law and authorized the collection of fees for filing and allowing claims and a per diem for hearings, or the like.⁵ The amendments of 1903 have made this practice no longer possible, whether or not previously excusable; and such rules, where in force, have, for the most part, been revoked. As the law stood originally, indeed, as it was interpreted and emphasized by General Order XXXV, a referee was entitled to compensation in the following ways and amounts only:⁶

R. 132, 111 Fed. 501. For another means to increase compensation, based doubtless on the practice under the law of 1867, see In re Dixon (D. C., Cal.), 9 Am. B. R. 145, 114 Fed. 675.

6. See in particular General Order XXXV (2).

(a) a filing fee of $10 in all cases save those in which a pauper oath accompanied the petition, and (b) one per cent. commission on all sums paid "as dividends and commissions."⁷ It was held that the term "dividends" did not include commissions on moneys paid secured creditors.⁸ The reasons behind these—in our jurisprudence—rather novel ways of compensating Federal judicial officers were apparent: the filing fee was intended to cover ordinary services in no-asset cases, the commission on dividends was a pro rata reward dependent, not, as in 1867, on work done, but on the results of that work. The amendments of 1903 are merely an extension of this general policy.

c. In pauper cases.—By analogy with the State laws applicable to pauper litigants, the statute permits the indigent bankrupt to secure the services of clerk, referee, and trustee without the payment of the filing fee. This subject and the cases considering it are discussed elsewhere.⁹

d. While sitting as special master.—Under this section it was formerly held that the referee was entitled to extra compensation where he acted as a special master.¹⁰ The contrary was also held.¹¹ But since the amendment of § 72 in 1903, increasing the compensation of the referee, and adding the stringent prohibition against the receipt or allowance of "any other or further compensation for their services than that expressly authorized and prescribed in the act," extra compensation will not be allowed,¹² especially in the absence of an appointment as special master.¹³ Where, however, a referee performs services, not within his statutory duties, but of value to the bankrupt estate as a going concern, he may receive compensation therefor.¹⁴

e. In compositions.—The referee receives one-half of one per cent. "on the amount to be paid to creditors" upon the confirmation of a composition.¹⁵

7. The purpose of the law-making power is indicated by the following quotation from the analysis of the bill in its last form:

"Referees will receive a petty filing fee and a small commission on the net amount realized by estates administered before them. This arrangement will interest them in securing prompt and economical administrations."

The case of In re Goldville Manufacturing Co. (D. C., S. C.), 10 Am. B. R. 552, 123 Fed. 679, does not hold to the contrary of this view. There the compensation was allowed because the service had been rendered before the act of 1903.

Additional compensation as special master.—The court will not hesitate, in cases where the business of the court demands it, to refer to a referee matters in bankruptcy not specially cognizable by him under the terms of a general reference. If, under the Act or the General Orders, provision is found for a permissive reference of such matters, no additional compensation will be allowed the referee. If, however, as to such special matters no authority or permission is found in the law for their reference to the referee as such, they will be referred to him, or to any other person specially qualified, as the circumstances may require, as special master, and the usual compensation allowed to special masters will be awarded. Matter of Langford, Felts & Myers (D. C., Cal.), 35 Am. B. R. 519, 225 Fed. 311.

15. For changes as to the trustee's fee in composition cases, see § 48, post.

In composition proceedings a referee is not entitled to compensation, as a special master, where he has held two meetings and has been well paid under the statute.

This standard of compensation has not been modified by the act of 1903. Whether "creditors" includes priority claimants is, perhaps, debatable.¹⁶ The "amount paid to creditors" includes the amount which the creditors are to receive as a result of the composition agreement, although part of the consideration is in obligations filed with the court, to be afterwards turned into money;¹⁷ it was not intended to limit the referee's commissions to money actually deposited for disbursement to creditors.¹⁸ In view of this situation where the actual disbursement was made by a referee who was appointed after the deposit was made, there should be an apportionment of the commission between the two referees in accordance with the services performed by each.¹⁹

II. COMPENSATION FOR SPECIFIED SERVICES.

a. Amendment of 1903.—As is indicated in the notes to this section, it was materially modified in respect to the compensation for certain services by the amendatory act of 1903. They have already been indicated. The reasons for them are clear. In brief, (a) the filing fee is increased, (b) commissions are reckoned on all moneys disbursed to creditors, not merely on dividends paid them, and (c) a small fee is allowed out of each estate for the filing and allowing of claims. These different kinds of compensation will be considered separately.

b. The filing fee.—The filing fee under this section as it now stands is $15 and is paid to the clerk at the time a petition is filed.²⁰ The clerk pays it to the referee within ten days after the case is closed. The word "closed" has been liberally construed in some districts, and the filing fee has been paid the referee at the end of one or two months, even if the case is not technically at an end.²¹

c. The claim fee.—This fee is already familiar in several important districts, where its collection has been authorized by rules. Its origin is doubtless in the commissioner's fee under the law of 1841.²² That officer's duty his fees amounting to forty dollars. In re Talton (D. C., N. C.), 14 Am. B. R. 617, 137 Fed. 178.

16. See Bankr. Act, § 64, generally. Compare discussion under this Section, sub-title, "Commissions on Disbursements to Creditors," post.

17. Matter of Batterman Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 36 Am. B. R. 695, 231 Fed. 699. See Am. B. R. Dig. § 96.

Deposit in lieu of cash.—Where a bankrupt upon application for the confirmation of a composition has filed with the court certain obligations in lieu of a portion of the cash deposit required, and has agreed with the court to pay costs and expenses the same as if the money were actually in court, the referee is entitled to his commissions based upon the amount to be paid. Matter of White & Co. (D. C., Ga.), 35 Am. B. R. 670, 225 Fed. 796, distinguishing Matter of Bacon & Sons (D. C., Ky.), 34 Am. B. R. 825, 224 Fed. 764 (revd. 36 Am. B. R. 390, 224 Fed. 764) and American Surety Co. v. Freed, 35 Am. B. R. 103, 224 Fed. 333.

Basis of fees on composition.—Where in a composition proceeding creditors are offered an option of 25 per cent. cash, or 100 per cent in the stock at par of a new corporation formed to take over the assets and business of the bankrupt, both offers are to be regarded as equivalent, and the referee's commissions should be computed on the basis of a 25 per cent. cash disbursement, in the absence of proof that the stock is worth more than the cash. Matter of Mills Tea & Butter Co. (D. C., Mass.), 37 Am. B. R. 711, 235 Fed. 815.

18. Kinkead v. Bacon & Sons (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 36 Am. B. R. 390, 230 Fed. 362, in which the court held that a referee is entitled to a commission of one-half of one per cent. on the amount "to be paid by the bankrupt to creditors" regardless of the fact that payment was not made directly by the bankruptcy court. The amount to be paid "may include sums to which certain note-holders were entitled by virtue of the composition proceedings." Matter of Carless Ice Co. (D. C., Miss.), 41 Am. B. R. 306.

was "to take the proof of debts and to take testimony to be used in the circuit or district court," and, for performing the former duty, something similar to the taking of a deposition, he was entitled to $1. Clearly, however, the referee, to earn this fee now, is not required or expected to draft or supervise the preparation of the proof of debt. The fee is intended merely to cover the extra time required in filing, allowing, and investigating claims.²³ The words "to be paid from the estate, if any, as a part of the cost of administration" are important. Thus, this fee is not chargeable to the creditor who files, and cannot be demanded in advance.²⁴ Nor is it payable where there are no assets. It is simply one part of "the cost of administration,"²⁵ and had priority with other disbursements within that phrase. The amount, twenty-five cents, is half the filing fee previously fixed by rule in a few important districts, and but a fourth of that allowed in still others. The words "every proof of claim" seems to mean that the fee will be earned even if the proof is on a debt entitled to priority or secured. It is equally clear that the charge is against the whole estate and not on the dividend of each claimant.

d. Commissions on disbursements to creditors.—The rate on disbursements to the creditors by the trustee is one per cent. The basis of the percentage is "all moneys disbursed to creditors by the trustee,"²⁶ and not upon the total assets received by the trustee,²⁷ and cannot be otherwise fixed by agreement with the creditors.²⁸ This means all sums which should be paid to creditors through the trustee, notwithstanding an outside agreement between the parties and attorneys.²⁹ The language covers, and evidently was intended to include, all moneys, lawfully disbursed by the trustee, and held by him as such, whether to creditors, secured or unsecured, or having priority, or to other persons. If to creditors it is immaterial whether the amounts lawfully paid them from the funds in court are paid as dividends or in satisfaction of a lien or liens on the fund.³⁰ No commissions are to be paid on moneys disbursed for other pur-tory Bill of 1903 (Report No. 1698, 57th

"The collection of this filing fee in advance seems to be permitted by the rules in many districts, though without apparent sanction of law. The suggested amendment ratifies this practice, which has not proven burdensome, while removing the chief objection to it—the requirement that the fee be paid as a condition of filing a claim at all—by requiring that such fee be paid as a cost of administration."

poses than to creditors.³¹ And where pledged property is sold in bankruptcy proceedings the referee is entitled to commissions only on the surplus.³² The referee is not entitled to commissions on sums paid by the trustee in the conduct or administration of the business of the bankrupt continued for the purpose of completing contracts partly executed by the bankrupt.³³ The omission of the words "to creditors" in a similar provision of § 48 is significant.³⁴ At any rate, the numerous cases defining the meaning of the word "dividends,"³⁵ which occurred here in the original law,³⁶ are no longer valuable.

e. "Full compensation."—The significance of these words is apparent. They have been dropped out of § 48.³⁷ Not so here. They are emphasized by § 72, considered later. A referee in bankruptcy, acting as such, is entitled to no fee, compensation, or emolument for any service performed in that Disbursements to lien holders.—Under section 40, as amended in 1903, allowing a one per cent. commission to referees "on all moneys disbursed to creditors by the trustee," a referee is entitled to commissions on the amount constructively disbursed by a trustee to lien holders out of the sum for which they have bid their security in. Varney v. Harlow (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 31 Am. B. R. 339, 210 Fed. 824.

Under the law, prior to the amendment of 1903, commissions were based upon the sums "to be paid as dividends and commissions." capacity, unless such fee is within the intendment of the section.³⁸ Thus a referee cannot charge extra compensation for his own services, merely because they are performed away from home.³⁹ But the fact that a referee in good faith agrees prior to a sale to accept a less amount as commissions than he is actually entitled to, is not a bar to his claim for the amount so stated.⁴⁰

f. Allowance for expenses.—Under General Order XXXV expenses necessarily incurred by referees in publishing or mailing notices, in traveling, or in perpetuating testimony, or other expenses necessarily incurred in the performance of their duties under the act, when allowed by special order of the judge, are not included in the full compensation allowed to referees under this section.^{40a} In some jurisdictions this has been held to authorize a charge for office expenses at a specified amount in each proceeding.⁴¹ The provision in regard to expenses of mailing notices, traveling and perpetuating testimony, refers to actual expenses; but a referee may make a general charge, which should be uniform in all cases, for blanks that may be used for notices to creditors, and for entering orders. He may make a similar charge for clerk hire, where the business is such that clerks are needed.⁴² Hotel bills and amounts paid stenographers may be allowed as expenses, when a detailed account thereof verified by the oath of the referee that they were necessarily and actually incurred, and showing the amount paid therefor, is returned to the bankruptcy court.⁴³

Matter of Capital Security Co. (D. C., Tenn.), 41 Am. B. R. 184, 251 Fed. 927.

III. COMPENSATION ON REFERENCE TO TWO OR MORE REFEREES.

The statute here needs no elucidation. When a case is transferred from one referee to another, or the order of reference is revoked before the case is concluded, or the proceeding has been specially referred, the judge is required to pro-rate "the fee and commissions." The words of these subsections have not been changed to fit the amendments to subsection a. The court has, however, ample power to pro-rate the new claim fee, without statutory authority, and, in given cases, will doubtless allow each referee twenty-five cents on each claim actually allowed by him.

Collateral attack on allowance.—The determination of expenses of a referee under the Bankruptcy Act is within the general jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court, which has power upon investigation to determine the actual expense of services performed and by order to authorize and charge therefor. Such orders and charges in conformity therewith cannot be collaterally attacked. Matter of McNeil Corporation (D. C., Mass.), 41 Am. B. R. 162, 249 Fed. 765.

Separate office.—Where a referee because of the amount of bankruptcy business is forced to maintain a separate office therefor, the cost thereof is an actual and necessary expense incurred by him in the performance of his duties, and payment thereof should be allowed. Matter of McNeil Corporation (D. C., Mass.), 41 Am. B. R. 162, 249 Fed. 765.

curity Co. (D. C., Tenn.), 41 Am. B. R. 184, 251 Fed. 927.

Cost of publication of notices upon an application for a discharge and for stationery are expenses properly chargeable to the bankrupt or his estate; but the referee is not entitled to charge for his own services. In re Dixon (D. C., Cal.), 8 Am. B. R. 145, 114 Fed. 675.

Allowances for publication, notice, hearings, clerk hire, etc., are unauthorized when made by the referee to himself without order of the judge. Matter of Lacey & Co. (D. C., Sup. Ct.), 35 Am. B. R. 231, 43 Wash. L. Rep. 434.

Standing rule.—The District Court may authorize a referee to employ a clerk, and allow an expense for stationery, office rent, light, heat, and telephone, and these authorizations may be made by standing rule or order as well as by special order in a particular case. United States v. Ward (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 43 Am. B. R. 711, 257 Fed. 372.

Expense of final meeting.—Where a referee in his discretion calls a final meeting after the acceptance of a composition by creditors has been confirmed by the court, expenses so incurred may be allowed. Matter of McNeil Corporation (D. C., Mass.), 41 Am. B. R. 162, 249 Fed. 765.

I. SCOPE OF SECTION.

While the referee is a court of original jurisdiction, he has not the power to commit for contempt.¹ Neither has the registrar in England,² or Canada,^{2a} nor had the register under the former law.³ Contempts in bankruptcy are, however, usually committed before the referee. Hence, it seems, this section. Were the law silent as to what are contempts before a referee, the latter is doubtless sufficiently a court⁴ to take notice of any contempt which might be so held if committed before the court proper. Congress having, however, defined what shall be contempts before referees, no acts or omissions not within the meaning of this section should be certified to the judge as contempts.⁵ This section sets forth the only authority conferred by the bankruptcy act for punishing for contempt in proceedings before a referee.⁶ But it should always be remembered that this section does not give bankruptcy courts broader powers to punish for contempt than are possessed by other Federal courts.⁷ The scope of the jurisdiction of a court of bankruptcy to punish a bankrupt for interfering with the bankruptcy proceedings, by giving false testimony and by failing to give correct information regarding the actual assets of his estate, depends upon the interference with that jurisdiction and not upon the injury to the public welfare and morals which is the basis of the crime of perjury.⁸

II. CONTEMPTS BEFORE REFEREES.

a. Disobedience or resistance of orders.⁹—(1) IN GENERAL.—The words of subdivision 1 are general. If it is an order that is disobeyed or resisted, it must be a "lawful" order.¹⁰ To "disobey or resist" will include any act in opposition to the order of the referee, which impedes or obstructs the performance of a duty, as where a person induces a bidder to withdraw his bid at a trustee's sale.¹¹ There is no such qualification of the words "writ" and "process;" yet the caution of the courts in asserting this remedy will probably make this omission immaterial. Disobedience may be charged of any one, bankrupt, creditor, or stranger. In most of the reported cases, the bankrupt has been haled to court on an order requiring him to surrender property belonging to his estate.¹² A bankrupt is not in contempt for disobedience of

11. Matter of Boyd (D. C., Tenn.), 26 Am. B. R. 497, 228 Fed. 1003, in which the court says: "I am constrained to conclude that to secretly buy off an actual bidder at a trustee's sale is an act of opposition to the order of the referee directing the sale, which impedes the trustee in its execution, and partially frustrates its primary purpose, and that hence it is to be regarded as a resistance thereto, as distinguished from a direct disobedience, coming within both the letter and the spirit of this inhibition."

12. Civil contempt.—An order on a bankrupt to turn over money to his trustee, if followed by a contempt proceeding, would be a civil contempt as distinguished from a criminal one. Henkin v. Fousek (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 40 Am. B. R. 701, 246 Fed. 285.

The act of a bankrupt in withholding property from his schedules or in concealing property from his trustee will not be punished as a contempt, but may be punished under section 29b in a regular criminal proceeding on indictment found. Matter of Elias (D. C., N. Car.), 39 Am. B. R. 441, 240 Fed. 448.

Effect of prior sentence for concealment.—The fact that a bankrupt has been indicted, tried and sentenced for concealing assets and has served out his term is no defense in a proceeding to punish him for contempt of an order to turn over the assets he concealed. Matter of Sobol, 39 Am. B. R. 252, 242 Fed. 487.

Commitment for contempt ordered.—Where a bankrupt, at the time the petition was filed against him, and when the subpoena was served, was in the exclusive possession of certain property, but which he claimed to be using as bailee, and which two or three days afterwards he delivered to the person claimed by him to be the real owner, and failed to comply with a subsequent order of the court directing him to turn it over to the receiver, he is guilty of contempt, and should be committed to jail upon further failure to deliver such property to the receiver. In re Pottelger (D. C., Pa.), 24 Am. B. R. 648, 181 Fed. 640.

Where the bankrupt, a woman, fails to account for a relatively large amount of goods which she had purchased prior to bankruptcy, to keep any books of accounts, and to make any explanation of the great discrepancies in the amount turned over to the trustee and the amount which she should have had on hand, and where the husband and son, who carried on business for her, have testified that they did not appropriate or have the goods or the money, she must either account for this money or pay the penalty of being committed for contempt until she accounts for and turns over to the trustee the sum which, after making all possible allowances in her favor, represents the amount unaccounted for. In re Deuell (D. C., Mo.), 4 Am. B. R. 60, 100 Fed. 633.

Where it appears that, upon a sale of property by a debtor within a month of his adjudication as an involuntary bankrupt, he turned over all the proceeds to his wife, she will be regarded as holding the money as his agent, and for disobedience of an order to turn over said money to his trustee, the bankrupt will be adjudged guilty of contempt, except as to such portion of said proceeds paid out by the wife, prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, to one to whom she was indebted on a note and presumably an adverse claimant. In re Middleman (D. C., Ky.), 19 Am. B. R. 45, 154 Fed. 160.

When a bankrupt has in his possession and control cash belonging to the bankrupt estate, the court may, within the meaning of the bankrupt act, make a "lawful order" directing him to turn the same over to the trustee, and on his failure to do so may commit him for contempt until he complies with the order. In re Purvine (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 2 Am. B. R. 787, 96 Fed. 192.

Where the property of a bankrupt estate is traced to the recent control or possession of the bankrupt, it is presumed to remain there until he satisfactorily accounts to the court for its disposition or disappearance. Evidence considered and held to justify the granting of an order committing the bankrupt to jail for disobedience of an order to pay over to his trustees certain money in his possession or under his control, though the bankrupt, by affidavit, denied that he had the money. In re Laaky (D. C., Ala.), 20 Am. B. R. 729, 163 Fed. 99.

Where, upon consideration of all the record of the bankrupts' testimony upon their examination, it appears that they were carrying on business fraudulently for several months before their failure and must have had knowledge at the time of such examination of many details about which they professed ignorance or lack of recollection, even though allowance be made for a vicious method or lack of method in the conduct of their affairs, the bankrupts should be ad-

an order to deliver books to a receiver, where the person demanding the delivery thereof did not show that he was authorized to act for the receiver.¹³ Likewise in a proceeding to compel a bankrupt to turn over assets, some definite order that certain property should be turned over is necessary before a contempt of that order can occur.¹⁴

(2) INABILITY TO COMPLY WITH ORDERS OR TO RESTORE PROPERTY.¹⁵—A court of bankruptcy cannot lawfully order a bankrupt to deliver to his trustee money or property he has not got in his possession or under his control, and imprison him if he does not comply with the order, as that would be imprisonment for debt, and the order would not be relieved of that illegal and odious quality by calling it "imprisonment for contempt." Such orders are invalid.¹⁶ The court will not commit for contempt if convinced that the judged guilty of contempt and committed to jail. In re Magen and Magen (D. C., Pa.), 24 Am. B. R. 63, 179 Fed. 572, revd. 26 Am. B. R. 594, 186 Fed. 675, on the ground that the trustee erred in not framing his petition so as to set forth a case of contempt under § 41.

Where, upon a proceeding to punish a bankrupt for contempt in refusing to obey an order of the referee in bankruptcy to turn over to the trustee money found by the referee to be in his possession which he had omitted from his schedules, it appears that the money was unquestionably in his possession just prior to his adjudication, that he made no attempt to explain what he did with it except by saying "I don't know" or "I can't remember," when questioned with reference thereto and that his whole course of conduct for several months prior to adjudication was evidence of a scheme to swindle his creditors by converting all of his assets he could into money, and first refuse to pay any creditors and then after the bankruptcy to defy the bankruptcy court by the false statement that he did not know how to account for the deficit in his assets, he will be committed to jail for four months, subject to such future order as may seem proper in the event he complies with the order of the referee. Sufficiency of order.—Where property is withheld by a bankrupt the order of the referee directing him to turn it over should specify particularly the property in the possession of the bankrupt or under his control and which he is required to turn over, or, if money is directed to be turned over, the order should specify the amount and the source from which it is derived. Matter of Elias (D. Unless a bankrupt has the power to turn over property, no order requiring him to do so is valid. In re Nisenson (D. C., N. J.), 24 Am. B. R. 915, 182 Fed. 912. In American Trust Co. v. Wallis (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 11 Am. B. R. 360, 126 Fed. 404, the court said: "In the absence of fraud or concealment, the bankruptcy court can only order the delivery of property to the trustee which the bankrupt is physically able to deliver up, having the same in his possession or control. If it shall appear that he is not physically able to deliver the property required by the order, then, confessedly, the proceedings for contempt, by fine or imprisonment, would result in nothing, certainly not in compliance with the order. The contempt in this case could only be purged by a reiteration of the physical impossibility to comply with the order whose disobedience is being thus punished. An order made under such circumstances would be as absurd as it is in consistent with the principles of individual liberty."

Inability to comply with order.—"All the cases are practically harmonious in the declaration that, if the court is convinced that the bankrupt is unable to comply with the order, he should not be committed for contempt. Without the physical ability to comply, there can be no contempt. Un-bankrupt is unable to pay, whether his inability is due to his criminal act,¹⁷ or misappropriation or any other reason; but a bare denial of ability to pay is by no means controlling.¹⁸ It has been held, however, that where a bankrupt denies that he had possession or control of money at the time he was ordered to pay it over to his trustee, and there is no evidence to indisputably show that such denial or claim is false or fraudulent, he cannot be punished for contempt.¹⁹ It is not enough to show that the referee's order has not been obeyed. It must be made to appear affirmatively that when the order was made the bankrupt had power to obey it and that the failure to obey was wilful.²⁰ The fact that a bankrupt had the property at one time may carry a questionably that is the rule in this [3rd] circuit." In re Marks (D. C., Pa.), 23 Am. B. R. 911, 176 Fed. 1018. As laid down in the case of In re Chiles, 22 Wall. 157, 22 L. Ed. 819, where punishment for contempt is employed to compel the performance of some act or duty required of the respondent by the court, it must appear not only that he refuses to obey, but also that it is in his power to obey, and where an order is made, an attempt to punish for contempt in disregard of it before it is made, is "ex post facto legislation and judicial enforcement at the same moment." Where the assignee for the benefit of creditors, in explaining his failure to turn over a certain balance to the trustee, stated that he had retained part of the said balance as his commission as assignee in reliance upon the belief that he was entitled to that amount, that he had used the money believing it to be his and had none of it left, that he is a man of no means and is unable to raise money to pay the sum into court, and that the remainder of the balance was paid to his attorneys for their professional services rendered to him as assignee, and that he is unable to pay over such sum for the reasons thus stated, the court will not compel an impossibility whether the inability to do the thing required may be in consequence of the respondent's own fault arising from a misconception of his rights, or committed before the court took jurisdiction of the matter, because there would be no way of enforcing such mandate of the court but imprisonment from which there could be no prospect of relief but by reiteration of the same facts, which would be unavailing. Sinshelmer v. Simonson (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 537, 107 Fed. 898.

Bare denial of ability.—If he cannot pay, and if this inability is the result of his own criminal act, he may, of course, be punished by the criminal law, although no civil remedy may be available in the situation. Even if he has misappropriated the money, the court has not the power to imprison him in a proceeding for contempt; for this would deprive him of his constitutional right to submit the charge of misappropriation to a jury in the proper criminal court, and would deprive him, also, of the inseparable right to be exempt from imprisonment for such an offense until he shall have been lawfully convicted. And it is also true that he cannot be imprisoned in a proceeding for contempt, if for any other reason he cannot produce the money; for the court cannot imprison as a punishment. It can only imprison to compel obedience to its order. But with an order to pay in force against him, and with the need to overcome the presumption of his ability to comply, it will no doubt happen at times that a bankrupt may fail to meet the burden of proof, and may be obliged to go to jail until he satisfies the court that he was telling the truth when he pleaded poverty. Certainly his bare denial of present ability to pay may be properly regarded with suspicion, and he may be required to satisfy the court with clearness that obedience to the order is wholly beyond his power. Such situations must be dealt with as they arise. No general rule can be laid down, and each case must stand upon its own facts. In re Marks (D. C., Pa.), 23 Am. B. R. 911, 176 Fed. 1018; if evidence shows denial to be false or fraudulent, bankrupt should be committed. Matter of Kramer & Muchnick (D. C., Pa.), 31 Am. B. R. 525, 210 Fed. 977.

Denial of possession insufficient.—Where, upon the application of the trustee to compel a director of a bankrupt corporation to turn over assets, testimony was taken upon which the referee found that such director was concealing a certain sum which he ordered to be turned over to the trustee, and no attempt was ever made to review such order, the affidavit of the director denying that he ever had such sum, without other explanation, is not a sufficient defense to an application to punish him for contempt for failing to obey the turn-over order. presumption that he still has it, but the presumption may be rebutted by proof of a subsequent disposition.²¹ The settled rule is that, when property of a bankrupt estate is traced to the possession of one who receives it upon the eve of the bankruptcy of its owner, it is presumed that it remains in his possession or under his control until he satisfactorily accounts to the court of bankruptcy for its disposition or disappearance; that the burden is upon him to satisfactorily so account for it; and that he cannot escape an order for its surrender by simply denying under oath that he has it, or that it is the property of the bankrupt estate.²² This is a presumption of fact, varying in weight with the circumstances of each particular case.²³ The burden is upon the bankrupt to satisfactorily account for the non-production of property, in assuming which, however, he is entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt.²⁴ The bankrupt cannot escape an order for the surrender of such property by merely denying upon oath that he has it in his possession or under his control; it is still the duty of the referee and of the court, if satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt²⁵ that such property is in his possession or under his control, to a present ability and wilful refusal to obey; citing Samel v. Dodd (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 16 Am. B. R. 163, 142 Fed. 68; Stuart v. Reynolds (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 29 Am. B. R. 412, 204 Fed. 709.

The power to punish for contempt should be cautiously exercised, and in cases only where wilful disobedience by the bankrupt is proved beyond a reasonable doubt, as in criminal cases. Where the disobedience charged is disobedience to the orders of a referee directing the bankrupt to pay money to the trustee, the better practice is to direct the bankrupt to be brought before the judge for a further examination upon petition as to whether or not he has made a full disclosure of the facts. In re McCormick (D. C., N. Y.), 3 Am. B. R. 340, 97 Fed. 566. Contempt proceedings are quasi criminal in their nature and it should be made clearly to appear that the persons charged knowingly and wilfully disregarded or set at defiance the order of the court. *Subkinsky v. Presumptions.—The fact that a bankrupt had goods or money in his possession at the time of his bankruptcy which he failed to turn over to his trustee does not of itself justify a finding, in contempt proceedings, that he had the same goods in his possession nearly a year afterwards. Matter of Elias (D. C., N. Car.), 30 Am. B. R. 441, 240 Fed. 448.

The principle there stated is sound, absolutely indispensable to the practical enforcement of the bankruptcy law, and it is the law of this circuit. In re Richards (D. C., Ark.), 25 Am. B. R. 176, 183 Fed. 501.

An order of a referee adjudging that a bankrupt turn over certain property to his trustee is a conclusive determination that at the time such order was made the bankrupt was in possession of the property directed to be turned over, and the time for review having expired, the bankrupt is estopped from denying such fact upon a motion to punish him for contempt for refusing to obey. The only issue open to the respondent in such case is to show what he had done with the property since the date of the order. In re Frankel (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 920, 184 Fed. 539.

Upon what attachment must rest.—An order to compel a bankrupt to pay over assets which he has concealed may be wholly based upon the antecedent condition of facts existing at the time of the petition in bankruptcy; but an attachment for contempt for non-compliance with the order must rest upon conditions as the time of commitment, which is justified only by a finding of a present mental attitude of contumacy. Matter of Heyman (D. C., Pa.), 34 Am. B. R. 108, 225 Fed. 1000.

Test of ability.—Upon a petition for an order directing a bankrupt to turn over property, the test is whether, by a fair preponderance of the testimony, it appears that the bankrupt has assets which have not been turned over, and the court need not be satisfied beyond any reasonable doubt that the property is in fact in the bankrupt's possession. Matter of Dixon (D. C., Mass.), 35 Am. B. R. 482, 224 Fed. 624.

order him to surrender it to the trustee and to enforce that order by confinement as for contempt.²⁶ Repeated refusals to explain or account for the disappearance of the property ordered to be turned over may lead to a belief that such property is in the bankrupt's possession or control,²⁷ but the rule should not be applied irrespective of the circumstances of the particular case.²⁸ The power to punish for a disobedience of an order to turn over assets should not be exercised in doubtful cases.²⁹ Where the bankrupt changes his mind and subsequently testifies truthfully, he ought not to be punished for contempt.³⁰

b. Misbehavior.—Subdivision 2 clearly refers to any act or omission at a session of the referee court or near its place of sitting, amounting to disrespect or contumacy. No accurate definition of the word "misbehave" is possible.³¹ But it must be during a hearing, or, if not, in the presence of the referee, amount to an obstruction of the hearing. This contempt may be committed by any person.³²

c. Contempts by witnesses.³³—(1) IN GENERAL.—Subdivisions 3 and 4 supplement subdivision 1. Subpoenas are writs. Neglect to produce "any pertinent document" in response to subpoena is a contempt.³⁴ Refusal to appear after being subpoenaed is equally so.³⁵ A bankrupt who has no excuse or explanation to make as to his repeated disobedience of orders of a referee in bankruptcy to appear for examination and to produce his books of account will be committed for contempt upon the certificate of the referee.³⁶ But a witness cannot be adjudged guilty of contempt where he has neither been tendered witness fees, nor served with a subpoena duces tecum.³⁷ The Order based on alternative finding.—An order to turn over property, which the bankrupt has failed to deliver to his trustee, based on an alternative finding that the bankrupt has either the property or the money received from the sale thereof, cannot be made the basis of an order of commitment for contempt for failure to comply therewith. Matter of Elias (D. C., N. Car.), 39 Am. B. R. 441, 240 Fed. 448.

30. Recantation of false testimony.—As a general rule, in cases in which the bankrupt has begun by giving even intentionally false testimony, if, during the course of the same examination, he changes his mind and testifies truthfully, he ought not to be punished for contempt. In exceptional cases, or in cases where the recantation does not take place until adjourned dates, and, in the meanwhile, because of his false testimony any injury has happened to the estate, a different conclusion may be reached. emphasis laid upon "pertinent" should be noted. "Refuse" here probably includes "neglect." The restriction stated in the proviso clause is important. A referee's subpoena is really the district court's in effect, and, therefore, reaches as far as one issued in a case pending in such court. So, it is thought, of a mere order to appear, even if issued by the referee. Such a subpoena or order may be effective outside the judicial district, if the residence of the witness is not more than one hundred miles away;³⁸ but the witness cannot be compelled to appear before a referee outside of the State in which such witness resides.³⁹ If the party summoned is the bankrupt he may be ordered to appear if his residence, whether in the district or the State, is no more than one hundred and fifty miles away.⁴⁰ The proviso that no person shall be required to attend as a witness before a referee at a place outside of the place of his residence does not limit the general provisions of the United States revised statutes relating to the taking of depositions and the attendance of witnesses.⁴¹

(2) "SUBPENAED."—The connection between this word and the last clause of subsection a seems close. A witness who refuses to appear may excuse himself in commitment proceedings if his lawful mileage and fee for one day's attendance was not paid or tendered him.⁴² The subsequent attempt to purge themselves of contempt, by offering themselves for examination should be considered in the infliction of punishment.⁴³

(3) REFUSAL TO BE SWORN OR TO TESTIFY.—This is as much a contempt as refusal to appear. A bankrupt who leaves the office of the referee before the completion of his testimony may be punished for contempt.⁴⁴ The refusal of a witness to answer questions because of their incriminating nature is discussed elsewhere.⁴⁵ After having taken the oath, as required, a refusal to answer questions at all subjects the witness to punishment for contempt for a refusal "to be examined according to law."⁴⁶ A witness who persists in using insulting and offensive language, not responsive to the questions put to him, and entirely irrelevant, should be punished for contempt.⁴⁷ The authorities are uniform that intentionally, testifying falsely or vaguely and contradictorily, constitutes a contempt of court under this section.⁴⁸ Where

Refusal to make direct answers.—Where a bankrupt, under examination before a referee, persistently answers "I don't know" to questions about his property, which he must and evidently does know, and could answer fully, he refuses "to be examined according to law," and is guilty of "contempt" within the meaning of section 41-a, and punishable thereunder. In re Gitkin (D. C., Pa.), 21 Am. B. R. 113, 164 Fed. 71. Where a bankrupt, under examination before the referee, persistently evaded making direct answers to questions concerning the recent sale of a house, about which he could not have been ignorant, and it becomes necessary, because of such conduct, to suspend the examination, he will be committed to jail for a bankrupt's whole examination is a perfectly transparent case of duplicity, intentional evasion and refusal to make any explanation of the facts connected with his bankruptcy, under the pretense of ignorance and stupidity, and he manifests a deliberate determination to conceal all the material facts within his knowledge, an order adjudging him guilty of contempt of court and committing him to jail will be affirmed.⁴⁹ Likewise where a bankrupt on his examination before the referee gives wilful false testimony as to his property, he may be summarily punished for contempt by the district judge.⁵⁰

III. PRACTICE AND PUNISHMENT.

a. In general.—This section makes it plain that the power to commit for contempt before a referee was not conferred upon the latter but was conferred on the judge of the court of bankruptcy before whom the matter must be certified in accordance with its provisions; and in order that the court may take cognizance of the offense and punish the offender, he must be proceeded against strictly in accordance with the mode pointed out by the bankruptcy act, and any deviation from that procedure the bankrupt may take advantage of on a motion to dismiss the proceedings. The statutory procedure being full and complete must be strictly followed and a failure to do so will be fatal.⁵¹

b. Notice to person charged.—The person charged with contempt for failure to comply with an order of the referee should not be punished before he is given an opportunity to prove his inability to do so.⁵² He should have notice of the motion to punish him for such disobedience and have his day in court,⁵³ and the fact that the bankrupt, upon proceedings for contempt, is allowed to be cross-examined does not cure the defect of want of notice.⁵⁴

Entitled to hearing.—Where a person has been duly ordered to pay over to the trustee money found to be due the estate and he fails to do so, he is nevertheless entitled to be heard on the question whether he should be committed to jail for such failure, and an ex parte order, judging him in contempt, of the application for which he had no notice stating when or where such application would be made, will be reversed. Matter of Banai Mfg. Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 497, 183 Fed. 298. Where an order requiring a bankrupt to turn over property to his trustee was based upon alleged disclosures of the bankrupt when under examination prior thereto, without notice to him that his examination was to be used against him, and upon further testimony taken without notice to him and without giving him an opportunity to appear and cross-examine the witnesses, he being in fact detained elsewhere by order of the referee at the instance of the trustee while such testimony was being taken, such order deprived the bankrupt of his legal rights and should be annulled. In re Frank (C. c. The certificate of the referee.—The judge alone can punish for a contempt committed before the referee.⁵⁵ He is notified of the contempt by a certificate, signed and usually prepared by the referee.⁵⁶ The certification of the record to the district judge is not a jurisdictional condition but only a matter of procedure, and, the court having power under section sixteen, subdivision two, to punish persons for contempts committed before referees an order committing a person for contempt, granted without such certification, is not subject to collateral attack by habeas corpus.⁵⁷ This certificate must give "the facts" and show the commission of one of the contempts enumerated in subdivision a. The certificate should be filed with the clerk of the court. Where a referee rules that certain evidence is improper he may refuse to certify the matter for contempt proceedings to the judge.⁵⁸ The certificate is not binding upon the bankruptcy court nor does it conclude the court's action in any way.⁵⁹

d. Pleading and evidence.⁶⁰—On the filing of the referee's certificate, the matter is customarily brought up on petition and order. If by petition, the facts stated should bring it clearly within subdivision a, and the order should be in the nature of an order to show cause.⁶¹ A petition, alleging in substance that bankrupts during their examination knowingly and wilfully committed perjury on many occasions, does not state a case of contempt under this section.⁶² A copy of the petition should be served with the order. Attachment may also be asked, and, in exceptional cases, granted.⁶³ Although, perhaps, the bankrupt or person charged with contempt need not plead, it is often advantageous to set out the defense in a definite manner so that the court may pass on it intelligently with a view of bringing the issues clearly before the appellate tribunal. This, of course, should not be allowed to permit unnecessarily, one set of pleadings after another, or in any way to

A referee has the right to enter an order directing the bankrupt to surrender to the trustee any money or property which he has found to be in the possession or under the control of the bankrupt, opportunity having been given to such bankrupt to be heard upon this question; upon the refusal or neglect of the bankrupt to obey the order thus made, the referee may enter upon the record the fact of such disobedience, and the fact that the bankrupt is therefore in contempt of court; the facts must then be certified to the district judge, who will then deal with the question as if the case had originally arisen in the district court. In re Miller (D. cause protracted delay.⁶⁴ The ability to turn over assets is not a matter of affirmative allegation in the petition; the inability to restore is rather a matter of defense.⁶⁵ On the return of the order or appearance of the alleged contemnor, the judge must "in a summary manner, hear the evidence of the acts complained of," and punish or refuse to punish in the same manner as if the contempt had been committed before him. The district judge, in a proceeding for the punishment of a bankrupt for refusing to obey the order of a referee may refer to such order and whatever prior proceedings occurred before the referee. He should also receive all material proofs relating to matters preceding the referee's report, as well as those following it.⁶⁶ In the review of such an order of the referee the ordinary rule as to the force of findings of fact is not applicable for the reason that the determination is not governed by the weight of testimony, as the enforcement of the order devolves upon the reviewing court, and with it the duty of ascertaining if a sufficient cause exists.⁶⁷ Formerly, it was held that the respondent's answer must be taken as true.⁶⁸ This, however, seems not now the law.⁶⁹ The issue raised by the response or answering affidavits may be referred to a referee as special master;⁷⁰ but not, it is thought, to the referee before whom the contempt was committed. Where the district judge allows the bankrupt five days after the entry thereof to comply with the order of the referee, such order is to be deemed affirmed.⁷¹

c. Punishment.—If found guilty, the contemnor may be fined or imprisoned, or both; but not punished in any other way.⁷² There seems to be no limit on the time of imprisonment. Usually the order provides that he stand committed until he performs the act for failure of which he is declared to be in contempt. A commitment of this kind has been held not a violation of the constitutional prohibition against imprisonment for debt.⁷³ But it is not the

An order to pay over money, or to surrender other property as the case may be, in the possession of the bankrupt and forming part of his estate, is not an order for the payment of a debt, but an order for the intention of the law that a contemnor should be perpetually imprisoned where it appears that he is actually unable to respond; he will ordinarily be released after the court is satisfied that he has been adequately punished for his contumacy.⁷⁴ If the offense is a criminal contempt, that is, against the authority of the court, the commitment may be for a specified term.⁷⁵ The practice after the filing of the certificate conforms to that in the Federal courts and the numerous precedents and text-books may be consulted with profit.⁷⁶ The remedy of the contemnor after commitment is habeas corpus.⁷⁷ An order of commitment, granted without the referee certifying to the judge facts constituting a contempt, is not subject to collateral attack by habeas corpus.⁷⁸ Where a bankrupt has been confined for failing to comply with an order requiring him to pay a large sum of money to his trustee, he will be discharged where he shows that he has no money or property, either in possession or under his control, and none is held for his benefit, and that he is never likely to be able to pay.⁷⁹

Civil and criminal contempt distinguished.—The character and purpose of the punishment distinguish civil and criminal contempts, the punishment for a civil contempt being remedial and for the benefit of the complainant in the contempt proceedings, while the punishment for a criminal contempt is punitive, to vindicate the authority of the court; if imprisonment be imposed in a civil proceeding it must be coercive in its nature and the committal must stand only unless and until the defendant performs the affirmative act required by the court's order, but when inflicted in a criminal proceeding it is fixed and certain as a punishment for completed disobedience of orders or for other past wrongdoing. In re Kahn (C. SECTION FORTY-TWO.

RECORDS OF REFEREES.

§ 42. Records of Referees.—a The records of all proceedings in each case before a referee shall be kept as nearly as may be in the same manner as records are now kept in equity cases in circuit courts of the United States.

b A record of the proceedings in each case shall be kept in a separate book or books, and shall, together with the papers on file, constitute the records of the case.

c The book or books containing a record of the proceedings shall, when the case is concluded before the referee, be certified to by him, and, together with such papers as are on file before him, be transmitted to the court of bankruptcy and shall there remain as a part of the records of the court.

RECORDS OF REFEREES.

I. Records of Referees, 696.

a. How kept, 696.

b. What are records, 697.

c. When and how certified to the clerk, 697.

I. RECORDS OF REFEREES.

a. How kept.—Section 39 (5) (7) requires the referee to keep records and transmit them to the clerk; this section should be construed therewith. The records should conform in general to the records of equity cases in the district courts. The former law required that a short memorandum be made of the proceedings, and a copy of it sent each day to the clerk.¹ This is not required now. By analogy, however, some referees make typewritten memoranda of meetings or orders on separate sheets of paper, filing them in a temporary cover from time to time and binding the whole into a book at the end of the case.² No papers are actually recorded;³ and formal orders are not inserted in the record books. They should be drawn and filed by the attorneys in charge. After reference, all papers should be filed with the referee,⁴ and he should indorse them with "the day and hour of filing and a brief statement" of their character.⁵

b. What are records.—As provided in subsection b, the record of a case consists of the referee's record book and "the papers on file;" all testimony taken should form a part of the record book. Some referees have adopted a record wrapper into which are bound the sheets constituting the record book, the whole, at the conclusion of the case, wrapped about the papers that have been filed, thus making a compact bundle. Others make up what may be called a roll of the proceeding. The records constitute the case and when through, copies, introduced in evidence in other courts, are prima facie proof of the facts stated therein.⁶ Testimony taken, as authorized by the referee, is a part of the record in the proceedings, and creditors generally have access to it while it remains in the custody of the referee.⁷

c. When and how certified to the clerk.—Under subsection c, when the case is concluded before the referee, his records must be certified to by him and transmitted to the clerk. This means when the case is administered; whether the bankrupt has his discharge or not is not material. It is thought too, that when a trustee is appointed but fails to qualify, or qualifies, and files a report of no assets but does not ask for a final meeting, the case, after a sufficient lapse of time,—as, for instance, when no claims have been filed and a year elapsed⁸—will be deemed "concluded." The records should be accompanied by a brief certificate by the referee to the effect that the case is closed and that the papers handed up constitute his records.⁹ It is often attached to or forms the filing cover of the record books. When thus filed, the referee's records become a part of those of the district court itself. From that time, the referee ceases to have jurisdiction of the case.¹⁰

REFEREE'S ABSENCE OR DISABILITY.

§ 43. Referee's Absence or Disability.—a Whenever the office of a referee is vacant, or its occupant is absent or disqualified to act, the judge may act, or may appoint another referee, or another referee holding an appointment under the same court may, by order of the judge, temporarily fill the vacancy.

I. REFEREE'S ABSENCE OR DISABILITY.

This section supplements § 34 (1), and confers jurisdiction on the judge to appoint a new referee when the referee of a specified jurisdiction is absent or disqualified or the office is vacant. In any of such cases, (1) the judge may act, or he may (2) appoint another referee or (3) he may designate a referee of the same judicial district to fill the vacancy. The section is often availed of when a referee is disqualified¹ in a specified case. It could, it is thought, be used where a referee suffered from a prolonged illness or became insane, he being then "absent" from his duties as much as if out of the country. If not, the judge could remove him under the authority given by § 34. The power to transfer cases from one referee to another,² and the pro-rating of fees³ in that event, are considered elsewhere. This section seems to imply that, subject to the exception in § 22-b, all cases arising in a referee district must in the first instance be referred to that referee.⁴ Except where specially appointed under this section to fill a vacancy temporarily, the jurisdiction of a referee does not extend outside the district of his appointment.⁵

SECTION FORTY-FOUR.

APPOINTMENT OF TRUSTEES.

§ 44. Appointment of Trustees.—a The creditors of a bankrupt estate shall, at their first meeting after the adjudication or after a vacancy has occurred in the office of trustee, or after an estate has been reopened, or after a composition has been set aside or a discharge revoked, or if there is a vacancy in the office of trustee, appoint one trustee or three trustees of such estate. If the creditors do not appoint a trustee or trustees as herein provided, the court shall do so.

I. HISTORY AND COMPARATIVE LEGISLATION.

a. Scope of section.—This section should be read with § 63, on what are provable debts, with § 1 (9), on who are creditors and their agents, proxies, etc., with § 56, on who may vote and what constitutes a voting majority at creditors' meetings, and with § 45, on the qualifications of trustees. None of the matters belonging to those subjects are discussed here. This section has to do only with the kindred topics indicated in the synopsis, supra.

b. Comparative legislation.—(1) IN ENGLAND.—One of the storm centers of bankruptcy legislation has been the method of appointing the officers of administration.¹ The English system has see-sawed from administration by the court through commissioners of its own appointment,² to that by trustees chosen by the creditors. The present system³ is midway between the two, the official receiver, who is an officer of the board of trade, taking charge of the estate until the creditors can choose; and even then the board of trade may certify objections to their choice to the high court, which the latter may hold sufficient. If no appointment is made by the creditors within four weeks, the board of trade may itself appoint a trustee, subject to the creditors' right

1. For the different methods of appointment in Europe, see "Bankruptcy; a Study in Comparative Legislation," by Dunscomb, Vol. II, No. 2, Columbia College Studies in History, etc.

2. Thus, from 1831 to 1869.

3. Eng. Act of 1883, § 21.

subsequently to appoint some one in his stead. This is, in effect, appointment by the creditors, with a qualified veto by the board of trade. The corresponding officer under the French system is the syndic. As in England, a temporary official syndic is appointed, and the creditors may then advise the court as to their wishes. But their advice is not binding. The result is, as has been said, that the syndic "is generally a person enjoying the confidence of the court who has made the settlement of bankruptcy estates his special profession." This method seems to pertain in most of the continental countries.⁴

(2) IN THE UNITED STATES.—The history of bankruptcy legislation in this country reveals the same changes. Our administrators have been called, successively, either assignees or trustees. Not until our law of 1867 was the principle that insolvent estates are really trusts and the creditors, as beneficiaries, entitled to choose the trustees, recognized by our law.⁵ Even under that law, the recognition was somewhat half-hearted.⁶ The choice in the first instance, though by the creditors as now, was subject to the approval of the judge; and yet, in case an assignee failed to qualify or the office became vacant, the judge or register might ignore the creditors and "fill the vacancy." The judge could "for any cause needful or expedient" either appoint additional assignees or order a new election. We have never adopted the asset-saving device of a temporary official trustee,⁷ but continue to limp along with, when "absolutely necessary for the preservation of estates," a court-chosen receiver.⁸

(3) IN CANADA.—In Canada the Governor in Council, upon the application of the Secretary of State appoints the trustees whose authority is limited territorially to the whole or part of one or more bankruptcy districts. A majority in number of the creditors who hold half or more in amount of the proved debts of twenty-five dollars or upwards may substitute any authorized trustee for the one named in the receiving order.^{8a}

II. APPOINTMENT OF TRUSTEES.

a. In general.—The present law goes further than any bankruptcy statute either here or elsewhere in giving creditors the right to choose the trustees. The section under discussion declares: "The creditors shall . . . appoint one trustee or three trustees." There is nothing here giving the judge or referee the right to approve or disapprove. Nor is there anything in § 2 (17) conferring on them such a power; though some have thought it is inherent in the court under the last sentence of § 2. Trustees in bankruptcy are creatures of the statute. Viewed as Congress left it therefore, the law of 1898 vests in the creditors an unqualified right to appoint their own trustees.⁹ Indeed § 44, which declares they "shall appoint," under familiar canons of construction, must be taken as controlling on the earlier and more general words of § 2 (17), giving courts of bankruptcy power to "appoint trustees," pursuant to the recommendations of creditors.

b. By creditors at first meeting.—Both the statute and the forms indicate that the creditors must appoint a trustee or trustees "at their first meeting."¹⁰ This means the meeting called under the notice known as Form No. 18. It includes any regular continuance of such meeting, a practice often resorted to,¹¹ although the selection of a trustee may not be tied up indefinitely by obstructive tactics which are obviously for the purpose of delay.¹² It has been suggested that the provision that trustees be elected at the first meeting is directory and not mandatory.¹³ Form No. 23 should be used when the referee appoints; Form No. 22 may be used when the creditors do the same. If, however, there is no contest among them, a simple order similar to Form No. 23, declaring such fact and that the creditors present appointed the trustee named and that the referee approved their choice, is suggested as time-saving and proper.¹⁴

c. Voting for trustees.—Subsection a of § 56, provides that creditors shall pass upon all matters submitted to them by a majority vote "in number and amount of claims of all creditors, whose claims have been allowed and are present."¹⁵ The most important act to be performed by creditors is the election or appointment of a trustee.¹⁶ Creditors may vote in person or they may be represented at the meeting by duly authorized agents, attorneys or proxies.¹⁷ It appears to be established by the weight of authority that an attorney admitted to practice in a court of bankruptcy may not represent his client, who is a creditor of the bankrupt, in the election of a trustee, unless he presents and files a written power of attorney.¹⁸ The method of voting at meetings of creditors generally and the power of proxies to vote is considered elsewhere.¹⁹

11. Meeting continued by adjournments.—Where the vote at a creditors' meeting showed no choice of a trustee, one candidate having a majority in number and another a majority in amount, and the supporters of both candidates informed the referee that an agreement was hopeless, and there was nothing to show that reasonable opportunity for choice by the creditors at the regular time had not been afforded, it was not error for the referee to deny a request, not unanimous, for an adjournment of two weeks for the purpose of allowing the creditors to vote again. In re Goldstein (D. C., Mass.), 29 Am. B. R. 301, 199 Fed. 665. In re Nice & Schreiber (D. C., Pa.), 10 Am. B. R. 639, 123 Fed. 987, it was expressly held that the first meeting of creditors may be continued by proper and reasonable adjournments so as to give the creditors every reasonable opportunity to exercise the power conferred upon them to choose a trustee; so where a majority of the creditors both in number and amount ask for a reasonable postponement in order that the differences existing among the creditors may be disposed of their request should be granted.

Where the bankrupt proposes an offer of composition at the first meeting of creditors, the referee, in a proper case, should postpone the choice and appointment of a trustee, to give opportunity for the filing of such proposed composition, and, if it is filed, should further postpone such choice and appointment until the entry of an order refusing to confirm such agreement. In re Rung Bros. (Ref., N. d. Appointment by the court or referee.²⁰—(1) FAILURE TO AGREE.—Only in case a majority in number and amount do not appoint can the judge or the referee appoint.²¹ If the creditors are deadlocked, or for any other reason the creditors may not agree upon the selection of a trustee, the statute protects the interests of all the creditors by requiring the court to appoint the trustee.²² Where there is a sharp conflict or a close vote, resulting in a majority in amount one way and in number the other, the choice of one not a candidate and, if possible, who has had experience in the management of estates, is thought the part of wisdom.²³ But there can be, under the present law, no official or general trustee as seems to have been the practice under the law of 1841.²⁴ In making the appointment the court is governed by the limitations as to qualifications of trustees contained in § 45.²⁵

(2) DELAY IN APPOINTMENT.—A delay of more than a year cannot have the effect of taking away the power of the court to appoint a trustee.²⁶ When the creditors "neglect to recommend the appointment" of a trustee, the judge or referee may appoint.²⁷

The word "court" as used in section 44 necessarily includes referee. In re Brooke (D. C., Pa.), 4 Am. B. R. 50, 100 Fed. 432.

When court may appoint.—Where defective proofs of debt presented by creditors, representing a majority in number of claims, at a meeting held for the purpose of selecting a trustee, though corrected, are also objected to upon the ground that said creditors are represented in this by the attorney for the bankrupt and the only effect in the end will be to prevent an election, neither of the two persons voted for having a majority in number and amount, the court may appoint a trustee and relieve the referee of that duty. In re Morris (D. C., Pa.), 18 Am. B. R. 828, 154 Fed. 211. Where at the first meeting of creditors no creditors were present, no trustee was appointed for want of assets and but one creditor proved his debt, and the final report of the referee recited that the estate had been fully administered and so far as referred to him was closed, the court, after the lapse of more than a year, has jurisdiction to appoint a trustee upon the petition of the assignee of the creditor alleging that the bankrupt had died leaving various properties which he had fraudulently disposed of with intent to defraud creditors. Clark v. Pidcock (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 12 Am. B. R. 309, 129 Fed. 745.

When referee may appoint.—Where the bankrupt's former attorney had a majority in number of the creditors, while his opponent had a majority in amount, and no request was made for a second ballot, the referee may appoint the trustee. In re Machin (D. C., Pa.), 11 Am. B. R. 449, 128 Fed. 315; In re Richards (D. C., N. Y.), 4 Am. B. R. 631, 103 Fed. 849. Unless it appears that the election has been so conducted as to jeopardize the interests of the creditors, the choice of a majority of the creditors in number and amount should be permitted to stand. In re Eastlack (D. C., N. J.), 16 Am. B. R. 529, 145 Fed. 68. The referee may appoint a trustee upon the failure of the creditors to obtain a majority vote for any one approved. In re Kennedy & Co. (D. C., Ind.), 14 Am. B. 25. In re Seider (D. C., N. Y.), 20 Am. B. R. 708, 163 Fed. 139.

Appointment of unsuccessful candidate.—There is no presumption against the character or fitness of unsuccessful candidates for trustee when there is no election because no candidate received a majority in number and amount of claims voted, and such candidates are not necessarily ineligible to appointment by the referee or judge, although it may generally be wise not to appoint them. Matter of F. & D. Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 378, 242 Fed. 69, revg. 38 Am. B. R. 285, 237 Fed. 895.

(3) DISPUTED CLAIMS.—If at the first meeting all claims offered for proof are in dispute, and it is impracticable at that time to settle the dispute, it appears to be within the discretion of the referee to appoint a trustee.²⁸ So if the determination of disputes involving claims representing more than a majority in amount, will necessarily delay the election, so that the interests of the estate will be prejudiced, a referee would be justified in appointing a trustee.²⁹

c. Approval or disapproval.³⁰—(1) BY JUDGE OR REFEREE.—(I) In general.—The bankruptcy act of 1867 contained a provision that: "All elections or appointments of assignees shall be subject to the approval of the judge, and when, in his judgment, it is for any cause needful or expedient, he may appoint additional assignees or order a new election." The present bankruptcy act contains no provision like the one above quoted from the act of 1867, but the Supreme Court has promulgated an order (General Order 13), reading as follows: "The appointment of a trustee by the creditors shall be subject to be approved or disapproved by the referee or by the judge; and he shall be removable by the judge only." It is evident that the Supreme Court intended by this order to establish a rule concerning the approval or disapproval of elections by creditors similar to that which existed under the act of 1867. The decisions under the present law on this point show that such has been the understanding of our Federal courts.³¹ Judges and referees have ample power to prevent the appointment of incompetent or improper trustees by the discretion given them to determine who are creditors,³² coupled with their power to continue meetings and notify and bring in absent claimants.³³

Fed. 187, holding that, where the creditors of the bankrupt have held two sessions, one lasting six hours, in attempting to choose a trustee, and where at the second session they were still disagreed and unable to make a choice, it appearing that there was immediate need of the appointment of a trustee, it was proper for the referee to make an appointment. Where creditors fail to appoint a trustee and acquiesce in the appointment made by the referee, they cannot complain.

28. Matter of Cohen (D. C., Mass.), 11 Am. B. R. 439, 131 Fed. 391.

29. Matter of Knox (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 461, 221 Fed. 36, in which the court said: "The objections to claims had already caused six weeks' delay, and the end was not in sight. The circumstances demanded an immediate selection of a trustee. The referee was put to a choice of three courses: (1) To continue the existing condition indefinitely, to the detriment of the estate; or (2) to have an election at which the majority of creditors in amount would be disfranchised; or (3) to make an appointment himself. Presumably the testimony thus far taken did not make likely the ultimate rejection of this majority in amount of claims, and, if such was the situation, the referee was not bound by any hard and fast rule to disfranchise this majority. Although the creditors are, by the Bankruptcy Act, given control of the election under normal circumstances, and such control should not lightly be disturbed, yet in case of emergency the referee has, in our judgment, ample power to appoint a trustee—a power, however, which should be most sparingly exercised. The following authorities sustain more or less effectively the existence of such power: In re Cohen (D. C., Mass.), 11 Am. B. R. 439, 131 Fed. 391; In re Miha, Turnbull & Co. (D. C., N. (II) Grounds for disapproval.—The approval or disapproval of the appointment of a trustee rests largely in the discretion of the judge or referee, depending upon circumstances dealing primarily with the competency of the person selected and conditions under which he was selected.³⁴ The purpose of the statute is to secure the election of a "competent" person as trustee; any determination by the referee that a person was prejudiced in favor of the bankrupt, or that fraud might result, should be respected and sustained if the evidence is sufficient. The choice of the creditors is entitled to consideration and should not be overruled without substantial reasons.³⁵ The court or referee should permit free expression of the creditors' will and should not arbitrarily exercise the power of disapproval.³⁶ A determination that the person chosen was disqualified because he had represented creditors, or because he had voted for himself, cannot be upheld.³⁷ The question as to whether there is collusion with the bankrupt should be definitely disposed of before the appointment, and if there is reasonable grounds for the belief that such collusion exists the referee may decline to approve the election.³⁸ The election of a trustee by the creditors is not to be disapproved, unless there is good reason for believing that the election has been directed, managed, or controlled by the bankrupt or his attorney, or by some influence opposed to the creditors' interests.³⁹ The bank-

Interest of creditors.—Where the person appointed trustee of a bankrupt estate receives his appointment, in part, at least, as a result of the active efforts in the solicitation and voting of claims by a creditor which is his corporate employer and in which he is a stockholder, and such creditor holds security for a part of its debt and is charged with having preferences, such person's appointment will be disapproved. Matter of Anson Mercantile Co. (D. C., Tex.), 25 Am. B. R. 429, 185 Fed. 993. In an involuntary bankruptcy the withholding by the referee of his approval of the trustee chosen by the creditors is not justified because he had incurred the hostility of the bankrupt, or as receiver had unreasonably delayed an accounting and distribution of funds to creditors. In re Mangan (D. C., Pa.), 13 Am. B. R. 303, 133 Fed. 1000.

At solicitation of attorneys.—A referee should not refuse to approve the election of a trustee upon the ground that a firm of attorneys who will be employed by the trustee if elected also represent a creditor of the bankrupt who is claiming the return of certain merchandise delivered to the bankrupt upon an alleged consignment, where it was stated to the referee that if it should afterwards appear that there was any conflict between the interests of the creditor and the trustee, the attorneys would not represent the creditor, and that the trustee would be represented also by other attorneys. Matter of Archbold & Hamilton (D. C., Cal.), 38 Am. B. R. 256.

Solicitation of claims by receiver for the purpose of being appointed trustee.—In the absence of affirmative evidence of collusion with the debtor, it is no objection to the appointment, as trustee, of the receiver in bankruptcy, who received a majority in number and amount of the claims allowed, that he sent a letter to various creditors signed by him as receiver, asking that they send their proofs of claims, and containing directions as to the manner and form of proof, it appearing that the schedules had been filed and that he had no better opportunity to obtain the proofs than any one else. In re Crocker Co. (Ref., Mass.), 27 Am. B. R. 241

rupt's former attorney should not be appointed, especially where it appears that they continue in close relations to each other.⁴⁰ And a referee is justified in disapproving the appointment of a person who was an assignee of the bankrupt under a common law assignment and whose account as assignee is unsettled,⁴¹ and he is likewise justified in disapproving the appointment of a member of a law firm which acted as counsel for such assignee.⁴² An appointment of a trustee by the creditors should not be disapproved by the referee solely upon the ground that he is a non-resident of the county in which the bankrupt's estate is located,⁴³ or because he had an office with an attorney who represented certain stockholders of the bankrupt who claimed to be creditors, but whose claims were to be contested and who were former clients of the trustee.⁴⁴ If the trustee is otherwise competent it does not follow that his election should be disapproved by the referee because of his friendliness to the debtor.⁴⁵

(III) Effect of disapproval.—A referee cannot ignore the appointment of a trustee by creditors and proceed summarily to appoint without holding another election. If he disapproves of the appointment it is his duty to make an order in writing to that effect, and direct that another meeting be held to fill the vacancy.⁴⁶ A referee who disapproves of the creditors' choice of trustee may not appoint one of his own selection; but he must call another meeting of the creditors.⁴⁷ A trustee elected by creditors does not take office until his selection is approved, and until that time there is a vacancy which may only be filled by the creditors.⁴⁸ Whenever a referee disapproves of a choice of trustee made by creditors, another opportunity must be permitted them to make a selection of one who is free from any "entangling alliances" that might interfere with the proper discharge of the duties devolving upon him.⁴⁹

appointment of a trustee is subject to review by the district judge,⁵⁰ but a defeated candidate for trustee is not entitled to a petition for review because of the exclusion of certain votes by the referee. The only persons who can appeal by petition for review are those whose votes have been cast out.⁵¹ Individual creditors who conceive themselves aggrieved by the action of the referee in approving the election of a trustee may take review in their own names.^{51a}

(2) UNDUE ACTIVITY ON THE PART OF THE BANKRUPT.—Undue activity on the part of a bankrupt in the selection of a trustee has always been discountenanced by the courts, and where it appears the appointment of the trustee should not, as a rule, be approved.⁵² It is well settled by all the authorities that the trustee represents the creditors, and not the bankrupt, in the administration of the estate; and that it is improper that the bankrupt shall actively interfere with the matter of his selection and appointment; and that, if he does interfere and the person aided by him is appointed by votes procured by such interference, the appointment should for that reason be

52. "Interference by the bankrupt, the voting of claims in his interest or at his direction has always been discountenanced by the courts and held to invalidate a choice of trustees thus secured." In re McGill (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 155, 161, 106 Fed. 57, citing In re Wetmore, Fed. Cas. No. 17,466 and In re Bliss, Fed. Cas. No. 1,543, decided under the act of 1867. Where it appears that the election was a close one, that the person elected received the votes of bankrupt's counsel, brother-in-law and clerk, that, upon objections of the bankrupt, claims, which would have made such selection impossible, were thrown out and it was evident that the person selected had received advance information from the bankrupt that the petition had been filed and who were the general creditors, and, undoubtedly upon the suggestion of the bankrupt or his attorney, had immediately become a candidate for trustee and actively engaged in sending out letters to creditors of the bankrupt, soliciting their claims, his election will be set aside. In re Ployd (D. C., Pa.), 25 Am. B. R. 194, 183 Fed. 791. Bankrupt had an estate of only $3,500, to be divided, after paying expenses, amongst creditors having claims aggregating $9,000, over $7,000 of which were claims said to be owing to near relatives of the bankrupt or members of the family. One of the bankrupt's attorneys presented the claims of and had powers of attorney from about 80 per cent. of these claimants at the first meeting of creditors, thus controlling the appointment of the trustee and he insisted, over the objection of the other creditors upon the selection of an attorney as trustee, who had an office in the building occupied by bankrupt's attorneys. It was held that the referee was justified in disapproving as contrary to public policy, a selection which would allow the bankrupt and his relatives to administer the estate. In re Sitting (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 682, 182 Fed. 917.

Canvassing of creditors to secure votes.—The trustee appointed by the referee, after his election by a majority of creditors, both in number and amount, had offices in the same suite as bankrupt's attorney and the evidence showed that he had prior to the filing of the schedules, solicited votes on claims, a number of claims having been sworn to before him as a notary. It was held, that while the practice of soliciting votes was to be condemned as it did not appear that the selection of the trustee was in the interest of the bankrupt, in order to control the administration of the estate for her benefit without regard for the interests of creditors, the appointment should be confirmed. Matter of Fisher (D. C., Pa.), 26 Am. B. R. 793, 193 Fed. 104. The votes of creditors for trustees cast upon proxies solicited by the bankrupt are properly rejected. In re Machin & Brown (D. C., Pa.), 11 Am. B. R. 449, 128 Fed. 315. Where it appears that the election of a trustee by a large majority of all the creditors is accomplished by the vote of an attorney in fact holding proxies obtained from creditors, acting in combination with the bankrupt, his election should be disapproved by the referee. In re Henschel (Ref., N. Y.), 6 Am. B. R. 25. Where the creditors, all of whom had proved their claims and were unpreferred, had received 100 per cent., the fact that some of them voted for a new trustee at the bankrupt's solicitation is not sufficient to disturb the appointment, the court being satisfied that the person selected will make a suitable trustee and that the bankrupt's solicitation for votes was not by way of improper in-disapproved.⁵³ However high the character of a proposed trustee may be, the active interference of the bankrupt in his favor will render him ineligible for appointment, and such appointment will for that reason be disapproved.⁵⁴ This does not prevent the appointment of a person who is acceptable to the bankrupt. It is the activity of the bankrupt in bringing about the selection that is prohibited.⁵⁵ The creditors of a bankrupt corporation should be permitted to vote for a trustee without interference from its officers.⁵⁶

f. Appointment to fill vacancies.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Here again the policy of the law is different from its predecessor. Immediately a vacancy occurs either, (1) in the office of trustee, or (2) after an estate has been reopened, or (3) a composition has been set aside, or (4) a discharge has been revoked, or (5) "if there is a vacancy in the office of trustee," the creditors must be summoned in the usual way; and they appoint the trustee.⁵⁷ The value of

Where one of three directors of a corporation, who was also its president, treasurer, clerk and manager, favored a composition and reorganization, and the receiver in bankruptcy and the other directors favored adjudication, and both factions went beyond what was proper in soliciting claims so as to control the election of the trustee, the claims of the president should not be disfranchised and the other claims allowed to be voted, where his plan does not appear to have involved any fraud. Matter of Parsons Mfg. Co. (D. C., Mass.), 39 Am. B. R. 858, 247 Fed. 128.

Furnishing list of creditors before filing schedules.—Where, upon the review of an order appointing a trustee whose election was alleged to have been procured by his action in securing the proofs and votes of certain creditors by means of a list of creditors which he solicited from the bankrupt before the filing of the schedules, it is found as a fact that, acting entirely in behalf of creditors, he requested the list of creditors without the solicitation of the bankrupt or for its benefit, and that his action and that of others in procuring claims and voting the same was justifiable, the order of appointment as trustee will not be disturbed. Matter of James H. Turner & Co. (Ref., Mass.), 20 Am. B. R. 646, dist'g In re Lloyd, 17 Am. B. R. 96, 148 Fed. 92, which held that no attorney should be permitted to vote any claim on the choice of trustee, that has come to him through the instrumentality of the bankrupt, in furnishing him with a list of the creditors before the schedules are filed, but the attorney is not disqualified from voting upon the claims of other creditors who employed him in the regular way and had no concern with the bankrupt in the matter.

"All the creditors of a bankrupt estate have the right to be fairly cared for in the administration of the estate. All the creditors have the right to a fair and an impartial trustee, one not under the influence of the bankrupt or of his attorney to any substantial degree, especially where there are or may be conflicting interests, questions as to claims and the conduct of the bankrupt prior to and after bankruptcy." In re Sitting (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 682, 183 Fed. 917. The beneficiaries are not the bankrupt, but the creditors. For that reason the law gives to them alone the choice of trustee; the bankrupt has no part in it because presumably he has no interest in it. In re Lewensohn (D. C., N. Y.), 3 Am. B. R. 299, 93 Fed. 576. The trustee should not be nominated in fact by the bankrupt or his attorney, because he must be free from all entangling alliances or associations that might in any way control his independence and responsibilities. In re Rekersdres (D. Interest of bankrupt or others in his behalf.—Neither the bankrupt himself, nor his attorney, nor any assignee, nor his attorney can be permitted to control the selection of a trustee. If creditors knowingly join with such parties in an effort to elect a trustee, the remedy is to reject their selection and permit the creditors who are not in the combination to make the selection. Matter of Stowe (D. the words just quoted, unless they refer to a case where at the first meeting no trustee was appointed,⁵⁸ does not seem clear. The purport of the clauses on vacancies is, however, beyond the domain of discussion. All vacancies must be filled as if at a first meeting. It is thought, however, that, when a trustee duly appointed fails to qualify or dies before he can do so, on motion or consent of all the creditors who voted at the meeting when he was chosen, they may appoint a substitute trustee, without calling another meeting for that purpose.⁵⁹ If a trustee embezzles the funds of the estate and absconds, his action amounts to an abandonment of his office and a new trustee may be appointed without proceedings for removal or notice to the absconding trustee.⁶⁰

(2) AFTER AN ESTATE HAS BEEN REOPENED.—Where an estate is reopened the office of trustee is vacant and the court may appoint where the creditors have failed to do so;⁶¹ but the appointment of a trustee being vested in the court upon certain conditions, a failure to comply with such conditions does not deprive the court of its jurisdiction, and the validity of the appointment of a trustee after an estate is reopened cannot be attacked in a collateral action.⁶² The continuance of the former trustee in office pending the appointment of a new trustee by the creditors, is an inequality, but does not necessarily affect his official acts.⁶³

g. Number of trustees.—Under the former law, the creditors chose "one or more assignees."⁶⁴ Now, there can be but one or three trustees. Votes for two trustees should, therefore, be refused.⁶⁵ It seems also that where one of three trustees dies, a meeting should be called to fill the vacancy.⁶⁶ At such a meeting the creditors may of course vote to continue the survivor alone, or elect him as a single trustee.

h. When no trustee.—By General Order XV, in no-asset cases, provided there are no appearances by or for creditors, the judge or referee may "direct that no trustee be appointed." This practice is new; it is a boon to bankrupts and referees. Its validity may, however, be doubted.⁶⁷ If the creditors do not appoint, "the court shall do so." If there is no trustee, the difficulty of setting off exempt property is apparent.⁶⁸ Efforts have been made to overcome this difficulty by local rules,⁶⁹ but their validity is also doubtful. If no trustee is appointed at such a first meeting a trustee may still be appointed later, "if the court shall deem it desirable."⁷⁰ In cases covered by this general order, further meetings may by order be dispensed with. Form No. 27 should be used, with such additions⁷¹ as to the setting apart of exemptions as the court feels it has power to grant.

i. Notification, bond, qualification, etc.—The referee must immediately notify the trustee of his appointment.⁷² Form No. 24 indicates the method. The notice is, however, often given orally, and should be, if the trustee-elect is present at the meeting. The trustee should notify the referee of his acceptance or declination. He rarely does. The presentation of the bond, or a failure to present within the required time is thought sufficient. The requirements as to trustee's bonds⁷³ and duties⁷⁴ are discussed elsewhere.

III. REMOVAL OF TRUSTEES.⁷⁵

a. For cause.—The creditors have, however, no control over the removal of trustees, other than to initiate proceedings to that end. The former law⁷⁶ gave them such control "with consent of the court." Now the court is given sole power to remove,⁷⁷ but this must be done by the judge, not the referee.⁷⁸ The district rules which confer on the referees jurisdiction to perform all the functions of the judge usually except such powers as have been withdrawn from them by the General Orders. Numerous cases on the removal of trustees under the former law will be found in point.⁷⁹ The practice on removals is suggested by Forms Nos. 52, 53, 54, and 55.⁸⁰ Removal is a matter of discretion⁸¹ and is, therefore, not reviewable;⁸² but, being a judicial discretion, should be exercised only when there is sufficient cause.⁸³ Where a trustee, by concealment or false representation, induces creditors to agree to a composition contrary to their interests, he should be removed.⁸⁴ It is not necessary

The fact that a trustee in bankruptcy had prior to his appointment, acted for the bankrupt and his wife, pursuant to an agreement under which they had conveyed to him all their property for the benefit of themselves and creditors is insufficient to justify his removal. Matter of Holden (D. C., N. Y.), 44 Am. B. R. 161, 258 Fed. 720.

to justify a trustee's removal that he be guilty of personal dishonesty; he may have so conducted the business or affairs of the estate as to have lost the confidence of the creditors and thus prevented their co-operation with him, in which case it will be for the benefit of the estate that he be removed.⁸⁵ The fact that a trustee has changed his legal residence to another district is not ground for his removal, where the change neither makes it impossible for him to perform his duties as trustee, nor difficult for the creditors to locate and communicate with him.⁸⁶

b. By resignation.—The statute does not, as did its predecessor,⁸⁷ provide for such a contingency. A trustee can unquestionably resign, but, it is thought, his resignation is still ineffectual, save "with the consent of the judge" or referee.⁸⁸

R. 504, holding that where a trustee has not only failed to carry out the wishes of the creditors by whom he was chosen, but has placed himself in direct antagonism to them without being able to assign any good reason for so doing, he should be removed, especially where the co-operation of the creditors is indispensable to the efficient administration of the trust.

SECTION FORTY-FIVE.

I. QUALIFICATIONS OF TRUSTEES.¹

§ 45. Qualifications of Trustees.—a Trustees may be (1) individuals who are respectively competent to perform the duties of that office, and reside or have an office in the judicial district within which they are appointed, or (2) corporations authorized by their charters or by law to act in such capacity and having an office in the judicial district within which they are appointed.

SYNOPSIS OF SECTION.

I. Qualifications of Trustees, 712

a. In general, 712.

b. Statutory qualifications, 712.

c. Disqualifications, 713.

I. QUALIFICATIONS OF TRUSTEES.¹

a. In general.—The only statutory disqualification under the former law seems to have been that the proposed trustee had received a preference. At the same time, the action of the creditors being subject to the approval of the judge, many disqualifications were in effect recognized by the courts. Since only those qualified may be appointed, votes should not be received for any nominees not clearly within the terms of this section. When the objection is that the proposed trustee is not competent² to perform the duties of the office, however, votes should be received, and, if they result in his appointment, his ability to perform such duties should be investigated before he is allowed to qualify.

b. Statutory qualifications; corporations as trustees.—Trustees may be either individuals or corporations. In either case, they must have offices within the judicial district. Under the former law, it was held that they must reside in such district.³ It is evident that actual presence is intended by the phrase "reside or have an office," rather than a legal or voting residence. The having of a fixed place of abode would seem to be what is intended by the statute.⁴ This restriction seems to make it necessary to appoint a different trustee in an ancillary proceeding in another district.⁵ If a corporation is chosen, only those authorized by charter or by law "to act in such capacity" can be appointed trustee. This manifestly applies to trust companies and other corporations which are permitted by law to do a trustee business. If a trust company is named as trustee, it should appear that the company has no connection or relationship with the bankrupt which would make the position of any particular advantage to the company.⁶ An alien may be chosen as a trustee if he resides or has an office in the district.⁷

1. See also Am. B. R. Dig. § 320.

2. Compare, under former law, § 18, R. S. § 5035.

c. Disqualifications.—So long as General Order XIII continues in force,⁸ certain disqualifications, based on precedent and common sense, rather than the statute, will also be recognized by the courts. Thus, under the present law, it is thought, one who is palpably the bankrupt's choice will be held disqualified, or, more correctly, his appointment will not be approved;⁹ although there is no statute against the election of a trustee merely because he is acceptable to the bankrupt.¹⁰ Mere hostile animus against the bankrupt does not positively disqualify the trustee,¹¹ but he should be a person free from prejudices and entirely disinterested.¹² The fact that a trustee has business

3. In re Havens, Fed. Cas. 6,231; In re Loder, Fed. Cas. 8,459.

4. Residence or office in judicial district.—In the case of In re Seider (D. C., N. Y.), 20 Am. B. R. 708, 163 Fed. 139, Judge Chatfield said: "A person might be domiciled or reside a greater portion of the year, and perhaps pay taxes in the county of Kings and in the eastern district of New York, and vote at a legal residence in another portion of the State, or even in a different State altogether. So with reference to the question of an office. A lawyer might have an office at his home in Brooklyn, and an office in one of the down town buildings in the Borough of Manhattan, and a third office in Jersey City, in the State of New Jersey, and any one of the three might be sufficient to meet the requirements of § 45."

It seems that a person having a place of business within the judicial district may be appointed a trustee although he resides without such district. In re Loder, Fed. Cas. 8,459.

5. Compare In re Boston H. & E. R. R. Co., Fed. Cas. 1,678.

6. A trust company named as trustee in many deeds of trust securing obligations owing to the bankrupt, and having as a director the principal counsel of the bankrupt, should not be appointed trustee of the bankrupt as its interests might conflict with those of the other creditors. Wilson v. Continental Building & Loan Association (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 37 Am. B. R. 444, 232 Fed. 824.

The active interference of the bankrupt in favor of the appointment of a trustee will render such trustee ineligible to appointment. In re Hanson (D. C., Minn.), 19 Am. B. R. 235, 156 Fed. 717.

10. In re Eastlack (D. C., N. J.), 16 Am. B. R. 529, 145 Fed. 68, approving an election where it appeared that the name of the trustee was suggested to one of the creditors by the bankrupt's attorney, and such creditor sent letters to all the other creditors recommending the election of the person so suggested.

Office with bankrupt's attorney.—The fact that a party occupies the same suite of offices as the attorney for a bankrupt, does not disqualify him from acting as trustee in the bankruptcy proceedings. Matter of Fisher (D. C., Pa.), 26 Am. B. R. 793, 193 Fed. 104.

relations with the referee is not sufficient to disqualify him.¹³ The fact that a person appointed trustee was formerly a receiver of the bankrupt estate, designated by the court, is evidence of his fitness and competency,¹⁴ and it has also been held that the fact that the trustee advised an assignment for the benefit of creditors, constituting the act of bankruptcy complained of, and was himself the assignee, does not disqualify him from acting as trustee.¹⁵ A stockholder or officer of a corporation is not ipso facto incompetent to act as trustee of the bankrupt corporation,¹⁶ and the fact that the proposed trustee is a stockholder in a corporation appearing as a creditor is not a disqualification,¹⁷ but a stockholder who had been intimately associated as legal adviser with those formerly in control will be deemed disqualified and his appointment should be set aside.¹⁸ A bankrupt who has not been discharged is not a proper person to act as trustee to another bankrupt.¹⁹ The former attorney for the bankrupt, whose relations, business and social, remain close, should not be appointed,²⁰ but the attorney for a petitioning creditor is not disqualified.²¹ Under the former law, that the assignee-elect was the bankrupt's choice warranted a refusal to confirm;²¹ so also where the candidate made it a regular business to solicit creditors' votes,²² or was a near relative,²³ or a bookkeeper of one of the bankrupts,²⁴ or had a direct adverse interest to the creditors,²⁵ or where the choice was secured by an agreement to pay certain voting creditors in full. But, it seems, a general creditor was eligible,²⁶ and that the bankrupt's attorney was not positively disqualified, if he at once severed his relations as such.²⁷

SECTION FORTY-SIX.

DEATH OR REMOVAL OF TRUSTEES.

§ 46. Death or Removal of Trustees.—a The death or removal of a trustee shall not abate any suit or proceeding which he is prosecuting or defending at the time of his death or removal, but the same may be proceeded with or defended by his joint trustee or successor in the same manner as though the same had been commenced or was being defended by such joint trustee alone or by such successor.

I. NO ABATEMENT ON DEATH OR REMOVAL OF TRUSTEE.

This is but a re-enactment of provisions found in the former law.¹ Prior to that law, it had been held that such cause of action vested in his personal representatives;² also that, if the assignee was defendant, the right of action abated.³ It was to meet these rulings that the section was inserted in the present law. It applies to all suits or proceedings, and as well if the trustee is a defendant as if a plaintiff. It applies also no matter how the trustee's removal is brought about, though it is a question whether it would if he resigned.⁴ In that case, the court could doubtless order a resigning trustee to continue such a suit. Removals of trustees are discussed elsewhere;⁵ likewise the effect of the death of one of three trustees.⁶ thereof, such suit does not abate on his resignation, but may be proceeded with by his successors when appointed just as though the same had been instituted originally by such successors.

DUTIES OF TRUSTEES.

§ 47. Duties of Trustees.— a Trustees shall respectively (1) account for and pay over to the estates under their control all interest received by them upon property of such estates; (2) collect and reduce to money the property of the estates for which they are trustees, under the direction of the court, and close up the estate as expeditiously as is compatible with the best interests of the parties in interest; *and such trustees, as to all property in the custody or coming into the custody of the bankruptcy court, shall be deemed vested with all the rights, remedies, and powers of a creditor holding a lien by legal or equitable proceedings thereon; and also, as to all property not in the custody of the bankruptcy court, shall be deemed vested with all the rights, remedies, and powers of a judgment creditor holding an execution duly returned unsatisfied; (3) deposit all money received by them in one of the designated depositories; (4) disburse money only by check or draft on the depositories in which it has been deposited; (5) furnish such information concerning the estates of which they are trustees and their administration as may be requested by parties in interest; (6) keep regular accounts showing all amounts received and from what sources and all amounts expended and on what accounts; (7) lay before the final meeting of the creditors detailed statements of the administration of the estates; (8) make final reports and file final accounts with the courts fifteen days before the days fixed for the final meetings of the creditors; (9) pay dividends within ten days after they are declared by the referees; (10) report to the courts, in writing, the condition of the estates and the amounts of money on hand, and such other details as may be required by the courts, within the first month after their appointment and every two months thereafter, unless otherwise ordered by the courts; and (11) set apart the bankrupt's exemptions and report the items and estimated value thereof to the court as soon as practicable after their appointment.

VI. Concurrence of Two of Three Trustees Necessary, 739.VII. Trustee to Record Certified Copy of Adjudication, 740.

I. SCOPE OF SECTION.

a. In general.—The duties of the trustee enumerated in this section are not exclusive. Other duties are put on the trustee in many sections scattered through the law.¹ Further additional duties are prescribed in General Order XVII. Besides, the judge or referee, or the creditors by resolution, may direct still other things to be done by the trustee, provided they are within the customary functions of such officers. While the trustee is technically at all times under the direction of the court, he should be ready to act upon his own responsibility and intelligence in the administration of the estate, resorting to the court for advice and instructions where matters of a complicated nature and of great importance have arisen.² His paramount duty is to conserve and advance the interests of the estate entrusted to him, which he can only do by keeping himself clear of alliances which tempt to make the estate's interest subordinate to his own.^{2a}

II. COLLECTION OF ASSETS.

a. Statutory provisions.—Subdivisions 2 and 3 of this section make it the duty of the trustee to collect the assets of the bankrupt, reduce them to money, and deposit the proceeds in designated depositories. The amendatory act of 1910 amended subdivision 2 by conferring upon the trustee certain rights of creditors in respect to property belonging to the bankrupt estate, and making him more distinctively the representative of the creditor as to assets within and without the custody of the court. By subdivision 1 he must pay over and account for interest on the assets.

1. See "Cross-References," ante.

2. The privilege of trustees to apply for advice cannot be abused by running to the court to settle every question that may appear to an irresolute trustee to be desirable to have settled without responsibility of action on his part. Nor can this practice be resorted to for the purpose of carrying on litigation between himself and adverse parties in an informal and irregular way. Trustees in bankruptcy are sui generis. In re Baber (D. C., Tenn.), 9 Am. B. R. 406, 119 Fed. 520. It may be safely said that if a trustee bears in mind that he is the representative of the estate considered as a whole, is bound to be vigilant and attentive in advancing its interests, and is under obligation to seek to carry out in the strictest good faith the provisions of the bankrupt act where they seem to apply plainly to the estate committed to his charge, he is not likely to go far wrong in doing, or in refusing to do, what may be asked of him by the creditors. In doubtful cases, the referee and the court will solve the perplexities of the trustee. In re Baird (D. C., Pa.), 7 Am. B. R. 448, 112 Fed. 960.

2a. Matter of Webster Loose Leaf Filing Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 42 Am. B. R. 125, 252 Fed. 959.

b. Trustee for creditors.—Vested with the title of the bankrupt,³ he is also the representative of the creditors,⁴ and should deal fairly between them and the bankrupt.⁵

c. Quasi officer of court.—He is, further, a quasi officer of the court.⁶ As in the case of other court officers, payments made to him under a mistake of law are recoverable.⁷

d. Duties and liabilities of trustees, as to collection of assets.—(1) IN GENERAL.—He must proceed to "collect and reduce to money the property . . . under the direction of the court, and close up the estate as expeditiously as is compatible with the best interests of the parties in interest."⁸ This he may do by, for instance, collecting accounts, even by suit or securing the necessary orders to compel the bankrupt to deliver over property belonging to the bankrupt estate,⁹ or selling goods or lands,¹⁰ or carrying out contracts entered into

5. In re Wrisley Co. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 13 Am. B. R. 193, 196, 133 Fed. 388, 390, the court said: "In all matters between creditors and bankrupt he should stand indifferent. His sole care should be to make the most out of the estate, and that primarily in the interest of the creditors. When he goes beyond that, and seeks to aid the bankrupt at the expense of the creditors, and by concealment or by false representations induces creditors to act contrary to their interest, he violates his duty, and should be removed."

Representative of creditors.—"By the clearest implication," says Judge McCormick, "he represents all the creditors, and as such representative has an interest in the just administration of the estate which belongs to the creditors." Trustee as quasi officer.—As was said by Judge Purnell in the case of McLean v. Mayo (D. C., N. Car.), 7 Am. B. R. 115, 113 Fed. 106: "While the Bankruptcy Act creates the office of trustee in bankruptcy such trustee is a quasi officer of the court in a qualified sense. He is in reality elected by, and represents the creditors of, the bankrupt, under the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. The bankruptcy court will protect the trustee in the discharge of his quasi official duties; but as the representative of the creditors his duties as such representative must be discharged, not as an officer of the court, strictly speaking, but as provided in the Bankruptcy Act."

The trustee is an officer of the court, and as such is subject to its direction in all matters concerning money or property which may have come into his possession by virtue of his office. In re Howard (D. C., Cal.), 12 Am. B. R. 462, 130 Fed. 1004.

Trustees in bankruptcy, like executors and administrators, are bound to use due diligence to get in the assets of the estate—to secure possession of the tangible property and collect the debts. If they fail in their duty they may be charged in their accounts with the value of assets thereby lost. If they take no steps to secure property or collect debts, of which they have knowledge, they are presumptively negligent. Matter of Reinboth (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 19 Am. B. R. 15, 157 Fed. 672.

9. An order that a bankrupt pay over money, which provides that in default thereof he be held guilty of contempt, and the marshal directed to arrest him and confine him in jail until he complies with said order, or is discharged, is erroneous, as leaving the question of default and contempt of court to the marshal, upon which question the bankrupt is entitled to a hearing on the return of an order to show cause upon such default. In re Baum (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 22 Am. B. R. 235, 169 Fed. 418.

An order to compel a bankrupt jeweler to turn over property to his trustee to cover a shortage in his stock of jewelry, or its proceeds, which the bankrupt explained had been stolen from his rooms in his absence, will not be granted where the evidence is insufficient to substantiate the claim of robbery. In re Chamelin (D. C., Pa.), 25 Am. B. R. 578, 184 Fed. 553.

Pleadings.—A petition by a trustee in bankruptcy to compel the bankrupt to turn over to the trustee certain moneys is insufficient where it does not allege that the amount claimed has been received by the bankrupt or is or has been in his possession, or under his control or which does not state facts from which either possession or control can be inferred. by the bankrupt prior to his adjudication,¹¹ or proceeding to set aside fraudulent transfers¹² or preferential liens,¹³ or by compromising claims by the acceptance of a smaller sum than the amount of the claim.^{13a} It is his duty, representing both the bankrupt and his creditors, to realize from the estate all that is possible for distribution among the creditors, and to this end he may assert claims, avoid preferences, and collect assets, even in some instances, where the bankrupt could not have acted, had bankruptcy not intervened.¹⁴ His chief duty is to make the estate available for general creditors.¹⁵

(2) DUE DILIGENCE.—Trustees, like executors and administrators, are bound to use due diligence to get in the assets of the estate,—to secure possession of the tangible property and collect the debts.¹⁶ An examination of the bankrupt's schedules, and a following up of all the leads naturally suggested thereby is the first step to be taken,¹⁷ and a failure on the part of the trustee in this respect will constitute negligence.¹⁸

(3) SURCHARGED WITH LOSS CAUSED BY NEGLIGENCE.—The trustee's failure to use proper efforts to realize upon collectible debts due the estate, subjects him to the risk of being surcharged to the extent of their value less reasonable costs and expenses of collection. His failure to pay taxes, when having in hand sufficient funds, by reason whereof the estate is subjected to interest and penalties, renders him liable to be surcharged to the extent of such interest and penalties.¹⁹ A trustee may be surcharged for loss arising from want of due diligence in reducing the property of the estate into money.²⁰

11. Carrying out bankrupt's contracts.—Where, prior to bankruptcy, the bankrupt had made certain contracts and had then assigned to claimant bank the money to become due under said contracts, and where after bankruptcy, the receiver and trustee had adopted and completed said contracts, it was proper to direct the trustee to pay to said bank the money accruing under the contracts. Duty of trustee to collect.—It is the duty of the trustee in bankruptcy to seek to recover assets belonging to the estate he represents from every source available and every party liable, when payment or delivery is not voluntarily made and the legal proceedings necessary promise results; that is, a substantial benefit to the estate. Billings v.

(4) COMPELLING TRUSTEE TO ACT.—He does not act judicially, but only administratively, and if he refuses to oppose a claim or to move for its reconsideration when he ought to do so, he may be compelled to act or to permit the objecting creditors to act in his name.²¹

(5) WISHES OF CREDITORS.—It is not necessarily the duty of the trustee to follow the wishes of a majority in number and amount of the creditors in prosecuting or defending suits. He is to exercise his own judgment. But when his own judgment concurs with that of a great majority of all the creditors who speak, all having the opportunity to speak, and also with that of the referee or court in charge, it would seem plain that such judgment should control.²² As a rule, however, save in the common and simpler steps of administration, he should consult the wishes of the creditors; in many matters the law requires him to do this.²³ The creditors usually decide. First meetings should be continued and kept alive for this purpose. The referee in charge may, in extreme cases, disapprove. Such action is, however, not usual.

c. Suits by trustees.—(1) IN GENERAL.—A trustee's duty as to suits already pending in the name of or against the bankrupt has already been considered.²⁴ So has the time limitation on suits brought by or against him.²⁵ Rights of action arising upon contracts or from the unlawful taking or detention of, or injury to the property of the bankrupt, pass to the trustee, and he should assert them in the proper tribunal whenever necessary for the collection or preservation of the bankrupt estate.²⁶

(2) RIGHT TO SUE.—As a general rule the trustee alone has the power to sue to recover on a claim belonging to the estate.²⁷ The right to sue for the recovery of property transferred fraudulently belongs to the trustee and on his failure to sue, the right may not be transferred to a creditor.²⁸ It has been held in one case that the right to sue to set aside an alleged fraudulent transfer, made prior to the four months' period, may be assigned by the trustee

Liability for loss.—A trustee in bankruptcy, who examines the schedules and fails to discover certain notes listed therein, and, hence, fails to discover that said notes were secured by a mortgage, may be charged with losses sustained through its negligence. Matter of Kuhn Bros. (C. tee to a creditor.²⁹ But this decision does not appear to have been based upon a proper consideration of the statutory limitation of the powers of a trustee, and the purpose and effect of the bankruptcy act. The trustee represents all the creditors. The avails of a suit to recover property alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed belongs to the bankrupt estate and should be distributed equally among the creditors. If a creditor has knowledge of facts which will aid in the prosecution of such a suit, it is his duty to disclose such facts, and he should not be encouraged to conceal them by being permitted to become possessed of the right to sue, and thus be enabled to profit by such knowledge to the exclusion of the other creditors.³⁰

(3) ORDER OF CONSENT OF REFEREE OR COURT.—Before a trustee institutes a suit he ought to submit the reasons for the suit to the creditors and secure an order, based on their action, from the referee.³¹ Such consent seems not to be necessary when a suit is brought against him.³² How far the question at issue shall be gone into on such a preliminary hearing is discretionary with the referee. He should at least be sure that there is a probable cause of action.³³ It would seem also that the proposed defendant, if a creditor and interested in the fund, may appear in opposition to a motion for permission to sue.³⁴ The trustee being required to collect and reduce to money the property of the estate would seem sufficient to justify a suit by the

R. 228, 201 Fed. 93), in which the court recognizes the doubt as to expediency of permitting an assignment to a creditor of a cause of action to set aside such a transfer, by saying: "I think it would be far better practice to allow the creditor to prosecute the action in the name of the trustee at her own expense with an order that the recovery, if any, shall be for the benefit of the estate, but that out of such recovery the creditor shall be fully compensated for all costs and expenses including counsel fees before distribution. It may be and is a serious and close question whether a trustee in bankruptcy vested by statute with the right to prosecute an action to set aside a deed as fraudulent (one executed and delivered more than four months prior to the institution of bankruptcy proceedings) may assign the same. It is a statutory right pure and simple and is conferred on the trustee as such,—as an officer in fact of the court, to be exercised in the interest of and for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt. The interest he has in the real estate, if any, is held by him for the benefit of the creditors in the same way." It is difficult to reconcile this statement of the court with the final conclusion that a sale by a trustee of such a right of action may be ordered.

³³ Probable cause of action.—When a trustee applies for instruction relative to a suit which the creditors wish him to bring, it is sufficient to show that he will probably succeed; certainty of success need not be demonstrated. If a proposition of settlement has been offered the moving creditors should also show that they are likely to secure a better result by a suit than by accepting the proposed settlement. In re Phelps (Ref., N. Y.), 3 Am. B. R. 396.

Duty to sue.—The duties of the trustee are prescribed by the bankruptcy act, and he must institute litigations whenever it is necessary for the purpose of collecting or reducing to money the assets of the bankrupt estate. By this obligation is not meant that he should burden the assets of the estate with costs and expenses arising out of all manner of questions that may be presented for litigation. There should be probable cause at least for believing that a right of action exists before the bankrupt estate is so burdened. In re Meadows, Williams & Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 100, 181 Fed. 911, citing Collier on Bankruptcy (7th ed.), p. 541.

R. 46, in which Referee Hotchkiss held that a secured creditor whose security is the proposed object of attack, but who is also an unsecured creditor, may object to the granting of the trustee's application; but his objection should be given little weight unless clearly for the benefit of all the creditors.

trustee, even without the order or leave of the court or referee.³⁵ Other parts of the statute imply that the trustee is expected to bring suits,³⁶ and the implication from the statute as a whole is that the trustee may act upon his own responsibility in bringing a suit.³⁷ As above indicated, however, the better practice is to secure an order granting the desired leave.³⁸

(4) SUITS BY TRUSTEES OF BANKRUPT CORPORATIONS.—A trustee of a bankrupt corporation succeeds to the rights of the corporation as to all rights, contractual and statutory, existing for the benefit of the corporation, and as such trustee, it is his duty to enforce such rights.³⁹ The right of a corporation to make an assessment upon unpaid corporate stock passes to the trustee.⁴⁰ Where a call or assessment against stockholders for unpaid subscriptions is required, the trustee should petition the court for an order directing the call or assessment to be made.⁴¹ Before making the order the court will investigate the facts to determine whether there is a balance due on the stock, and whether the assets are insufficient to pay the corporate debts,⁴² and the pro rata share that the holders of such stock must pay, up to the par value thereof, in order to liquidate the indebtedness of the bankrupt company.⁴³ A trustee must bear the burden and present such proof as will enable the court to find with reasonable certainty the facts necessary to support his order.^{42b} The stockholders of a bankrupt corporation are in court from the inception of the bankruptcy proceedings and are bound by the finding of the court that there is a want of assets requiring an assessment.⁴³ Upon the order being issued, the trustee must proceed to collect the unpaid subscription, by suit if necessary, and upon such suit the stockholders may interpose any reasonable defense, alleging, for instance, that they have already met their obligations.⁴⁴ The obligations or liabilities of a stockholder or director to creditors of a corporation, under a state statute, are not, as a general rule, assets of the corporation, and are not therefore enforce-

The clause was merely intended to give the court power to direct the proceedings of its trustees, if occasion for such direction should arise in any specific instance, and not to place upon the court the burden of giving constant directions as to the reducing of the property to money." Harlen v. American Trust Co. (Ind. App. Ct.), 41 Am. B. R. 401, 119 N. E. 20.

In Bergdoll v. Harrigan (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 44 Am. B. able in a suit by the trustee for the benefit of all the creditors,⁴⁵ even though the directors have unlawfully diverted the funds of the corporation by declaring and paying dividends while it was insolvent.⁴⁶

(5) SUITS FOR OTHER PURPOSES.—There is a divergence of authority on the question as to whether a trustee of a tenant in common may maintain a suit for the partition of the real estate in which the bankrupt was a tenant in common with others. This divergence is probably accounted for by the difference in the various statutes which relate to the right to partition.⁴⁷ If an agreement be made between a party and a receiver of the bankrupt's property appointed in a State court, the trustee may not sue on such agreement.⁴⁸ It is not the duty of the trustee to bring suit for a small recovery which would not prove beneficial to the estate.⁴⁹ Section sixty should be consulted for suits to avoid preferences; section sixty-seven for suits to annul preferential or fraudulent liens; and section seventy for suits under State laws to avoid fraudulent transfers. The diverse character of the suits which may be brought by trustee is suggested by the cases in the foot-note.⁵⁰

Fraud of corporation.—In an action by a trustee in bankruptcy of a corporation on a note given for subscription to stock, a claim of fraud by the corporation in procuring the subscription, not mentioned until after the commencement of the action, is not a defense. Smoot v. Perkins (Tex. Civ. App.), 40 Am. B. R. 198, 195 S. W. 988.

Stock issued in violation of state law.—A trustee in bankruptcy of a corporation is entitled to recover on a note given for subscription of its stock, although such stock was issued in violation of the constitution and laws of the State. *Smoot v. Statutory liabilities of directors.—Where, by statute, the directors are personally made liable in case debts are contracted in excess of the fixed amount of the capital stock, or in any other contingency, the existence of this liability is no reason for a refusal to call in and collect unpaid stock subscriptions. Such liability is not an asset of the bankrupt corporations but is security for the creditors. The trustee in bankruptcy has no right to pursue this remedy. In re Crystal Springs Water Co. (D. knew of the bankruptcy, and that a trustee was imminent, and that the bankrupt estate had an interest in the property conveyed. Instead of accepting a consideration which was of value to the bankrupt estate, they accepted one which wholly disregarded his interests, except to cancel the debts of the bankrupt to the vendee, which created an illegal preference. It was held that the trustee, after his appointment, became beneficially interested as a stockholder and could file a stockholder's bill in equity to vacate the sale for alleged abuse by the majority. *Greenhall v. Sale of property by bankrupt and partner.—Where a bankrupt and his partner conducting a general soda fountain business sell their entire stock, business and fixtures to the father-in-law of the partner and the father continues the business under the original firm name, the trustee of the bankrupt cannot have the sale set aside because the vendee left the property in the possession of the partner who created a large amount of debts, credit being given on the strength of the possession of the property. In re Young (D. bankrupts, against which a counterclaim was interposed by defendant, who prevailed not only on his counterclaim but also in entirely defeating the claim of the trustee, the trustee is responsible for the costs of the action. Matter of Havens (D. C., N. Y.), 25 Am. B. R. 116, 182 Fed. 367.

53. Settlement by trustee.—A judgment note was given by a bankrupt and entered within four months of the date of the petition in bankruptcy. The bankrupt thereafter conveyed certain property to another person by warranty deed, subject to certain mortgages, a portion of the purchase money being placed in the hands of the vendee's attorneys to hold in trust for the bankrupt until he had satisfied such judgment and then to turn the same over to the bankrupt i. e. s certain interest on the mortgages and unpaid taxes. The trustee in bankruptcy instituted proceedings in the court in which the judgment was entered to have it declared invalid as being an unlawful preference, with the result that the judgment was struck off; but upon appeal the lower court was reversed for lack of a jury trial. Being without funds to continue the litigation, the trustee negotiated for a settlement with the judgment creditor whereby the latter was to pay the costs and in addition a certain sum to the trustee, with a view of eliminating the trustee from the controversy and affirming the validity of the judgment lien upon such property. The effect of such settlement would have been to compel the purchaser to pay more than $1,200 in addition to the money left in his attorneys' hands, whereas an offer by the purchaser to pay the cost and furnish counsel to proceed with the litigation seemed likely to be successful and for the interest of the bankrupt's creditors ultimately. It was held that as the settlement proposed to do what the bankrupt would never have been permitted to do by a court of equity—to take the money from the judgment creditor at the expense of the vendee in violation of his contract, by not reducing the amount of the judgment lien—it was inequitable to permit the trustee, who had no higher rights than the bankrupt, to do so and that the offer of the vendee should be accepted. In re Geiselhart (D. C., Pa.), 25 Am. B. R. 318, 181 Fed. 622.

f. Property vested in trustees.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The property which constitutes the estate of the bankrupt, and vests in the trustee, is considered fully in the discussion under section seventy.

(2) AMENDATORY ACT OF 1910.—The amendatory act of 1910 amended subdivision 2 of subsection a by providing in effect that the trustee should have the same title to property in the custody of the court that a creditor, holding an execution or other lien by legal or equitable proceedings levied against that property, would have under a State law; and, as to property not in the custody of the court, that the trustee should stand in the position of a judgment creditor holding an execution returned unsatisfied, thus entitling him to proceed against the assets in the same manner as a judgment creditor.⁵⁶

(3) RULE EXISTING PRIOR TO AMENDMENT.—Prior to the amendment of 1910 the trustee was not clothed with the privileges of a judgment creditor.⁵⁶ The trustee's title as against a claim under an unrecorded conditional sale, though the State law required record, did not prevail.⁵⁷ This rule still applies where property was acquired by the bankrupt on a conditional sale contract prior to the amendment.⁵⁸ The supreme court had held in effect that a trustee in bankruptcy under an unrecorded contract of conditional sale was only vested with the title and interest of the bankrupt in the property acquired by him under such contract.⁵⁹

(4) AMENDMENT TO BE CONSTRUED WITH § 70.—Under § 70 of the act the trustee is vested by operation of law with the title of the bankrupt as to all property which belonged to him in his own right, and he takes the same, not as an innocent purchaser, but subject to all valid claims, liens and equities.⁶⁰ Under this statutory limitation, the trustee was held "to stand in the shoes of the bankrupt,"⁶¹ so that where a lien or security existed which was enforceable as against the bankrupt, it must be recognized by the trustee, and could not therefore be attacked by the trustee for the benefit of general creditors. It seems that the language of the amendment might have found a more appropriate place in section 70 of the act, but, however that may be, it is plain that the two sections must now be construed together and that the trustee can no longer be said to have the limited title of the bankrupt.⁶²

of claims, vote at a special meeting in favor of an offered compromise of a suit brought by the trustee, the court will not necessarily, upon the authority of section 56-a of the bankruptcy act, direct the trustee to accept the compromise, but in a proper case will order a bond of indemnity to be executed by the creditors opposing the compromise, saving the bankrupt estate from costs, expenses and counsel fees of such litigation. In re Meadows, Williams & Co. (D. (5) GENERAL PURPOSE AND EFFECT OF AMENDMENT.—It was to obviate the prior limitation upon the right of a trustee to attack unrecorded conditional sale contracts and other like liens, that section 47, clause 2, subsection a, of the act was amended by inserting the words "And such trustees, as to all property in the custody or coming into the custody of the bankruptcy court, shall be deemed vested with all the rights, remedies, and powers of a creditor holding a lien by legal or equitable proceedings thereon."⁶³ The purpose of the amendment was to give to the trustee the lien of a judgment creditor, enabling him to protect general creditors from unrecorded liens, unlawful transfers, spurious claims and other dissipations of the assets of the estate, which a lien or judgment creditor might have prevented had bankruptcy not intervened.⁶⁴ Decisions holding that a trustee has no other right than belonged to the bankrupt are no longer controlling.⁶⁵ The amendment is not to be given any retroactive effect.⁶⁶ If none of the creditors of the bankrupt had a lien by judgment or otherwise against the property in question, the amendment does not increase the trustee's rights, but as to such property he stands in the shoes of the bankrupt.⁶⁷

(6) STATUS OF TRUSTEE THAT OF CREDITOR HOLDING LIEN.—The trustee no longer "stands in the shoes of the bankrupt."⁶⁸ Under the amendment the trustee may attack the validity of any lien, or other claim against the bankrupt's property which a creditor holding a lien by legal or equitable proceedings

Effect of failure to amend section 70.—Although the amendment of 1910, to the bankruptcy act, increasing the rights of a trustee in bankruptcy to those of a lien creditor, should more properly have been made to section 70, which deals with property as to which the trustee acquires title, than to section 47, which relates more particularly to the duties of a trustee, it does not follow that it should necessarily have been so made, or that it is any the less effective because having been made to the latter section, the intention of Congress having been clearly expressed by the terms of the amendment. Trustee no longer in position of bankrupt.—In the case of In re Nelson (D. C., S. Dak.), 27 Am. B. R. 272, 275, 91 Fed. 233, the court said: "Under section 47, subd. 'a,' 2 of the Bankruptcy Act, as amended in 1910, if property coming into the custody of the court be claimed by another, the trustee is vested with all the rights, remedies, and powers of a creditor holding a lien by legal or equitable proceedings thereon. Applying its plain interpretation to this section and amendment, it follows that an agreement which would have been binding upon and could have been enforced between the parties hereto prior to the amendment of 1910 no longer necessarily binds the trustee. His position is no longer the same as that of the bankrupt, but he is now in the position of a creditor holding a legal or equitable lien, and in this case the conditional sale of this property and the writing above set forth, termed a 'warehouse receipt,' are to be interpreted exactly as if the trustee were a creditor holding such lien. might have attacked.⁶⁶ Under this provision of the statute the trustee is not limited to such objections to a transaction between the bankrupt and a creditor as the bankrupt might have had, but he may make any objection that a creditor holding a lien might make.⁷⁰ The class of cases, unprovided for by the original act, and intended to be reached by the amendment, was that in which no creditors had acquired liens by legal or equitable proceedings and to vest in the trustee for the interest of all creditors the potential rights of creditors potential with such liens.⁷¹ The language is readily susceptible of this construction. It recites that such trustee "shall be deemed vested with all the rights, remedies and powers of a creditor holding a lien by legal or equitable proceedings thereon." This language aptly refers to such rights, remedies and powers as a creditor holding such a lien is entitled to under the law, rather than to the rights, remedies and powers of a creditor who had actually fastened a lien on the property of the bankrupt estate.⁷² The Potential rights of creditors.—In the case of Pacific State Bank v. Coats (C. C. A., 9th Cir.), 30 Am. B. The trustee no longer stands in the shoes merely of the bankrupt, with the limited rights of the bankrupt to attack unrecorded liens which may be valid and unimpeachable by the bankrupt; but the amendment by operation of law vests in him a lien equivalent to such as would be acquired by legal or equitable proceedings upon the property coming into custody by virtue of the bankruptcy proceedings." The effect of the amendment of 1910 to section 47-a of the bankruptcy act is to collectively put the creditors of a bankrupt in the position of judgment or attaching creditors by representation and enables the trustee to avoid the lien of a chattel mortgage given, prior to the amendment, by the bankrupt on merchandise retained by him under circumstances which made such mortgage void as to creditors. In re Hammond (D. C., Ohio), 26 Am. B. R. 336, 188 Fed. 1020.

Petitioner delivered to bankrupt certain farm implements pursuant to agreements, contemplating a sale, wherein bankrupt agreed to hold the property in trust for the petitioner to secure it for the purchase price of same. Certain terms of credit were given, bankrupt, however, agreeing to turn over upon demand all notes, cash, checks, and book accounts received by him or arising out of the sale of the property, which when so surrendered were to be credited to bankrupt amendment vests in the trustee, by operation of law, a lien equivalent in all respects to that acquired upon the property coming into the custody of the trustee, by virtue of legal or equitable proceedings instituted against the

as payment on account of the purchase price. It was provided that petitioner could terminate the contract at any time by notice in writing in case it became satisfied that bankruptcy was not entitled to the credit extended, and it was further stated that the written agreement contained all the "conditions of the sale." It was held that the agreements were contracts of sale; that the provision therein that title to the property should remain in the vendor until fully paid for was, under the law of Pennsylvania, void as against bankrupt's creditors and so void as against bankrupt's trustee under section 47a, (2) of the bankruptcy act, as amended in 1910. In re Hartdagen (D. C., Pa.), 26 Am. B. R. 532, 189 Fed. 646.

In the case of Matter of Pittsburg-Big Muddy Coal Co. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 32 Am. B. R. 462, 215 Fed. 703, the court said: "Under the amendment the filing of a petition in bankruptcy constitutes an equitable levy and a caveat to the world, for the following reasons: 1. The plain and natural reading of the words gives the trustees the same right to attach or resist secret liens that judgment creditors would have had if bankruptcy had not intervened, no matter whether there are or are not any such creditors when the petition in bankruptcy is filed. 2. If the amendment were to be construed so as to limit the power of the trustee to cases in which there are lien creditors, virtually nothing would be added to the original Act, for under sections 67-c and f liens created within four months prior to the filing of the petition may be used by the trustee for the benefit of the estate. 3. Although extraneous matter cannot properly be looked to in aid of the interpretation of a clear and unambiguous statute (for such a statute carries its own means of interpretation), yet it may not be amiss, as against a contention that this amendment is not unambiguous, to note that it was the intention of the committee in charge of the measure that the rule announced in York Mfg. Co. v. Cassell (15 Am. B. R. 633, 201 U. S. 344), should be changed."

It is true that the case of In re Lausman (D. C., Ky.), 25 Am. B. R. 186, 183 Fed. 647, conflicts with the view stated in the text. In this case a computing scale had been sold to the bankrupt upon a contract, which was never recorded, that title should remain in the vendor until the agreed price was fully paid, a portion of which was still due at the time of adjudication. Under the settled law of Kentucky, this contract constituted a sale and a mortgage back to the vendor to secure the price, but was valid, whether recorded or not as between the parties and as against general creditors having no liens. It was held that it was immaterial whether the other debts of the bankrupt were created before or after the mortgage in question was given, unless a lien on the computing scale in favor of some other creditor was otherwise acquired previous to the adjudication, that it was immaterial that the mortgage was not acknowledged or recorded and that no such lien having been otherwise acquired, the vendor had a preferred claim as against the scale or the proceeds of the sale thereof, under section 64-b (5) of the bankruptcy act.

Bankrupt executed and delivered a bill of sale for a motor truck to petitioner who had paid the full value thereof in cash, bankrupt agreeing to deliver the truck upon directions being given therefor. The truck, which bore bankrupt's name painted on it in large letters, was thus permitted to remain in its possession and use, being kept at a garage where, when bankruptcy intervened, it was being held under an attachment in a suit by the garage company for storage charges and supplies. Upon a petition to reclaim the property it appeared that the law of Massachusetts requires delivery in order to make a purchaser's title good against subsequent purchasers without notice or attaching creditors. Held, that the trustee in bankruptcy, being vested with the rights, remedies and powers of a lien creditor by virtue of the amendment of 1910 to section 74 of the Bankruptcy Act, was entitled to the property as against bankrupt's vendee. In re Waite-Robbins Motor Co. (D. C., Mass.), 27 Am. B. R. 541, 192 Fed. 47.

Land intended to be covered by mortgage but not described therein pass to the trustee. Matter of Scruggs Brothers (D. C., Ala.), 40 Am. B. R. 543, 252 Fed. 322.

Property procured by fraudulent representations.—Where vendors at the earliest opportunity rescind a sale of property to a bankrupt, procured by the latter's fraudulent representations, and under the State law the rights of the defrauded vendor prevail over the claims "of a creditor holding a lien by legal or equitable proceedings thereon," the trustee in bankruptcy acquires no title to such property under section 47-a (2). Matter of Gold (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 31 Am. B. R. 18, 210 Fed. 410. See also Matter of Collins (D. C., Ala.), 39 Am. B. R. 510, 242 Fed. 975.

Warehouse receipts.—Upon the bankruptcy of a cotton factor who stored the cotton in a warehouse and pledged the receipts therefor, there were intervening petitions by consignors and receipt holding pledgees. Held, that by virtue of the amendment of 1910 to section 47-a(2) of the Bankruptcy Act the trustee represents creditors not secured by receipts with the same force and effect as if they had levied executions upon the cotton in the warehouse. This property came into the custody of the bankruptcy court, and titles or liens which, under the State law, would have prevailed against such levying creditors are superior to the title of bankrupt by a creditor.⁷³ This provision of the bankruptcy act puts the trustee, in so far as the assets of the estate are concerned, in the position of a lien creditor,⁷⁴ but does not necessarily give him the status of a purchaser without notice.⁷⁵ His rights in respect to the property against which the lien is asserted flow from the amendment and not from the creditors of the estate, for whose benefit such rights must be exercised.⁷⁶

(7) STATUS DETERMINED AS OF DATE OF FILING PETITION.—The statute does not indicate the time as of which the trustee is to be regarded as having acquired the status of a creditor holding a lien by legal or equitable proceedings. It frequently becomes important to determine the time when the status exists, as where for instance the lien of a creditor becomes effectual under a statute if perfected by execution, attachment or other process before the filing or recording of an instrument affecting or transferring the property in question.⁷⁷ If the instrument was duly recorded or filed prior to bankruptcy the lien of a creditor did not attach at that time and the trustee upon his appointment acquires no right to attack the validity of the instrument. In analogy to the rulings in respect generally to the effect of filing a petition in bankruptcy, it has been authoritatively determined that the status of the trustee as a creditor holding a lien exists as of the date of the filing of such petition.⁷⁸

the trustee. Interstate Banking & Trust Co. v. Brown (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 37 Am. B. R. 771, 235 Fed. 32.

R. 835, 58 So. 280, wherein the court said: "We are of the opinion that the clause of the amendment in question was intended to provide that as to property adversely held the trustee should be entitled to proceed in such cases and in such manner as an individual creditor might have proceeded in subjecting the assets of the bankrupt, had the bankruptcy not intervened to prevent; and that no enlargement of the rights of the trustee representing creditors was intended over and above the rights conferred upon the creditors themselves by the statutes of the State; that as to substantive rights the trustee is in no better position than the bankrupt or his creditors would have been, except that he may come into equity without being required to first exhaust his remedy at law, a matter of advantage to the trustee in some jurisdictions."

State law to control.—The rights of a trustee under section 47a (2) of the bankruptcy Act to property coming "into the custody of the bankruptcy court," being the "rights . . . of a creditor holding a lien by legal or equitable proceedings" are essentially a matter of State law. Matter of Floyd-Scott Co. (D. in the trustee the same right to attack secret unrecorded liens, where record was required by the State law, as was given to judgment creditors and others under that law.⁷⁹ It was not the purpose of the amendment to enlarge the rights of a trustee as against a lien or under a state statute, but the main purpose was to enable the trustee to avoid secret and unrecorded liens created by the act of the bankrupt.⁸⁰ So that where an instrument conveying real property was not recorded prior to bankruptcy, it has been held that the trustee takes title to the land, under a statute which provides that a purchaser of land who records his deed before a prior purchaser has a superior title.⁸¹ The trustee of a bankrupt chattel mortgagor has all the rights and remedies of a lien or judgment creditor as against an unrecorded chattel mortgage, and the mortgagee may not after the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against the mortgagor take possession of the property under the mortgage.⁸² The recording to be effectual must be such as complies with the requirements of the recording acts, and in case of a failure, as where the instrument was not properly acknowledged, the trustee may avail himself of the defects, in the same manner and to the same effect as a lien or judgment creditor.⁸³ A contract of conditional sale, void under the State law as against judgment creditors of the purchaser unless recorded, is likewise void as against the trustee in bankruptcy of the purchaser in possession of the property.⁸⁴ But in some states a conditional sale contract is valid against the trustee in bankruptcy if recorded at any time before the petition is filed.^{84a}

(9) PROPERTY AFFECTED.—It has been held that the liens thus acquired by the amendment reaches generally all the property which comes into the possession of the court and is not limited specially to property which is subject to unrecorded chattel mortgages or contracts of conditional sale.⁸⁵ The trustee has no right as to property in the possession of the bankrupt which did not belong to him,⁸⁶ nor is the general rule that the trustee takes the

C., Ga.), 42 Am. B. R. 145, 250 Fed. 899.

Unrecorded liens.—It was clearly the intention of Congress in adopting the amendment of 1910 to section 47a (2) of the bankruptcy act that thereafter the trustee should not stand in the shoes of the bankrupt with regard to unrecorded liens depending for their validity upon registration; and that as to the general creditors, such liens should be void. Matter of Collins (D. C., Ia.), 37 Am. B. R. 692, 236 Fed. 937.

property subject to such liens as may be enforced against it, affected by the amendment.⁸⁷ If the property sold under a contract of conditional sale, not filed as required by a State law, is at the time of bankruptcy in the possession of the vendor, it does not pass to the trustee.⁸⁸

(10) PRIORITY OF DEBTS.—The amendment does not conflict with section 64-b (5) relating to priority of debts.⁸⁹ It has been held that a trustee may object to the priority of a claim based upon a mortgage given as security and recorded within the four months' period, and the referee may determine the question of preference in a proper case.⁹⁰ For the purpose of fixing priority as between a trustee in bankruptcy and adversely claiming lien holders, the time of filing the petition is the vital date, and a lien invalid on that date cannot be perfected before adjudication so as to make it valid against the trustee.⁹¹

(11) CREDITORS HOLDING LIENS; CONDITIONAL SALE CONTRACTS AND CHATTEL MORTGAGES.—The words "creditor holding a lien by legal or equitable proceedings" include a judgment creditor, holding an execution lien. The purpose of Congress was to embrace within these words every class of creditors with liens by legal or equitable proceedings favored by the varying registration laws of each of the States. The registration laws of some States include but one of many classes of such creditors. In that case the purpose of Congress is not to be frustrated as to the included class because other classes included in the amendment were not included also in the registration act of that particular State. The breadth of language was used for the purpose of gathering in all classes protected by local registration acts.⁹² If property coming into the custody of the court be claimed by another, the trustee is vested with all the rights, remedies, and powers of a creditor holding a lien

tion 64-b, clause 5. Under the State law the conditional vendor has no priority over judgment creditors without notice, and the amendment to the Bankruptcy Act places the trustee in that category. As against his right as conferred by the amended section of the Act, the conditional vendor has no priority and the order of payment provided for by section 64 is not therefore interfered with by not allowing the conditional vendor priority of payment." But in In re Lausman (D. C., Ky.), 25 Am. B. R. 186, 183 Fed. 647, it has been held that the questions involved do not depend upon what sort of title the trustee may take to the property coming into his custody as provided by the amendment of 1910 to section 47-a (2) of the bankruptcy act, but upon how that property is required to be distributed under section 64-b (5) thereof.

If a contract of sale is one of conditional sale, so that the title does not pass out of the vendor and such a contract is not required or permitted by the laws of the State to be recorded, the reservation of title is good as against the trustee; however, if it be an absolute sale, whereby the title passes accompanied by a lien by legal or equitable proceedings thereon. An agreement therefore which would previously have been valid between the parties—such, for example, as a contract of conditional sale⁹³—is no longer necessarily void against the trustee. He is in the position of a creditor holding a legal or equitable lien, and the agreement is to be scrutinized from that point of view. Such an agreement, purporting on its face to be a contract for a lease, may now be shown by the trustee to be a contract of conditional sale, although the bankrupt himself, under the contract, might be estopped from making such assertion.⁹⁴ A trustee may assert his title against the vendor under an unrecorded conditional sale contract.⁹⁵ The section as amended covers the rights of creditors under a chattel mortgage which is void as to such creditors under the laws of the State where made, and the trustee may enforce such rights as against the given back to the seller to secure the purchase price, the contract amounts to a chattel mortgage, and if not filed, is invalid against the trustee. Deere Plow Co. v. Mowry (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 384, 222 Fed. 1.

Validity of unrecorded conditional sale as against trustee; amendment of 1910; constitutionality.—A contract of conditional sale, reserving title in the conditional vendor until the property sold is paid for, which by State law is invalid unless recorded, as against creditors and lienors of the conditional vendee for value and without notice, is, by virtue of the amendment of 1910 to section 47-a (2), void as against the conditional vendee's trustee in bankruptcy. Such amendment is not unconstitutional as depriving the conditional vendor of his property without due process of law, as it does not violate one's constitutional rights to require him to conform to the recording acts of the State in which he has his property. In re Williamsburg Knitting Mill (D. C., Va.), 27 Am. B. R. 178, 191 Fed. 871; Hart v. Emmerson-Brantingham Co. (D. C., Mo.), 30 Am. B. R. 218, 203 Fed. 60. But see Big Four Implement Co. v. Wright (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 31 Am. B. Power to avoid unrecorded contract of conditional sale.—A trustee in bankruptcy, in respect to an unrecorded contract of conditional sale whereby goods have been delivered to the bankrupt and the title retained by the conditional vendor, has the same rights as a creditor holding a lien by legal proceedings; and it is not necessary to his rights that there should, in fact, have been such lien creditors where the petition in bankruptcy is filed. In re Dancy Hardware & Furniture Co. (D. C., Ala.), 28 Am. B. R. 444, 198 Fed. 336.

Validity of unrecorded contracts as against trustee.—By virtue of the amendment of 1910 to this section a trustee in bankruptcy, as respects property held by a bankrupt under an unrecorded contract of conditional sale, is vested with all the "rights, remedies, and powers of a creditor holding a lien by legal or equitable proceedings," and where property was delivered to bankrupt under a contract of conditional sale, not recorded as required by the Georgia statute, the trustee's rights, as to such property and the proceeds thereof, are superior to those of the conditional vendor. In re Farmer's Supply Co. (D. C., Ga.), 28 Am. B. R. 535, 196 Fed. 990.

Bill of sale.—Provisions of a bill of sale to a bankrupt examined and held not to create or reserve a lien superior to the rights of the trustee in bankruptcy. Matter of Cooper (D. C., Ia.), 35 Am. B. R. 321, 216 Fed. 309.

R. 699, 199 Fed. 1), holding that whenever a judgment creditor may attack a contract, in form a bailment, on the ground that it is really a conditional sale, and may support the attack by competent and relevant evidence that throws light on the true meaning of the contract—the trustee has the same right. The mere form of the agreement does not bind him, as it might bind the bankrupt; see also In re Gaglione & Son (D. C., Pa.), 22 Am. B. R. 694, 200 Fed. 81.

The trustee may retain chattels sold to the bankrupt under a conditional sale in a jurisdiction where, if he has really sold it and has also parted with the possession, the conditional vendor cannot enforce against execution creditors a condition that he is to retain the title until the price is paid, and this, even though the transaction has been declared by the parties to be a bailment, if the court is satisfied that a sale with condition as to title annexed was really intended. In re Gehris-Herbine Co. (D. C., Pa.), 26 Am. B. R. 470, 188 Fed. 502; In re Harrington (Ref., Mass.), 29 Am. B. R. 690, in which case Referee Olmstead discusses with characteristic clearness the circumstances which lead to the enactment of this amendment, and the rights of trustees in respect to chattels sold on condition, or by bill of sale, the possession remaining in the bankrupt.

mortgagee to the same extent as the creditors might have done.⁹⁶ So too, the trustee may attack a contract, in form a bailment, and show that it is contract for a conditional sale and therefore invalid as to lien creditors.⁹⁷

(12) FRAUDULENT TRANSFERS.—Under the section as so amended the trustee becomes vested with all the rights of a judgment creditor as to real property transferred in fraud of creditors more than four months prior to the filing of the petition.⁹⁸ A conveyance or transfer which is invalid because in fraud of creditors may be attacked by a trustee in the same manner and with like effect as could a judgment creditor had bankruptcy not intervened.⁹⁹ The trustee is not required to allege in an action under this clause, to recover property fraudulently transferred, that a deficiency of assets exists.¹⁰⁰

g. Sales by trustees.—The duty of trustees concerning, and the practice on, sales of assets of the estate is considered under section seventy. In the appointment of an auctioneer the trustee is to be guided by the court; the court may disapprove the selection of an auctioneer made by the trustee, and direct him to select another designated by the court.¹⁰¹

h. Employment of attorneys.—This, too, is considered elsewhere.¹⁰² An attorney may be needed to aid the trustee in the collection of the property of the estate. It would be the trustee's duty in such a case to employ such attorney.

i. Rapidity in administration.—This is required not only by subdivision 2 of this subsection, but by other provisions found in the law and the General orders.¹⁰³

j. Accounting for interest.—Subdivision 1 seems unnecessary. The former statute permitted a temporary investment of the funds where it appeared that distribution might be delayed by litigation.¹⁰⁴ The court or referee could doubtless order this now. Thus, there might be some interest earned. The frequency with which dividends must be paid,¹⁰⁵ however, makes any accumulation of interest unlikely. The trustee should, if possible, arrange with the official depository for interest. In any event, all interest received by a trustee must be accounted for. The interest accruing on interest-bearing assets must be collected and accounted for by the trustee.¹⁰⁶

k. Deposits.—Subdivision 3 of this section makes it the duty of the trustee to deposit all the money received by him in one of the designated depositories and General Order XXIX prescribes the method of withdrawal. These

Sale of real estate free from claim for dower; law of Pennsylvania.—Since by the amendment of 1910 to section 47a(2) of the Bankruptcy Act, a trustee in bankruptcy, in so far as the assets of the estate are concerned, is in the position of a lien creditor, and since under the law of Pennsylvania, a lien creditor can issue execution and by a sale thereunder divest the wife of a debtor of her dower interest in real estate, the trustee of a bankrupt may, by a sale in bankruptcy, divest the bankrupt's wife of her interest in her husband's real estate, without her consent. In re Freedman (Ref., Pa.), 29 Am. B. R. 135.

provisions of the act and the General Order are mandatory in form and were designed to insure the safety of the funds, rather than an increment by way of interest while they were idle. But it seems that the consent of all the parties interested may justify a departure from the prescribed rules.¹⁰⁷ However, referees in bankruptcy should take the utmost care to see that receivers and trustees comply with the law in reference to the depositing of funds, and that they deposit all funds received by them in a regularly designated depository.¹⁰⁸ A trustee may not deposit funds of the estate in interest-bearing savings accounts instead of a general checking account, without the consent of the creditors.¹⁰⁹

III. ACCOUNTS AND REPORTS.

a. In general.—Subdivisions 6, 7, 8 and 10 relate to accounts and reports which the trustee is required to keep and submit. The subdivisions seem redundant. If a trustee follows them literally, he will spend much of his time in keeping accounts and making reports. Stripped of surplusage and read in with General Order XVII, the trustee is required (1) generally, to keep regular accounts of receipts and disbursements, and, specially, (2) to prepare and file an inventory of the estate "immediately upon entering upon his duties," (3) to report the condition of the estate within the first month after his appointment, and every two months thereafter, unless excused by the referee, and (4) to make and file a final report and account at least fifteen days before the final meeting. All this in addition to the twenty-day report on exemptions.¹¹⁰ But, in effect, the "inventory" may be but a summary of the appraisers' report;¹¹¹ and the bi-monthly reports required by subdivision (10) are rarely made. The purpose—that the trustee shall be always under the eye of the creditors and the referee—is apparent. So long as this is recognized, a trustee will, it is thought, perform his duty satisfactorily, even though he does not always have an accountant at his elbow. A trustee, who fails to obey an order to file his final account, may be committed for contempt.¹¹² Payments to a referee of unauthorized charges rendered by the referee, without an order therefor, should not be allowed in the trustee's account;¹¹³ although if payments made to a referee without formal order may not be considered illegal or improper the court may ratify them.¹¹⁴

110. General Order XVII.

111. Bankr. Act, see § 70-b, Form No. 13.

112. Failure to obey order to file account; contempt.—The trustee of a bankrupt, in the face of orders requiring him to file his final account, having held up the final settlement of the bankrupt's estate for more than a year, the district court on October 27, 1910, made an order requiring the trustee to file his account by November 15, 1910, or in the alternative to be committed to jail for contempt. On November 14, 1910, a petition to revise such order was allowed. It was held that, it being necessary to consider the petition as of the date it was granted, it could not be presumed that the court intended to issue a commitment for contempt before judgment of conviction should have been pronounced; that no such judgment being disclosed by the record, and the order, so far as it required the account to be filed, being proper, the petition to revise the order must be dismissed. O'Connor v. Sunseri (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 1, 184 Fed. 712.

113. Matter of Borger (Dist. Col. Sup. Ct.), 35 Am. B. R. 238, 43 Wash. L. Rep. 436.

Duty to consult records.—A trustee in bankruptcy has no right to assume that the referee has obtained an order for the allowance of certain charges to himself. It is his duty to consult the records of the court. Matter of Borger (Dist. Col. Sup. Ct.), 35 Am. B. R. 238, 43 Wash. L. Rep. 436.

114. Matter of Schreiber (D. C., Sup. Ct.), 35 Am. B. R. 241, 43 Wash. L. Rep. 500.

b. Practice.—The difference between an account and a report should be noted; an account should deal only in dollars and cents;¹¹⁵ a report should be a running summary of the details of administration. The trustee's report that there are no assets seems also to be called a "return."¹¹⁶ The word "statement" is also used of a report where there are no assets. Whatever these papers be called, they should conform as far as possible to the official forms, should always be verified by the trustee, and, if reciting disbursements, usually be accompanied by vouchers. They should be filed with the referee, if the case has been referred. They should also be audited by the referee.¹¹⁷ This seems, however, a precautionary provision, rather than a requirement. Accounts are usually submitted to creditors at meetings called for that purpose,¹¹⁸ and, if passed by them, are approved.

IV. DISTRIBUTION.

a. In general.—Disbursements must be made by check or draft as directed in subdivision 4. Dividends are to be paid within ten days after they are declared as directed in subdivision 9. Some authority must be shown for all disbursements, whether in dividends or otherwise.¹¹⁹

b. Expenses of administration.—What a trustee may be allowed for expenses of administration is considered elsewhere.¹²⁰

c. Payment of priorities.—So also of his duty as to those persons entitled by the law to priority of payment.¹²¹

d. Dividends.—Likewise of dividends to creditors who have proved their claims.¹²² The only provision here is that dividends must be paid within ten days after they are declared.^{122a}

e. Method of payment.—Subdivision 4 and General Order XXIX should be read together. No moneys can be properly disbursed by a trustee save Ratification by general creditors of improper allowances by trustee to referee.—Where the general creditors of a bankrupt, after being advised by a special master that payment by the trustee to the referee of certain sums allowed by the latter to himself, is improper, approve the act of the trustee, the trustee should be allowed for such payments, although they were made without an order of the referee which might have been reviewed, and also contrary to a subsequent decision of this court. Matter of Lacey & Co. (Dist. Col. Sup. Ct.), 35 Am. B. R. 231, 43 Wash. L. Rep. 434; Matter of Smith (Dist. Col. Sup. Ct.), 35 Am. B. R. 237, 43 Wash. L. Rep. 436.

Audit of accounts.—It is the duty of a special master to whom a trustee's account has been referred, on the resignation of the referee, to audit the same and credit him with only such items as were authorized by law. He is not justified in allowing unlawful payments merely because no creditors objected to them. Matter of Borger (Dist. Col. Sup. Ct.), 35 Am. B. R. 238, 43 Wash. L. Rep. 436.

The district court for the Eastern District of North Carolina has adopted and distributed rule 10 as follows: "All funds belonging to bankrupt estates must be deposited in the designated depository (section 47, cl. 3, Bankr. Act), and disbursed only by check or draft drawn on such depository in accordance with dividend sheet prepared by referee and approved by the judge (section 47, cl. 4). Such checks or drafts must be countersigned as provided by general order 29 of the Supreme Court. Depositories and trustees not observing this rule make themselves liable on their bond and to attachment for contempt."

"by check or draft on the depository." The provisions of the statute and General Order should be strictly followed,¹²³ and where payments have been made without compliance therewith they have been disallowed.¹²⁴ Thus, if deposited in the district court, money can be withdrawn only by a check or warrant, signed by the clerk and countersigned by the judge, or by "a referee designated for that purpose."¹²⁵ The quoted words are usually availed of in composition cases.¹²⁶ While, if the money is deposited by the trustee, the referee must countersign each check. Payments should not be made upon orders drawn by the referee.¹²⁷ The requirements of the General Order as to stub entries, numbering and the like, should be observed. Checks should always run to and be by the trustee mailed or delivered to the creditors, unless the power of attorney specifically authorizes the attorneys to receive and receipt therefor.¹²⁸ In disbursing dividends, a combination check and receipt, the latter attached to the check but marked off from it by a perforated line, and containing a statement that the check will not be paid on presentation unless the receipt is filled out and signed, has been found convenient.¹²⁹ Trustees will also find it time saving to recite on the face of the check the name and number of the estate, whether it is a first, second, or final dividend, and the rate per cent.¹³⁰ To this end, dividend checks, if numerous, should be specially printed; if not, the use of rubber stamps containing the suggested information will be found inexpensive and effective. But checks should not be signed or countersigned by such a stamp.

f. Trustee's supplemental report.—Though not required, safety seems to suggest that the trustee file a supplemental report after the distribution is complete. This should show every allowance or expense paid and every individual disbursement; and vouchers, signed by the creditors and others and numbered, if possible, to correspond to the check numbers, or attached to the returned checks, should be filed at the same time. Not until such report is filed should the trustee be discharged.¹³¹

V. MISCELLANEOUS DUTIES.

a. Setting apart exemptions.—While exemption rights depend upon State statutes, the manner of claiming such exemptions and of setting apart and awarding them is regulated by the bankruptcy act.¹³² Subdivision 11 of this section requires the trustee to set apart and report the value of the bankrupt's exemptions. In this connection section six should also be consulted. Preliminary to this, the trustee must "set apart the bankrupt's exemptions and report on the items and estimated value thereof." He should thereupon surrender possession of such property to the bankrupt.¹³³ This should be done within twenty days after the trustee receives notice of his appointment.¹³⁴ Thus, the trustee acts in a quasi-judicial capacity in the first instance, and, if there is no exception taken, the referee usually approves. But any creditor may take exception to the trustee's action.¹³⁵ If exception is taken, the practice is defined in General Order XVII, which requires it to be taken within twenty days after filing the report and the referee may not extend such time.¹³⁶ This whole subject was also regulated by a general order under the former law.¹³⁷

b. Furnishing information.—The trustee's duty here is similar to the referee's.¹³⁸ He is also liable to the same penalties.¹³⁹ This duty is akin to that of frequent accountings, the latter seeming for the whole body of creditors, the former for any individual who may request. Any person interested in the bankrupt estate has a right to an inspection of the accounts and papers of the trustee,¹⁴⁰ and to any information in respect to the estate which the trustee can impart.¹⁴¹ It is not thought, however, that, in answering inquiries by mail, the trustee can use the "official business" envelope, as can the referee. Cases under the former law are still in point.¹⁴²

c. Other duties.—The trustee also has other miscellaneous duties, as, for instance, the examination and correction of proofs of debt,¹⁴³ attendance on examinations of the bankrupt, and to assist the creditors and the referee generally in the realization and distribution of assets.

VI. CONCURRENCE OF TWO OF THREE TRUSTEES NECESSARY.

Three trustees are rarely appointed. If they are, a majority must always concur. This seems a variance from the rule that a trust to two or more

Duty of trustee to set apart exemptions.—In the case of In re Andrews & Simonds (D. C., Mich.), 27 Am. B. R. 116, 120, 193 Fed. 776, the court said: "There is nothing in the bankruptcy law except the above caption to the official form of schedule, which either requires or even suggests that the bankrupt must specify the articles in a stock of goods which he claims as his exemption. On the contrary, the law expressly lays upon the trustee the duty to select and set apart the exemption. In other words, if the bankrupt has clearly indicated his intention not to waive his exemption and has also specified the particular class of property owned by him from which he claims his exemption, it then becomes the duty of the trustee to select and sever the exemption from the mass of property belonging to the estate of the character and in the class indicated. This view is supported by authority."

In the case of In re Finkelstein (D. C., Pa.), 27 Am. B. R. 229, 231, 192 Fed. 738, the court said: "The bankrupt is presumed to be entitled to the exemption which the law allows, until it is otherwise judicially determined, and in this he has a right to be heard. A trustee is not a judicial officer, his functions and duties are merely administrative, and when requested the law commands him accordingly to set aside the exemption schedules, and in this he has no alternative."

Order of state court to turn over exemptions of officers of that court; contempt.—A trustee, who, prior to an order made in a state court directing him to turn over a bankrupt's exemption to a receiver in the state court, has turned the exemption over to the bankrupt, is not guilty of contempt. *Garlington v. is vested in all and that all must, therefore, join in exercising it. The law being mandatory in requiring either one or three trustees,¹⁴⁴ it seems doubtful whether, on the death of one, the survivors can do anything until the vacancy is filled in the regular way.¹⁴⁵

VII. TRUSTEE TO RECORD CERTIFIED COPY OF ADJUDICATION.

The subsection was added in 1903. Section 21-e seems to have been overlooked. There can be no doubt, however, as to the meaning of the new subsection. The trustee is bound within the time limited to file, which doubtless means also to record, in all counties where the bankrupt has real estate, a certified copy of the decree of adjudication. It is unfortunate that this filing is not in words given the effect of actual notice. Thus the recording of the certified copy of the order approving the trustee's bond is still essential.¹⁴⁶ Careful trustees will see that both these copies are recorded. This new duty is put only on trustees in proceedings begun after February 5, 1903.¹⁴⁷

SECTION FORTY-EIGHT.

COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEES, RECEIVERS AND MARSHALS.

§ 48. Compensation of Trustees.— a Trustees shall receive for their services, payable after they are rendered, a fee of five dollars deposited with the clerk at the time the petition is filed in each case, except when a fee is not required from a voluntary bankrupt, and such commissions on all moneys disbursed or turned over to any person, including lienholders,* by them, as may be allowed by the courts, not to exceed six per centum on the first five hundred* dollars or less, four per centum on moneys in excess of five hundred dollars and less than fifteen hundred dollars, two per centum on moneys in excess of fifteen hundred dollars and less than ten thousand dollars, and one per centum on moneys in excess of ten thousand dollars. And in case of the confirmation of a composition after the trustee has qualified the court may allow him as compensation, not to exceed one-half of one per centum of the amount to be paid the creditors on such composition.

b In the event of an estate being administered by three trustees instead of one trustee or by successive trustees, the court shall apportion the fees and commissions between them according to the services actually rendered, so that there shall not be paid to trustees for the administering of any estate a greater amount than one trustee would be entitled to.

c The court may, in its discretion, withhold all compensation from any trustee who has been removed for cause.

d Receivers or marshals appointed pursuant to section two, subdivision three, of this act shall receive for their services, payable after they are rendered, compensation by way of commissions upon the moneys disbursed or turned over to any person, including lienholders, by them, and also upon the moneys turned over by them or afterwards realized by the trustees from property turned over in kind by them to the trustees, as the court may allow, not to exceed six per centum on the first five hundred dollars or less, four per centum on moneys in excess of five hundred dollars and less than one thousand five hundred dollars, two per centum on moneys in excess of one thousand five hundred dollars and less than ten thousand dollars, and one per centum on moneys in excess of ten thousand dollars: Provided,

* Amendment of 1910 in italics.

That in case of the confirmation of a composition such commissions shall not exceed one-half of one per centum of the amount to be paid creditors on such composition: Provided further, That when the receiver or marshal acts as a mere custodian and does not carry on the business of the bankrupt as provided in clause five of section two of this act, he shall not receive nor be allowed in any form or guise more than two per centum on the first thousand dollars or less, and one-half of one per centum on all above one thousand dollars on moneys disbursed by him or turned over by him to the trustee and on moneys subsequently realized from property turned over by him in kind to the trustee: Provided further, That before the allowance of compensation notice of application therefor, specifying the amount asked, shall be given to creditors in the manner indicated in section fifty-eight of this act.

e Where the business is conducted by trustees, marshals, or receivers, as provided in clause five of section two of this act, the court may allow such officers additional compensation for such services by way of commissions upon the moneys disbursed or turned over to any person, including lienholders, by them, and, in cases of receivers or marshals, also upon the moneys turned over by them or afterwards realized by the trustees from property turned over in kind by them to the trustees; such commissions not to exceed six per centum on the first five hundred dollars or less, four per centum on moneys in excess of five hundred dollars and less than one thousand five hundred dollars, two per centum on moneys in excess of one thousand five hundred dollars and less than ten thousand dollars, and one per centum on moneys in excess of ten thousand dollars: Provided, That in case of the confirmation of a composition such commissions shall not exceed one-half of one per centum of the amount to be paid creditors on such composition: Provided further, That before the allowance of compensation notice of application therefor, specifying the amount asked, shall be given to creditors in the manner indicated in section fifty-eight of this act.

II. Apportioning Compensation Between Several Trustees, 748.III. Withholding Compensation When Trustee Removed, 748.*I. COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEES.¹

a. Comparative legislation.—In England, the fees of trustees are fixed by resolution of the creditors, subject to a review, under certain conditions, by the board of trade.² In Canada the trustee receives such remuneration as shall be voted to him by the creditors, but in no event more than five per cent of the cash receipts.^{2a} Prior to the present law, assignees' fees in this country have been "in the discretion of the court."³ The amendatory act of 1874 reduced the customary fees then paid by one-half.⁴ The present method is doubtless an adaptation of the State systems for compensating executors, administrators, receivers, and the like. The changes made by the amendatory acts of 1903 and 1910 are thought to strike a fair mean between the loose methods of the old law and the niggardly rigidity of the present statute as originally passed.⁵

b. Amount of compensation.—Three general considerations as to trustees' compensation should be noted: (1) that fixed by this section is "full compensation for their services," [save that which may be allowed under § 2 (5) as now amended];⁶ (2) the exact percentage, not greater than the prescribed upward limit, is fixed by the court, there being in this a difference between the fees of referees and those of trustees,⁷ and (3) no compensation is payable until after the services are rendered, i. e., when the administration is closed. The compensation is of two kinds, a filing fee and certain commissions, fixed and determined by the amounts which pass through the hands of the trustee.

c. Amount under original act.—Before the amendatory act of 1903 the commissions to be paid to trustees could only be reckoned on "sums to be paid as dividends and commissions,"⁸ and the rate was but about half that customarily allowed corresponding officers even fifty years ago.⁹ The result was that few competent men would serve as trustee the second time, thus crippling the administration of the law. Efforts were made to meet the difficulty in various ways, as by appointing attorneys to be trustees and allowing them compensation for legal services as an expense of administration,¹⁰ by appointing attorneys for trustees in asset cases, with a tacit understanding that the attorney's allowance should be shared with the trustee, or by allowing trustees extra compensation as agents of the creditors when they did more than perform the regular duties required by the law.¹¹ Each of these methods was of doubtful legality and subject to abuse. Since § 72, added by the amendatory act, they are no longer possible.

d. Pauper cases.—In certain cases, the trustee may serve without pay.¹² It has been thought, however, that, unlike the referee, a trustee cannot be compelled to serve in a pauper case, but, if the creditors desire him to do so, they must furnish his fee.¹³

e. Effect of amendatory acts of 1903 and 1910.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendatory act of 1903 has modified the original law as to trustees' fees in four particulars, all intended to make them more adequate.¹⁴

(2) COMMISSIONS ON DISBURSEMENTS.—(I) In general.—Commissions are to be computed on "all moneys disbursed or turned over to any person, including lien-holders¹⁵ by them as may be allowed by the courts," and cannot be otherwise fixed by agreement with the creditors.¹⁶ This presupposes that the Congress intended by the amendments to sections 40-a and 48-a to provide what it considered ample compensation for services to be rendered by trustees, and by section 72 to relieve the courts of the necessity of determining what constitutes legal compensation for such officers. 15. Amendatory Act of 1910, § 9.

16. Agreement with creditors.—The commissions legally payable to trustee are controlled and measured by the "money distributed" or "moneys disbursed or turned over," within the meaning of sections 40-a and 48-a of the Bankruptcy Act, and cannot be otherwise fixed by agreement with the creditors. American Surety Co. v. Freed (C. C. A., 3d Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 103, 224 Fed. 333. The fact that a trustee in good faith agrees prior to a sale to accept a less amount money disbursed belonged to the estate of the bankrupt and was rightfully in the hands of the trustee for disbursement. Such funds may come into the possession of the court for this purpose in two ways: (1) By operation of law, and (2) by the consent or acquiescence of those interested therein.¹⁷

(II) Property not lawfully in hands of trustee.—Property which comes to the possession of a trustee in bankruptcy through the fraud of the bankrupt, and is adjudged to be returned to the victim of the fraud, is not a part of the estate of the bankrupt, and the referee and trustee may not be allowed their statutory percentages out of it.¹⁸

(III) "On all moneys disbursed."—The words "on all moneys disbursed" are substantially the same as "received and paid out," which are found in the New York Code of Civil Procedure,¹⁹ fixing the commissions of executors and administrators, and cases construing that section and its predecessors before the code will be found in point.²⁰ There is a distinction between the basis of the compensation of the referee and the trustee in this respect; that of the former is reckoned only on "moneys disbursed to creditors." The trustee is entitled to commissions on all moneys disbursed by him, whether to creditors, secured or unsecured, or having priority, or to other persons.²¹

(IV) Secured and priority claims.—The amendment accords to trustees' commissions on all claims whether secured or entitled to priority under the laws of a State.²² If a secured creditor chooses to realize through the bankruptcy court, and the trustee thereby receives and pays out money, the equities are strongly against the secured creditor, and he should pay the commissions.²³

(V) Property not converted into money.—Prior to the amendment of 1910 it was questioned whether, if in such a case property, but not money, is received and turned over by the trustee, the latter was entitled to commissions.²⁴ It is probable that the language of the former statute did not entitle the trustee to commissions on property not converted into moneys,²⁵ but turned over at an

Commissions on profits of sale.—Where the volume of business transacted by a trustee amounted to about $900,000, resulting in a profit of $50,000, his award should be limited to the statutory percentages on the profits, as it cannot be said that trustee disbursed the moneys received except as to the profits. Mat-

24. The distinction between "money" and "property" made by the statute would not here be applicable. The secured creditor makes use of the system because it is apparently less expensive. Whether what he receives is money or land, he should pay the officers through whom it comes for their services, provided he has himself asked the relief. By analogy only, it seems, need these be the commissions fixed by the law.

agreed value to a creditor, or any other person. The amendatory act of 1910 inserted the words "or turned over to any person, including lien-holders," and has thus disposed of this question in favor of the allowance of commissions to trustees on account of property turned over to the bankrupt or a person holding a superior lien against the property.²⁶

(VI) Property or money on which commission allowed.—A trustee is entitled to commissions on all sums which, but for an outside agreement between the parties and their attorneys, would have been paid through the trustee.²⁷ Thus, he is entitled to commissions on the proceeds of the sale of exempt property, where the bankrupt does not object.²⁸ Likewise, where a corporation is organized for the purpose of taking over the bankrupt's business, the creditors agreeing to take stock in the new corporation in payment of their claims, the trustee is entitled to commission on the amount disbursed through the corporation by means of shares of its stock.²⁹ Commissions are payable on sums disbursed to lienors from the funds in the hands of the trustee which were subject to the liens.³⁰ And where a mortgagor did not prove his claim, but purchased the mortgaged premises on a sale by the trustee subject to the mortgage, the trustee is only entitled to commissions on the sale price of the equity of redemption.³¹ But the trustee is not entitled to compensation for his services from the lienors, where the proceeds of a sale of a bankrupt's assets, after distribution to the lienors, leave no surplus for the bankrupt estate.³² Such commissions should be paid out of the estate upon the assumption that the trustee would not have administered incumbered property unless for the interest of the estate.³³

R. 649, 211 Fed. 948, decided since 1910, is to the same effect. See also Gugel v. New Orleans Bank (C. C. A., 5th Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 100, 230 Fed. 676.

33. Payment out of estate.—Matter of Huggins (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 24 Am. B. R. 715, 179 Fed. 490, in which the court said: "A court of bankruptcy should not assume charge of incumbered property and liquidate the liens on it, unless there are reasonable grounds for believing some advantage will accrue to the bankrupt's estate. If the validity of the liens is unquestioned, and their amount is such that there is probably no excess of value in the property, it should be surrendered to the lienholders or others entitled, unless some other reason appears for retaining control. A court of bankruptcy is not a court of general jurisdiction for the adjudication of controversies or the administration of assets in which the bankrupt's estate is in no wise interested. If, however, cognizance is taken, it should be assumed some benefit or advantage was expected to accrue to the general creditors, and if it results otherwise it is equitable to make the general estate bear the cost of the proceeding. Here the proceeds of sale did not equal the admitted incumbrance, and the deficiency should not be further increased by deducting the commissions of the officers, if there is a general estate against which they can be charged. This is in analogy to the general practice in equity in foreclosure cases, where, if possible, the judgment lien creditors are paid in full, and if a deficiency results from deducting the costs from the proceeds it goes as a judgment against the debtor. It appears here that there was a general estate of the bankrupt out of which the commissions might be paid. Therefore we need not determine what should be done in case of a sale by a trustee in bankruptcy at the instance or with the concurrence of a lien creditor, a deficit of proceeds, and no general estate."

adjudged bankrupt, there is only one case for the purpose of computing the trustee's fees and commissions, and he should not be given an allowance on both the partnership estate and the individual estate separately computed.³⁴

(3) RATE OF COMMISSION.—The rate per cent. of commissions was considerably increased by the amendment of 1903, but only in small or medium-sized cases. On estates of over ten thousand dollars it remains unchanged. The purpose clearly is, on the one hand, an additional incentive to the discovery of assets in estates where the schedules show little or nothing, and a moderate increase in compensation in larger estates which, being spread over a goodly total, will not be felt. Thus, the rate on the first five hundred dollars is now six per cent. instead of three per cent., on the next one thousand dollars four per cent. instead of three per cent., on the next eight thousand five hundred dollars two per cent. instead of about two and two-fifths per cent.,³⁵ and, on the balance, one per cent., as now. That these fees are reckoned on "moneys disbursed," will also add materially to a trustee's emoluments in small cases.

(4) COMMISSION IN CASE OF COMPOSITION.—When a trustee has been appointed and qualified in a case resulting in a composition, he may be allowed "not to exceed one-half of one per centum of the amount to be paid to creditors." A trustee is rarely appointed in such cases,³⁶ but may be. As the law stood before the amendatory act of 1903, he could be allowed nothing. This is now corrected, and he is paid the same rate as is the referee.

(5) ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FOR CONDUCT OF BUSINESS.³⁷—Prior to the amendment of this section in 1910 by the addition of subsection e a trustee in bankruptcy was not entitled to an allowance of extra compensation,³⁸ but since the addition of that subsection, where the business of a bankrupt is ordered continued by a trustee, the court may allow additional compensation to him.³⁹ The maximum amount is fixed by the amendment. General Order XXXV (3) is, however, in no wise changed by the amendments. Under it, the compensation of trustees cannot be other or more than that fixed by § 48. This is emphasized by § 72, added by the amendatory act of 1903. A contract for extra compensation, made with a creditor owning more than ninety per cent. of the unsecured claims against the bankrupt, is void as against Commissions on deductions.—Where, under the terms of an order for the sale of assets requiring ten per cent. to be paid in cash at the time of the sale, it was provided that in case the property was purchased by a creditor there might be deducted from the balance of the purchase price the amount of the distributive share thereof to which he might be entitled, the trustee is entitled to commissions upon the amount deducted. In re Morse Iron Works & Dry Dock Co. (D. The "additional compensation" for conducting the bankrupt business as a going concern is realized by the allowance of commissions on the disbursements made in such conduct of the bankrupt business as well as on other disbursements. Matter of Hart & Co. (D. C., Hawaii), 17 Am. B. R. 480. The trustee may be allowed compensation for his services and expenses in attending and conducting a sale of the assets. In re Dimm & Co. (D. C., Pa.), 17 Am. B. public policy.⁴⁰ A trustee who is also an attorney may not receive, in addition to the trustee's fees, compensation for legal services performed.⁴¹ And where the volume of business transacted by a trustee amounted to a large sum, resulting in considerable profits, his commission must be computed on the profits and not on the business transacted.⁴² The amendment does not affect the compensation of a trustee appointed before it took effect.⁴³

(6) ALLOWANCE BY COURT.—The amount allowed as commissions may be less than those fixed by this section. It should always be borne in mind that no commissions can be paid or withheld until allowed by the court,⁴⁴ and in any event, only in such amount "as may be allowed by the court." The allowance rests in the sound discretion of the court and is not reviewable except where it appears from the record that such discretion has been abused.⁴⁵

II. APPORTIONING COMPENSATION BETWEEN SEVERAL TRUSTEES.

Whether there be three trustees or one, the compensation to all cannot be more than to one. But the court must apportion the amount between the trustees "according to the services actually rendered." This is contrary to the usual rule.⁴⁶

III. WITHHOLDING COMPENSATION WHEN TRUSTEE REMOVED.

The rule stated in subsection c needs no comment.⁴⁷ Within the limits fixed by law the amount to be allowed as commissions is subject to the sound judicial discretion of the court. Where a trustee has been negligent in the performance of his duty, the court may, in a proper case, without the filing of any exceptions, deny him any commissions.⁴⁸ A mere resignation or a vacancy because of disqualification discovered after appointment would not bar the trustee from compensation. Where a trustee is permitted to resign to avoid the odium of removal, the court may reduce his claim for compensation.⁴⁹ In all such cases, the proportion should be fixed in accordance with subsection b.⁵⁰

1. ACCOUNTS AND PAPERS OF TRUSTEES.

That the accounts and papers of trustees shall always be open to the inspection of officers and all parties in interest, seems to follow from § 47-a.¹ This section is, therefore, of little importance. "Accounts and papers" includes the books of the bankrupt in the possession of the trustee; in fact, any documents whether originated by him or received by him from the bankrupt. The penalties for secreting documents and for refusing to permit inspection are discussed elsewhere.²

BONDS OF REFEREES AND TRUSTEES.

§ 50. Bonds of Referees and Trustees.—a Referees, before assuming the duties of their offices, and within such time as the district courts of the United States having jurisdiction shall prescribe, shall respectively qualify by entering into bond to the United States in such sum as shall be fixed by such courts, not to exceed five thousand dollars, with such sureties as shall be approved by such courts, conditioned for the faithful performance of their official duties.

b Trustees, before entering upon the performance of their official duties, and within ten days after their appointment, or within such further time, not to exceed five days, as the court may permit, shall respectively qualify by entering into bond to the United States, with such sureties as shall be approved by the courts, conditioned for the faithful performance of their official duties.

c The creditors of a bankrupt estate, at their first meeting after the adjudication, or after a vacancy has occurred in the office of trustee, or after an estate has been reopened, or after a composition has been set aside or a discharge revoked, if there is a vacancy in the office of trustee, shall fix the amount of the bond of the trustee; they may at any time increase the amount of the bond. If the creditors do not fix the amount of the bond of the trustee as herein provided the court shall do so.

d The court shall require evidence as to the actual value of the property of sureties.

e There shall be at least two sureties upon each bond.

f The actual value of the property of the sureties, over and above their liabilities and exemptions, on each bond shall equal at least the amount of such bond.

g Corporations organized for the purpose of becoming sureties upon bonds, or authorized by law to do so, may be accepted as sureties upon the bonds of referees and trustees whenever the courts are satisfied that the rights of all parties in interest will be thereby amply protected.

h Bonds of referees, trustees, and designated depositories shall be filed of record in the office of the clerk of the court and may be sued upon in the name of the United States for the use of any person injured by a breach of their conditions.

i Trustees shall not be liable, personally or on their bonds, to the United States, for any penalties or forfeitures incurred by the bankrupts under this act, of whose estates they are respectively trustees.

j Joint trustees may give joint or several bonds.

k If any referee or trustee shall fail to give bond, as herein provided and within the time limited, he shall be deemed to have declined his appointment, and such failure shall create a vacancy in his office.

l Suits upon referees' bonds shall not be brought subsequent to two years after the alleged breach of the bond.

m Suits upon trustees' bonds shall not be brought subsequent to two years after the estate has been closed.

I. BONDS OF REFEREES AND TRUSTEES.

a. Of referees.—The referee, though a judicial officer, is required to give a bond. So was the assignee under the former law.¹ The amount, the sufficiency of the sureties, and the time within which the bond must be filed are usually fixed in the order of appointment. The condition is "the faithful performance of their official duties." The amount cannot be larger than five thousand dollars. A referee cannot act as such until he has filed his bond. Form No. 17 should be used.^{1a}

b. *Of trustees.*²—A trustee, too, must give a bond. This was not necessarily so under the former law; the judge might order the assignee to give a bond and, on the request in writing of a creditor, was required so to order.³ Trus-1a. The purpose of a referee's bond, though made to the United States as obligee, is to protect private individuals as well as the United States. United States v. Ward (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 43 Am. B. R. 711, 257 Fed. 352.

Taking illegal fees.—A bond conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of the office of referee covers moneys collected in the form of illegal fees and the sureties are liable therefor. United States v. Ward (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 43 Am. B. R. 711, 257 Fed. 372.

tees' bonds must be given within ten days after appointment, or within five days additional if permitted by the court. This seems mandatory, but the practice of extending the time still further when no objection is made is quite general. Where the question of the trustee's failure to give a bond is raised in a State court, the presumption is that the trustee duly qualified by complying with the provisions of the statute relating to a bond.⁴ The condition is the same as that in the referee's bond. But the creditors, not the court, fix the amount of a trustee's bond. This should be done at the first meeting, immediately after the appointment of the trustee. If the creditors fail so to do, the judge or referee fixes it. The amount is specified in the notice of appointment.⁵ Upon the approval of the bond by the referee the trustee takes title to the bankrupt's property, and the order of approval when duly certified and recorded is conclusive evidence of the vesting of the title.⁶

c. Sureties on bonds; forms.—Where bonds are given by individuals, there must be two sureties; if by a bonding company, there need be but one.⁷ The sureties, if individuals, must be worth "above their liabilities and exemptions," the penal sum mentioned in the bond. As to this, the "court shall require evidence." In actual practice, this is often done by adding affidavits of justification to the bond.⁸ This is, of course, not required of bonding companies in good standing. Joint trustees should give joint and several bonds. The form of the bond is prescribed.⁹ But, as has been suggested elsewhere, Form No. 26, the order approving the bond, should usually be modified by inserting certain dates, that when a certified copy is recorded in a local registry office parties interested in titles passing from a bankrupt to his trustee may have the same information that would be given had the bankrupt actually executed a deed.¹⁰ The practice of giving surety company bonds is now quite general. They are sufficient if the company is within the terms of subsection g. The liability of a surety extends to the expenditure of such funds of the bankrupt estate as becomes necessary as the immediate result of embezzlement by the trustee, but not including the premium of the bond of the new trustee.¹¹

d. Where filed.—Referees' and trustees' bonds must be filed and recorded in the office of the clerk. A trustee's bond is usually approved by the referee, whose duty it is forthwith to transmit the bond and the order of approval to the clerk.

e. Suits on bonds.—Though the bond runs to the United States, a suit may be brought thereon "in the name of the United States for the use of any person injured." Leave of court is not necessary for the bringing of such an action in the name of the United States.¹² Nor is it necessary that all the parties injured be named in the complaint.^{12a} No order need be made directing an absconding trustee to account, prior to bringing suit on his bond.¹³ Such an action may be brought in a district court of the United States;¹⁴ such action is not, however, a proceeding in bankruptcy, but a plenary suit, and therefore an order dismissing it is not reviewable by a petition to revise under § 24-b.¹⁵ The limitation on such suits is short: as to referees, two years after the alleged breach; as to trustees, two years after the estate has been closed. The closing of an estate here is probably the date of the order discharging the trustee. Subsection i provides, however, that trustees shall not be liable, personally or on their bonds, for any penalties or forfeitures incurred by bankrupts under the act. The bond continues in force notwithstanding a recovery thereon for two years after the estate is closed.¹⁶ The action of a District Court in allowing improper compensation to a referee is not a bar to an action on his bond to recover the same.^{16a}

c. Effect of failure to give bonds.— Failure to give a bond within the time limited amounts to a declination of office and creates a vacancy. As above suggested, this requirement has not been very strictly construed. The time would probably run from the date of the receipt of the notice, rather than from the date of the order fixing the amount.

13. An order directing an absconding trustee to account is said to be an indispensable prerequisite to an action on his bond. It might, and probably would, be proper in conditions where practicable. But an order upon a person lurking in an unknown place, and purposely keeping out of the reach of any legal notice of an order, if one should be made, would be of no avail. *Scofield v. SYNOPSIS OF SECTION.

I. Duties of Clerks, 755.

- b. Account for fees; collection of fees, 755.
- c. Payment of fees to referee and trustee, 756.

I. DUTIES OF CLERKS.¹

a. Under general orders and forms.—In addition to the duties prescribed by this section the clerk is required to keep a docket in the form specified in General Order I. He is required by General Order II to indorse on each paper filed the day and hour of filing. Under General Order III he is required to attest each process, summons and subpoena issued out of the court. Besides these specific duties the clerk has his usual duties as to the keeping of a docket of bankruptcy cases, the filing of papers,² and the issue of process.³ In the absence of the judge, he refers cases to the referee for adjudication,⁴ and the deputy clerk has like authority.⁵ It seems also he should give notice to creditors of the order to show cause on discharge,⁶ though, as has been indicated,⁷ this is often done by the referee. For any disbursements he may be called on to make, he, like the referee, can demand indemnity.⁸ It is not the duty of the clerk to furnish referees with blank forms.⁹

b. Account for fees; collection of fees.—The duty enjoined by subdivision 1 to account for fees received by him is similar to that required of him as to all other fees, and indicates that fees in bankruptcy are not in addition to his salary as fixed by law.¹⁰ By subdivision 2 the clerk is also required "to collect the fees of the clerk, referee, and trustee in each case instituted before filing the petition," except in pauper cases. The amounts of these fees are fixed in other sections.¹⁰ Unless the fees are paid, no pauper affidavit being filed, the petition need not be received. Early in the history of the law, it was a question whether partners who had no assets, and sought bankruptcy merely to secure a discharge, should not be required to deposit separate fees for the individual estates and that of the copartnership.¹¹ The better opinion is that they need not;¹² such a petition is but one proceeding. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co.* (D. C., Tex.), 45 Am. B. R. 295, 203 Fed. 442.

instance of husband and wife filing a petition together and being permitted to proceed on the deposit of one fee; but they were to an extent partners in business as well. The rule is indicated in the words "in each case." If a single adjudication can be made affecting all petitions, one fee is sufficient; but not otherwise.¹³

c. Payment of fees to referee and trustee.—The clerk's fee seems to be earned on the filing of the petition; the referee's and the trustee's when the case is closed. As to trustees, an estate is closed when the trustee is discharged; as to the referee, when he has transmitted his records. These restrictions on payment, however, are not always strictly observed.¹⁴ Payments are made by check or order in accordance with General Order XXIX. In the larger districts, the referees often certify each week or month for fees due the trustees and themselves. Provision is elsewhere made for the return out of the estate of fees deposited by petitioning creditors in involuntary cases.¹⁵ There is, however, no provision for the repayment of the trustee's fee when no trustee is appointed. This is usually done by a check to the bankrupt or his attorney, after the case is closed.

d. Pauper affidavits.¹⁶—A "poor person" may avail himself of the bankruptcy law, by filing with his petition a pauper affidavit. Contrary to the usual practice, he may get into court and become entitled to adjudication and, it seems, protection, without the usual preliminary inquiry as to his alleged property. The fees referred to are the statutory fees to be paid to the clerk, referee and trustee as compensation for their services, and do not include or refer to the expenses incurred by the officers of the court in the bankruptcy proceeding.¹⁷ Before the adoption of the General Orders, this provision was much abused.¹⁸ Various means were devised to check the practice of filing pauper affidavits in unworthy cases. It is not thought, however, that a refusal to discharge until the fees are paid is any more defensible than would be a refusal to file for the same reason.¹⁹ Under General Order X the clerk, referee or marshal may require indemnity before incurring any expense in publishing or mailing notices, traveling, procuring the attendance of witnesses or perpetuating testimony and may refuse to proceed without such indemnity, notwithstanding the so-called pauper affidavit; the money advanced for this purpose by the bankrupt or other person may be repaid to him as a part of the cost of administration.²⁰ The clerk is not given any option as to filing such petition, and where it appears from the schedules offered therewith that the petitioner has either in his hands or otherwise subject to his order money with which to pay the fees, his petition should be filed, and such money subjected to an order for the payment of such fees.²¹ Ample power is now given to investigate the truth of the pauper affidavit,²² and to report that it is not true, if it appears that a fraud on the court has been attempted.²³ It is suggested also that through an examination had to test the truth of the affidavit, the bankrupt will often be found able to make the deposit. The affidavit must state that "the petitioner is without, and cannot obtain, the money with which to pay such fees." On examination as to its truth, it will usually be held false if it appears that he has exempt property,²⁴ or has paid an attorney for services in preparing the petition and schedules, or, it has been held, if the bankrupt is at the time earning fair wages.²⁵ A proposed voluntary bankrupt, who has not money enough to pay the filing fees, is not required to solicit loans from his friends for that purpose.²⁶ The necessity of, in some way, securing the fee of the trustee when one is appointed has already been considered.²⁷

c. Additional duties.—The amendatory act of 1903 has added § 71 to the original law. It prescribes other duties for the clerk.²⁸ It might well have been subdivision b of this section. It should be read with it.

22. General Order XXXV(4).

23. The practice suggested by the following rule adopted by Judge Coxe of the Northern District of New York, has proven effective:

"V. In case a petition is filed by a proposed voluntary bankrupt which is accompanied by an affidavit under subdivision 2 of § 51 of the act, it shall be the duty of the clerk to file said petition without the payment of the fees provided for by law. If the clerk, or the referee to whom said petition is referred, has reason to believe such affidavit is false, he may file a certificate to that effect and cause the bankrupt to be examined. If upon such examination the referee reports in writing that the statements contained in such affidavit are false, and that the bankrupt has or can obtain money with which to pay said fees, such report shall be sufficient proof upon which to base proceedings under subdivision 4 of general order No. XXXV." See also "Supplementary Forms," post.

ability to obtain his $25 for government fees, notwithstanding that he had a family to support out of his earnings. Compare also In re Williams, 2 N. B. N. Rep. 206.

Borrowing money to pay costs.—In the case of In re Hines (D. C., W. Va.), 9 Am. B. R. 27, 117 Fed. 790, the court said: "If the bankrupt . . . was able to borrow from his friends money with which to pay the court costs, he could not properly make the affidavit required in this case, and it would be his duty to pay the fees." In re Mason (D. C., Ala.), 25 Am. B. R. 73, 181 Fed. 899, the court in commenting on these cases said: "I concur in the views of the courts expressed in the foregoing quotations from the cases cited, except that in Re Hines, supra, where the court in effect declares that, if the bankrupt was able to borrow from his friends money with which to pay the court costs, he could not properly make the affidavit required, and it would be his duty to pay the fees. I think the rule announced by Judge McCormick in Sellers v. Bell, supra, which in substance is that a proposed voluntary bankrupt, who has not money enough to pay the filing fees, is not required to solicit loans from his friends for that purpose, is more reasonable and just. He says that such a requirement would inflict a humiliation on any citizen to require that he solicit or accept alms of his kindred or friends. Moreover, it would raise an issue not contemplated by the bankruptcy act, and which would be embarrassing and difficult to determine."

SECTION FIFTY-TWO.

COMPENSATION OF CLERKS AND MARSHALS.

§ 52. Compensation of Clerks and Marshals.—a Clerks shall respectively receive as full compensation for their services to each estate, a filing fee of ten dollars, except when a fee is not required from a voluntary bankrupt.

b Marshals shall respectively receive from the estate where an adjudication in bankruptcy is made, except as herein otherwise provided, for the performance of their service in proceedings in bankruptcy, the same fees, and account for them in the same way, as they are entitled to receive for the performance of the same or similar services in other cases in accordance with the laws now in force, or such as may be hereafter enacted, fixing the compensation of marshals.

I. COMPENSATION OF CLERKS.¹

a. The filing fee.—By subsection a the filing fee of the clerk is fixed at ten dollars, and must be paid before a petition is filed,² and such charge may be collected for him by the referee in bankruptcy.^{2a} It is in "full compensation" for the services of the clerk to each estate. General Order XXXV (1) interprets the quoted words by providing that the fees allowed to clerks "shall be in full compensation for all services performed by them in regard to filing petitions or other papers required by the act to be filed with them, or in certifying or delivering papers or copies of records to referees or other officers, or in receiving or paying out money."

b. Other fees.—But clerks may charge the fees allowed them by law for copies of papers in bankruptcy proceedings furnished to persons other than the referees or other officers, or expenses necessarily incurred in publishing or mailing notices or other papers. In some districts, it is even prescribed by rule that clerks may charge a fee for copying and mailing the petition for discharge and order thereon known as Form No. 57.³ The validity of such a rule is doubted, and in fact it has been held in some districts that clerks are not entitled to a fee for mailing notices of an application for a discharge.⁴ It is a severe stretch of meaning to declare such mandates "copies furnished to other persons." Money so collected is not for "expenses," but for fees pure and simple. The clerk is also entitled to disbursements for postage, stationery and clerical work.⁵ It is thought that General Order XXXV (1) is not in accord with § 52-a; if not, the latter must control. What has been said elsewhere as to pauper cases⁶ and the right to demand indemnity applies⁷ to clerks as well. The clerks are now salaried officers.⁸ Any surplus of fees collected must be turned into the treasury.⁹ Section 71, added by the amendatory act of 1903, also authorizes the clerks to charge fees for bankruptcy searches. The clerk is not entitled to charge a commission in composition proceedings when he acts as distributing agent.^{9a}

II. COMPENSATION OF MARSHALS.¹⁰

a. Fixed by general law.—The marshals and their field deputies are now also salaried officers.¹¹ They play small parts in the administration of the

Under the former law, they acted as messengers as well as custodians, and their fees were fixed by the statute.¹² Under the present statute, the only duties they are usually called upon to perform are the service of subpoenas and writs of injunction,¹³ and the taking possession of and caring for property.¹⁴ Their fees in either case are those fixed by the general law.¹⁵ They also may demand indemnity.¹⁶ When a petition accompanies an order, the statutory fee, it seems, can be charged for each paper, though they are bound together.¹⁷

b. While acting as receiver.—The compensation of a marshal while performing the duties of a receiver is considered elsewhere.¹⁸ His fees by way of commissions upon moneys disbursed or turned over to any person, including a lienholder, and upon moneys realized by the trustees from property turned over in kind to such trustees are fixed by § 48-d. It seems that a marshal cannot act as a receiver in bankruptcy.¹⁹

I. STATISTICS.

These reports are called for by the clerks at the request of the attorney-general, and are made on blanks furnished by the Department of Justice. From them the attorney-general's annual report, required by section 53, is compiled. He can also ask for other or special reports from all the districts or a single district. There are no recorded cases construing this section.

SECTION FIFTY-FIVE.

MEETINGS OF CREDITORS.

§ 55. Meetings of Creditors.—a The court shall cause the first meeting of the creditors of a bankrupt to be held, not less than ten nor more than thirty days after the adjudication, at the county seat of the county in which the bankrupt has had his principal place of business, resided, or had his domicile; or if that place would be manifestly inconvenient as a place of meeting for the parties in interest, or if the bankrupt is one who does not do business, reside or have his domicile within the United States, the court shall fix a place for the meeting which is the most convenient for parties in interest. If such meeting should by any mischance not be held within such time, the court shall fix the date, as soon as may be thereafter, when it shall be held.

b At the first meeting of creditors the judge or referee shall preside, and, before proceeding with the other business, may allow or disallow the claims of creditors there presented, and may publicly examine the bankrupt or cause him to be examined at the instance of any creditor.

c The creditors shall at each meeting take such steps as may be pertinent and necessary for the promotion of the best interests of the estate and the enforcement of this act.

d A meeting of creditors, subsequent to the first one, may be held at any time and place when all the creditors who have secured the allowance of their claims sign a written consent to hold a meeting at such time and place.

e The court shall call a meeting of creditors whenever one-fourth or more in number of those who have proven their claims shall file a written request to that effect; if such request is signed by a majority of such creditors, which number represents a majority in amount of such claims, and contains a request for such meeting to be held at a designated place, the court shall call such meeting at such place within thirty days after the date of the filing of the request.

f Whenever the affairs of the estate are ready to be closed a final meeting of creditors shall be ordered.

I. SCOPE OF SECTION.

Scope of section.—The cross-references, supra, indicate the limited scope of the section. It has to do only with the time and place of holding the first meeting of creditors, who shall preside, and what in general may be done thereat, the calling of special meetings by creditors, and when final meetings shall be held. It is clearly a section on practice, not law, a distinction recognized in the English system by putting the corresponding rules of practice at the end of the section as a "schedule."¹ The procedure under § 55 is so different from that under the law of 1867² as to make the cases and suggestions under that law of little value. It will be observed, however, that then the place and time of meeting could be arbitrarily fixed, and there were usually three stated meetings,³ while, save for meetings called specially, there can now be but two.

II. FIRST MEETING.

a. In general.—Subsection a makes it the duty of the court to cause the first meeting of the creditors to be held as therein provided. It is the practice for the referee to call the first meeting upon the order of reference having been submitted to him after an adjudication.⁴ On receipt from the clerk of an order of reference,⁵ the referee forthwith calls a first meeting,⁶ setting the time, "not less than ten nor more than thirty days after the adjudication," and the place "at the county seat of the county in which the bankrupt has had his principal place of business, resided or has his domicile." These provisions are, in effect, directory; for, by subsequent clauses, the time may be somewhat indefinitely lengthened, and, if, as is often the case, the county seat is "manifestly inconvenient as a place of meeting for the parties in interest," another place may be selected. The first meeting of creditors cannot be had until after adjudication.⁷ The practice of keeping first meetings alive by successive continuances is general, and to be recommended;⁸ it saves delay and expense in calling creditors together to consider special matters. Indeed, through the use of short notices, addressed to and served on the creditors or attorneys who have appeared, it often alone makes prompt action possible. That all meetings should be held in court-rooms and on regular days and at regular hours,⁹ and be conducted with dispatch, dignity and impartiality on the part of the presiding officer, in short, as a court of justice, seems to be the purpose of the statute.¹⁰

b. Order of business; procedure.—Subsection b provides that the referee, or, if there has been no reference, the judge, must preside at all first meetings. The following order of business is suggested:¹¹

1. Call for and noting of appearances in person or by powers of attorney.
2. Application for ex parte amendments.
3. Allowance or disallowance of claims.
4. Election of trustee, and fixing of amount of bond.
5. Examination of the bankrupt.
6. Miscellaneous motions, orders and instruction.
7. Continuance to a place, day and hour certain.

This order will often be changed, as, where there has been a receiver,¹² who should report as soon as the creditors entitled to vote are ascertained or where the appointment of appraisers¹³ is necessary, an order of business which should follow the appointment of a trustee. Appearances may be either in person or by attorney; if the latter, by an attorney or counselor authorized to practice in the circuit or district court.¹⁴ Subsection b also provides that the judge or referee shall, before proceeding with the other business, allow or disallow claims and conduct an examination of the bankrupt. This is evidently for the purpose of determining the right of creditors to vote. The bankrupt may be required to attend the first meeting and submit to an examination for the purpose of aiding the court in ascertaining who are creditors.¹⁵ The proof and allowance of claims is especially provided for under § 57, to which reference should be made in this connection. A creditor included in the schedules, whose identity is established satisfactorily to the referee, is entitled to an opportunity to examine the bankrupt before he decides to become a party to the proceeding.¹⁶ Where claims are objected to, they should, as far as possible, be heard summarily on an oral motion to reject—the mere filing usually amounts to an allowance¹⁷—and their right to vote determined. Only when clearly fictitious or preferential, should this right be denied them.¹⁸ The determination of a referee as to the allowance or disallowance of a claim presented at such a meeting is a judicial act which cannot be reviewed, revised or reversed by a State court.¹⁹ Other general regulations as to papers and practice will be found in General Order IV. The cross-references, ante, to other sections and general orders, should be read in anticipation of a first meeting of creditors. The very broad range that business at meetings of creditors may take is indicated by subsection c.

III. SPECIAL MEETINGS.

a. In general.—While this section provides only for first and final meetings in each case, special meetings can be called and held for a variety of purposes.²⁰

13. See discussion under Section Seventy of this work.

14. General Order IV.

15. Bankr. Act, § 7 (1) (3), and discussion thereunder.

16. Examination of bankrupt by creditor before proving claim.—A creditor who has not filed a claim is privileged to examine the bankrupt, in order to see if it is worth while so to do. In re Walker (D. C., N. Dak.), 3 Am. B. R. 35, 96 Fed. 550; In re Jehu (D. C., Iowa), 2 Am. B. R. 498, 94 Fed. 638, the court said: "The creditors may properly decline to incur the expense of proving their claims until it appears that some good will result from so doing. The referee should be satisfied that the party applying for the order is in fact a creditor of the bankrupt; but, if this fact be shown, no good reason exists why the examination should not be had, even though the creditor may not have proved his claim in set form."

Examination at adjourned meeting.—Where a bankrupt, in his schedules, claims the bar of the statute of limitations as a defense to a particular provable debt, the creditor, who had not filed proof of claim, is entitled to examine the bankrupt, at an adjourned meeting of the creditors, in order to determine whether he will take an affirmative part in the bankruptcy proceedings, although a rule of court requires a creditor to file a formal claim with the referee before any examination. In re Kniffer (D. C., N. Y.), 18 Am. B. R. 587, 155 Fed. 1018.

17. In re Summer (D. C., N. Y.), 4 Am. B. R. 123, 101 Fed. 224. Claims so filed may, however, be objected to and allowance thus postponed. See Bankr. Act, § 57-d.

18. See Bankr. Act, § 56.

19. Glendening v. Red River Valley Nat. Bank (Sup. Ct., N. Dak.), 11 Am. B. R. 246, 94 N. W. 901.

When the referee acts instead of the judge, his duties are judicial in their nature and he is to pass upon such questions as may arise in carrying forward the objects and purposes of the meeting. In re McGill (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 155, 106 Fed. 57.

20. Bankr. Act, § 44; General Order XXV.

Subsections d and e provide the method of calling such meetings. When all the creditors whose claims have been allowed agree in writing that such a meeting shall be held, it may be held at any time or place agreed upon. The court is required to call such a meeting when one-fourth or more in number of those "who have proven their claims" shall file a written request to that effect.

The phrase "special meeting" occurs only in General Order XXV. Special meetings are usually called to consider proposed sales of property, or the compromises of controversies, or for the declaration and payment of dividends.²¹ "Proven" does not necessarily mean "obtained the allowance" of their claims.²² It seems that "whenever" in subdivision e means "whenever after the first meeting" previously provided for in subdivision a.²³ The creditors can only take such steps at the special meeting as will tend to the promotion of the best interests of the estate.²⁴ Almost invariably the referee presides over such meetings, though this is not necessary, as at first meetings.²⁵

b. On call of creditors.—Creditors' meetings, after the first, while always called by the referee, are usually the result of a report or a petition filed, or motion made, by the trustee. Subdivisions d and e provide a means to call the creditors together, if the trustee will not act, or the referee refuses to order the meeting. The former of these subsections seems, however, in conflict with § 58-a, and its value or validity has not yet been determined. The policy of the law seems to be to give all creditors the absolute right to ten days' notice of all important steps, nay, even of all "meetings of creditors."²⁶ The practice on the call of a creditors' meeting by written request of a majority in number and amount of claims proven is sufficiently explained in the statute.²⁷

IV. FINAL MEETINGS.

a. In general.—Final meetings must be ordered when "the affairs of the estate" are ready to be closed.²⁸ This seems to imply that there need be no final meeting unless there is an estate. Where there are dividends for creditors a final meeting, as distinguished from a first meeting, must, since the proviso clauses added to § 65-b, be held.²⁹ The safer practice is to hold such a final meeting even in no-asset cases. It should be called as soon as the trustee's final report is filed.³⁰ Creditors must also have the usual notice of the filing of a trustee's final account.³¹

R. 420, 228 Fed. 771, holding that where it appears that the bankrupt owns property subject to valid liens, the referee may, if in his judgment it is advisable, call a meeting of the creditors in order that they may be heard before action is taken subjecting the estate to possible cost and expense in the administration of such property. In re Meadows, Williams & Co. (D. I. IN GENERAL.

a. Comparative legislation.—The English statute regulates voting at creditors' meetings with great particularity,¹ and proxy voting at such meetings is so restricted as to make impossible many of the evils complained of under previous statutes. Valuable suggestions as to their orderly conduct will, therefore, be found in the English law and general rules. Our law of 1867 was not, in this particular, essentially different from that of 1898. Creditors then took action by a majority in number and amount, though all claims proven were counted, whether present or represented or not;² the voting of secured creditors was prohibited, not by statute, but by the courts. The Canadian statute, like the English statute, deals with meetings of creditors in considerable detail.^{2a}

b. Scope of section.—The present law, in effect, gives voting power only to creditors holding claims neither preferred nor secured nor entitled to priority, which have been allowed and are present; and declares that a majority shall consist in the concurrence of the larger amount as to dollars and the larger number as to individuals.

c. *Election of trustees.*³—(1) IN GENERAL.—In general, the election of trustee should take place at the time and place fixed in the notice, and objections, technical in their nature, or motions manifestly for the purpose of delay, will usually be denied. It is to be regretted that the prevailing tendency is to construe the law and general orders technically.⁴ A broad, perhaps, rather, a shrewd discretion, seems a rule more in harmony with the purpose of the statute—that “the creditors of a bankrupt estate shall . . . appoint” the trustee. In the nature of things, all creditors who entitle themselves to vote before the result is announced, should be counted; conversely, no others should.⁵ It has been held that provisional allowances or disallowances may be made in proper cases to permit the prompt selection of a trustee,⁶ and this may be permissible where the only other possible course would be to postpone the election of a trustee until intricate questions of law and fact pertaining to the claim were determined.⁷

(2) POSTPONEMENT OF ELECTION.—If possible, there should be no postponement of an election of trustee,⁸ but a referee may, in his discretion,

7. Postponement until determination of question of preference.—Where the referee, after twice adjourning the election of trustee and affording an opportunity to creditors to examine the bankrupt in support of their objection that a certain creditor was not entitled to vote for trustee unless it surrendered a preference alleged to have been received by it, finds from the evidence adduced that the alleged preference had not been established, no error is committed in refusing to postpone the election of trustee until the final determination of the question of preference and permitting the creditor to vote. In re Milne (D. C., N. Y.), 20 Am. B. R. 248, 159 Fed. 280.

Postponement to bring in other creditors.—Where, at the time stated for the election of a trustee, a majority in number of the creditors are ready and opposed to delay, but a minority requested a postponement of an hour in order that others favorable to their candidate might be present, the referee was justified in denying the postponement, no good reason therefor being shown. Matter of Grat (D. C., Mass.), 36 Am. B. R. 524, 228 Fed. 925.

An adjournment on the ground of surprise will not be granted where the surprise relied upon is not as to a fact, but arises from adjourn a first meeting of creditors for a few hours in order that claims may be presented and allowed,⁹ or that the creditors may compose their differences in the case of a no-choice vote.¹⁰ If there is a postponement, all claims proven in the interval have the same rights as those previously allowed. When, after the first meeting, proper amendments are granted bringing in new creditors, such creditors, it seems, may, if it appears that their votes would have changed the result, petition for a new election and, if successful thereat, oust the elected trustee.¹¹ The referee's power to approve or disapprove has already been considered.¹²

II. VOTES BY CREDITORS.

a. Majority in number and amount.—Subsection a provides that creditors shall pass upon all matters submitted to them by a majority vote "in number and amount of claims of all creditors whose claims have been allowed and are present." All questions duly submitted at a meeting must depend upon such a majority vote for their determination.¹³ Nor is it necessary that there be any definite quorum, as in England; one creditors present or duly represented and entitled to vote may choose a trustee.¹⁴ The meaning of "present" has been somewhat discussed. The better opinion is that, if excluded from voting for any reason, a creditor, though actually present, is not present for the purpose of ascertaining the total of claims.¹⁵ A partnership creditor can be counted only as a single individual.¹⁶

b. Who entitled to vote.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Creditors only are entitled to vote.¹⁷ Creditors may appear and vote personally, or by attorney or proxy as oversight of a provision of law as to the correct execution of a letter of attorney. In re Finlay (D. C., N. Y.), 3 Am. B. R. 738, 104 Fed. 675.

9. Matter of Rosenfeld-Goldman Co., (D. C., Mass.), 36 Am. B. R. 520, 228 Fed. 921.

10. When postponement permitted.—But where the vote for trustee results in no choice, the unanimous request of the creditors for an adjournment of the meeting for twenty-four hours to enable them to compose their differences, if possible, should be granted, and the appointment of a trustee by the referee after denying such request will be set aside and an election ordered. 13. Majority in number and amount controls, Bollman v. Tobin (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 38 Am. B. R. 504. In this case the court said: "At these meetings a majority of the general creditors in number and amount controls. See sections 55 and 58 of the Bankruptcy Act, and General Order No. 13. In re Lewensohn (D. C., N. Y.), 3 Am. B. R. 299, 98 Fed. 576; In re McGill (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 5 Am. B. R. 155, 106 Fed. 57. The courts have uniformly enforced these distinctive features of the law. It is true that the administration of the estate is by the court and not by creditors, but on questions of general business policy, the wishes of a majority of the creditors ought not to be disregarded except for good cause arising out of some special feature affecting the particular estate. If the majority seeks a fractional advantage to the injury of the minority, it is the duty of the court to interfere and protect the rights of all. But so long as the majority seeks no advantage except such as will accrue to the benefit of all creditors, their judgment should prevail, unless the circumstances are quite exceptional."

Appointment of trustee.—This section does not operate to prevent a referee from appointing as a trustee a person who failed of election by the creditors because he did not receive the votes of a majority in number of creditors and amount of claims. Matter of F. & D. Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 378, 242 Fed. 69.

15. Creditors; when "present."—Creditors whose claims have been allowed are not present at a meeting within the meaning of section 56-a of the bankrupt act, when they are not permitted to participate in its proceedings. . . . The meaning of the clause is to vest the power of creditors in those who are present, and not allow the proceedings to be delayed by the absence of those creditors who do not take sufficient interest to participate; but it is not its meaning to treat those as present who are excluded from voting by the referee. In re Henschel (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 7 Am. B. R. 662, 113 Fed. 443, revg. s. c. (Ref., N. Y.), 6 Am. B. R. 25, and (D. C., N. Y.), 6 Am. B. R. 305, 109 Fed. 861.

will hereafter appear.¹⁸ Relatives and friends of the bankrupt who are legitimate creditors must be permitted to vote like other creditors.¹⁹ A member of a partnership or an officer of a corporation, presenting a proof of debt, should be allowed to vote,²⁰ though if represented by an attorney, the former must show the attorney's authority to act,²¹ and the mere fact that a claimant is a director and stockholder of a bankrupt corporation does not, in the absence of collusion or improper influence, disqualify him from voting for a trustee.²² The shareholders in a building and loan association are creditors entitled to vote for trustee upon the bankruptcy of the association.²³ A receiver in a State court appointed in an action by a corporation against a delinquent stockholder may be deemed a "creditor" of such stockholder within the meaning of this section.²⁴ Creditors sometimes appear specially, so as to assert title to goods sold on consignment, or to save their rights by having objections to the jurisdiction noted; but these are not creditors in the sense used in this section. That the creditors of a partnership, as distinguished from the creditors of an individual, are the only voters on matters involving the administration of partnership estates, seems to follow by analogy from § 5-b.²⁵

(2) PROOF AND ALLOWANCE OF CLAIM.—A creditor cannot vote until his claim has not only been "proved,"²⁶ which means the mere verification of it in accordance with the law and one of the forms prescribed by the Supreme Court, but also "allowed,"²⁷ which means the filing of such proved claim, without objection, with the proper referee. Even if filed, it seems that the referee has the right to determine its voting power, if the same is called in question.²⁸ The mere filing of objection will not, however, be sufficient to

28. Determination of validity of claims.—If, at a meeting for the election of a trustee, objections are made to a claim, the referee has either to disfranchise the claim or go forward and ascertain in a summary manner whether or not the claim ought to be voted upon, and his decision ought not to be set aside, unless so plainly unjust as to amount to an abuse of discretion. Matter of Rosenfeld-Goldman Co. (D. C., Mass.), 36 Am. B. R. 520, 229 Fed. 921; Matter of Grat (D. C., Mass.), 36 Am. B. R. 524, 228 Fed. 925.

Referee must entertain objections.—Where the referee in proceedings which resulted in the election of trustee overrules objections of certain claims, preferred upon the ground that the claimants were preferred creditors and not entitled to have their claims allowed until the preferences were surrendered, and accepts the proofs of such claims as presented and a trustee is elected thereupon, the pro-

exclude a claim which, on an examination—often mere oral statements of counsel—seems to be bona fide.²⁹ If objection is made and a prima facie case is presented, and it appears that the vote of the claim objected to will be decisive of any matter submitted to the creditors, the referee should postpone the vote until the validity of the claim can be determined.³⁰ In such a case it may even be necessary to appoint a receiver ad interim.³¹

(3) COMBINATIONS AND ASSIGNMENTS.—Combinations of creditors to control judicial proceedings in their own interests will not be favored.³² A single interest should vote as a single interest, and not otherwise.³³ Where a number of claims have been assigned to one person, all of which are allowed, he is entitled only to one vote.³⁴

c. Creditors not entitled to vote.—(1) SECURED CREDITORS.—Subsection b provides that creditors holding claims which are secured may not vote. Secured claims are defined in section 1 (23).³⁵ In this connection §§ 57-e-h should be consulted. Such claims are not to be counted, only as to the excess of the claim over the value of the security. The voting power of a secured debt depends on the value of the security.³⁶ This is often ascertained summarily; indeed, is sometimes stipulated. Again, technicalities should be avoided. At the same time, the burden clearly rests on the secured creditor to show that the security is not sufficient to pay his debt.^{36a} Such a creditor cannot be counted or allowed to vote, unless it appears that there will ceedings are erroneous and the election must be set aside. In re Malino (D. C., N. Y.), 8 Am. B. R. 206, 118 Fed. 308.

Claims not affecting result.—The referee, at a meeting for the election of a trustee, is not bound to pass upon objections to a claim presented, where it would have been so voted as not to affect the result. Matter of Rosenfeld-Goldman Co. (D. C., Mass.), 36 Am. B. R. 520, 228 Fed. 921. Where no harm has been done to a creditor by denying it the right to vote for trustee, it has no cause for complaint. B. R. 520, 228 Fed. 921; Matter of Snow (D. C., Mass.), 41 Am. B. R. 461, 248 Fed. 295. Postponement of proof was required under the former law (R. S., § 5063), but this is not so under the present statute. Compare also In re Jackson, Fed. Cas. 7,123; In re Milne (D. C., N. Y.), 20 Am. B. R. 248, 250, 159 Fed. 280, citing Collier on Bankruptcy (6th ed.), p. 424.

Review of referee's findings.—Where upon a petition to review the election of a trustee upon the ground that certain claims were not entitled to be voted, there is no evidence presented as to the disputed claims, the referee's findings of fact as to all claims must be confirmed. Matter of Snow (D. C., Mass.), 41 Am. B. R. 462, 248 Fed. 296.

31. Bankr. Act, § 2 (3) (15).

32. A combination of creditors for the control of judicial proceedings in their own interests, as distinguished from the interests of the general creditors, is clearly against public policy; as where certain creditors of several allied corporations, prior to bankruptcy proceedings, assigned, for value, their claims against these corporations, in trust, to a so-called committee, and especially where it was a part of the undertaking and purpose of the committee to purchase in the interest of these particular creditors, as a single interest, from the trustee who represents all the creditors, the property of the bankrupt, and the committee should not be allowed to cast more than one vote for trustee instead of a vote for each claim represented by them. The right of a secured or priority creditor to vote for trustee upon the excess of his claim over his security or priority should be correctly determined and limited to the proper amount, and where no petition for re-examination of such a claim or the determination of its value has been filed and it is claimed that the value of the security greatly exceeds that placed upon it by the referee, exceptions to his ruling will be overruled without prejudice to the right of the trustee or creditors to the appointed method under General Order 21. subd. 6, to review the ruling. Matter of Columbia Iron Works (D. C., Mich.), 14 Am. B. R. 526, 143 Fed. 234.

be a deficiency, and then only to the amount of the deficit.^{36b} Secured creditors often consider their security of so little value that they surrender it, or offer so to do, in their proof of debt. If so, they vote on the entire amount.³⁷ Even if the security is upon exempt property, the creditor is only allowed to vote on the unsecured balance.³⁸

(2) CREDITORS ENTITLED TO PRIORITY.—The preceding paragraph is equally applicable here. Sections 64-a-b should also be read. As priority creditors may reasonably expect to be paid in full, instances where they may participate in votes at creditors' meetings will be rare.

(3) PREFERRED CREDITORS.—A preferred creditor cannot vote without surrendering his preference.³⁹ It is necessary for a creditor in order to prove a claim and take part in a creditors' meeting to waive any lien or preference or security in his favor.⁴⁰ He is not even a creditor in the sense here used until he surrenders his advantage. When he does so voluntarily,⁴¹ he is entitled to vote the full amount of his claim. In this connection, the changes in the definition of "preference" made by the amendatory act of 1903 should be observed.⁴² Whether the obtaining of a lien through legal proceedings,⁴³ within four months of the bankruptcy, constitutes the creditor obtaining it a "preferred creditor" may be doubted.⁴⁴ It has been held that it does not because the lien is avoided by section 67-f.⁴⁵ It is not, however, important in this connection; the claims of such creditors can be objected to and postponed.

d. Votes by attorneys in fact.—The law permits proxy voting, provided the agent, attorney or proxy is duly authorized.⁴⁶ The meaning of these last words seems to be indicated by General Order XXI (5), supplemented by Forms Nos. 20 and 21.⁴⁷ Attorneys at law representing creditors of a bank-

Secured claim.—Where a secured creditor's proof of claim is entirely formal and contains no prayer for the enforcement of the petitioner's security and does not allege any insufficiency in its security or take any step to have the value of its security determined it is not entitled to have its secured claim allowed to any amount in order that it might participate in a creditor's meeting. Matter of North Star Ice & Coal Co. (D. 40. Waiver of lien by proving claim and voting at creditor's meeting to elect trustee.—One who claims a mechanic's lien but waives it on proving a claim in bankruptcy against the contractor, having voted upon the claim and transacted other business as a creditor at a meeting of creditors for the election of a trustee, may not thereafter assert that through the mistake made by a clerk of the lawyer who drew the proof of claim the waiver therein was broader than he intended, where the lien sought to be preserved must have been collected out of the proceeds of a contract which were the property of bankrupt. *Brown v. Power of referee to pass upon validity of powers of attorney.—The referee, presiding at the first meeting of creditors for the election of a trustee, must determine who are to make up its constituent members, and he has the right to refuse to allow one offering to qualify, who acts under a power of attorney nominally executed by the creditors, but in fact procured by the bankrupt in order to vote for his choice of trustee. In re McGill (C. 47. Powers must be executed as indicated in the forms. In re Henschel (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 7 Am. B. R. 662, 113 Fed. 443. A commissioner of deeds should not be permitted to rupt, although in good standing and duly admitted to practice in the United States courts, must, before being entitled to vote for a trustee, present a duly executed power of attorney in the form prescribed,⁴⁸ also, where the attorney represents a partnership or corporation, the power must be accompanied by the oath called for by General Order XXI (5).⁴⁹ The cases under the former law are to the same effect.⁵⁰ Perhaps caution requires this, and it is quite apparent that recognized practice and the weight of authority requires attorneys at law to obtain letters or other instruments showing authority to represent their client creditors. It is suggested that these cases have not given proper force to the words "when a creditor is not represented by attorney-at-law,"⁵¹ in the caption of Form No. 20, or the second sentence of General Order IV. Unless there is strong reason—and, save in the large cities where perhaps disbarment means little, there seems to be none—it is submitted that the ancient practice of recognizing for all purposes an attorney who appears for a party might well be followed. Written appearances should, however, be required.⁵² An attorney, who prepared the bankrupt's petition, his services then terminating, may vote upon claims sent to him without his solicitation or the procurement of the bankrupt.⁵³ An attorney, who holds a power of attorney from a creditor, jointly with the bankrupt's attorney, should not be permitted to vote.⁵⁴ Such powers of attorney to be effectual as a grant of right to vote must be secured in good faith without collusion with the bank-cast votes for a trustee under a power of attorney acknowledged before himself. Matter of Grossman (D. C., N. Y.), 34 Am. B. R. 32, 225 Fed. 1020. Compare, for rulings, under former law, In re Christley, Fed. Cas. 2,702; In re Barrett, Fed. Cas. 1,043.

Representation by attorney.—The fact that a relative of the bankrupt sought to have the attorney for the bankrupt vote his claim and the claims of other relatives but the attorney stated it was inconsistent and suggested that another attorney in the same office represent him and that the present receiver would be a proper man for trustee. does not warrant the rejection of the votes of such creditors, especially where it appears that the bankrupt neither openly nor secretly endeavored to control or influence the selection of a trustee. Matter of Rothleder (D. C., N. Y.), 37 Am. B. R. 116, 232 Fed. 398.

Authority of managing attorney.—A power of attorney to vote a claim at a meeting of creditors, running to a law firm or "their representative" authorizes their managing attorney to vote the claim. Matter of Eisenberg (D. C., N. Y.), 40 Am. B. R. 864, 251 Fed. 427.

e. Practice.—The practice in voting at creditors' meetings is indicated in what goes before. Claims are called for allowance at the first meeting, and should be at every continuance day. At the same time, appearances, either in person, by attorneys, or by agents or proxies, should be noted. If any power of attorney or proof of debt is objected to, the referee will often determine the question summarily. Sometimes such matters are postponed until all other claims are called, to determine whether the objections will affect the result. Votes are usually taken viva voce,⁵⁷ and, at the conclusion, the result announced by the referee, he at the same time noting in his minute-book the vote taken and the subject decided.⁵⁸ After this is done, other votes cannot be received, nor should a creditor be allowed to change his vote.⁵⁹ Referees usually have filing and approval stamps, which, when imprinted on the proofs or powers, indicate the action taken. There are, of course, slight variances in practice in every referee district. Any method which will permit an expression of the wishes of all creditors entitled to vote, without suggestion from or interference by the presiding referee, is all that is required. The effect of a disagreement of creditors on an election of trustee is considered elsewhere.⁶⁰

55. Good faith in securing powers of attorney.—Powers of attorney obtained through the influence of the attorneys for creditors who have received alleged preferences may not be used in the selection of a trustee, especially in a case where the unsecured creditors have no possible way of realizing on their claims unless the trustee is able to recover the illegal preference. Matter of Law (Ref., Ill.), 13 Am. B. R. 650, affd. by district court. No attorney should be permitted to vote any claim that has come to him through the instrumentality of the bankrupt, in furnishing him with a list of the creditors before the schedules are filed. In re Lloyd (D. C., Wis.), 17 Am. B. R. 96, 148 Fed. 92.

Proxies secured by creditors.—An election of a trustee, approved by the referee in bankruptcy and the District Court, should not be disturbed because 36 claims were voted by proxies, where it does not appear that they were procured to be voted or were voted in the interest of the bankrupt, but on the contrary that they were solicited by a creditor and voted by attorneys in no way subject to the control or direction of the bankrupt. Matter of Wilson (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 39 Am. B. R. 419, 242 Fed. 479.

56. In re Blue Ridge Packing Co. (D. C., Pa.), 11 Am. B. R. 36, 125 Fed. 619, holding that the production of a missing power of attorney after the election of a trustee and the close of the meeting comes too late.

SECTION FIFTY-SEVEN.

PROOF AND ALLOWANCE OF CLAIMS.

§ 57. Proof and allowance of claims.—a Proof of claims shall consist of a statement under oath, in writing, signed by a creditor setting forth the claim, the consideration therefor, and whether any, and, if so, what securities are held therefor, and whether any, and, if so, what payments have been made thereon, and that the sum claimed is justly owing from the bankrupt to the creditor.

b Whenever a claim is founded upon an instrument of writing, such instrument, unless lost or destroyed, shall be filed with the proof of claim. If such instrument is lost or destroyed, a statement of such fact and of the circumstances of such loss or destruction shall be filed under oath with the claim. After the claim is allowed or disallowed, such instrument may be withdrawn by permission of the court, upon leaving a copy thereof on file with the claim.

c Claims after being proved may, for the purpose of allowance, be filed by the claimants in the court where the proceedings are pending, or before the referee if the case has been referred.

d Claims which have been duly proved shall be allowed, upon receipt by or upon presentation to the court, unless objection to their allowance shall be made by parties in interest, or their consideration be continued for cause by the court upon its own motion.

e Claims of secured creditors and those who have priority may be allowed to enable such creditors to participate in the proceedings at creditors' meetings held prior to the determination of the value of their securities or priorities, but shall be allowed for such sums only as to the courts seem to be owing over and above the value of their securities or priorities.

f Objections to claims shall be heard and determined as soon as the convenience of the court and the best interests of the estates and the claimant will permit.

g The claims of creditors who have received preferences, *voidable under section sixty, subdivision b, or to whom conveyances, transfers, assignments, or incumbrances, void or voidable under section sixty-seven, subdivision e, have been made or given, shall not be allowed unless such creditor shall surrender *such preferences, conveyances, transfers, assignments, or incumbrances.

h The value of securities held by secured creditors shall be determined by converting the same into money according to the terms of the agreement pursuant to which such securities were delivered to such creditors or by such creditors and the trustee, by agreement, arbitration, compromise, or litigation, as the court may direct, and the amount of such value shall be credited upon such claims, and a dividend shall be paid only on the unpaid balance.

i Whenever a creditor, whose claim against a bankrupt estate is secured by the individual undertaking of any person, fails to prove such claim, such person may do so in the creditor's name, and if he discharge such undertaking in whole or in part he shall be subrogated to that extent to the rights of the creditor.

j Debts owing to the United States, a State, a county, a district, or a municipality as a penalty or forfeiture shall not be allowed, except for the amount of the pecuniary loss sustained by the act, transaction, or proceeding out of which the penalty or forfeiture arose, with reasonable and actual costs occasioned thereby and such interest as may have accrued thereon according to law.

k Claims which have been allowed may be reconsidered for cause and reallocated or rejected in whole or in part, according to the equities of the case, before but not after the estate has been closed.

l Whenever a claim shall have been reconsidered and rejected, in whole or in part, upon which a dividend has been paid, the trustee may recover from the creditor the amount of the dividend received upon the claim if rejected in whole, or the proportional part thereof if rejected only in part.

m The claim of any estate which is being administered in bankruptcy against any like estate may be proved by the trustee and allowed by the court in the same manner and upon like terms as the claims of other creditors.

n Claims shall not be proved against a bankrupt estate subsequent to one year after the adjudication; or if they are liquidated by litigation and the final judgment therein is rendered within thirty days before or after the expiration of such time, and then within sixty days after the rendition of such judgment: Provided, That the right of infants and insane persons without guardians, without notice of the proceedings, may continue six months longer.

I. PROOF AND ALLOWANCE IN GENERAL.

a. Scope of section.—This section is the guide to the practice upon the proof and allowance of claims against the bankrupt. It prescribes with some definiteness what is to be done by the creditor to secure an allowance of his claim. It determines what those creditors, who have security or priority in part for their claims, may do to secure an allowance of their unprotected balances. It states the duty to be performed by those creditors who have received void or voidable preferences in order that their claims may be allowed. In case of a contest on claims, it sets out the practice in hearing objections, and provides for a rejection of a claim presented, and the reconsideration of a claim allowed. It will be noticed by references hereafter noted that the practice herein prescribed is largely supplemented by the general orders,¹ and the official forms also indicate the essential requirements for a due presentation and allowance of claims against the bankrupt's estate.² The section does not attempt to declare what are and what are not provable debts; this is left for a subsequent section and will be hereafter considered.³

b. Comparative legislation.—Both the English and Canadian bankruptcy laws go into great detail on the subject of the proof of claims.⁴ Their practice on proving debts is not essentially different from our own, and will, therefore, be found suggestive. So also of our law of 1867. The facts necessarily shown in a proof of debt were more numerous⁵ and, early, in its administration, the taking of proofs was limited to certain Federal officers;⁶ but then, as now, proof was made by an affidavit in the nature of a deposition,⁷ the general orders⁸ and forms⁹ and were practically identical with those now in use. Precedents under that law are still valuable.

c. Distinction between proof and allowance of claims.—The language of the act in relation to the distinction between the allowance of claims and the proof of claims is carefully observed throughout §§ 55, 57 and elsewhere. The proof of a claim is one thing, its allowance by the court is quite a different step. When the act refers to a proof of a claim it means the deposition or statement of the creditor. When it refers to its acceptance by the courts, it uses the word allowed or allowance.¹⁰ The distinction between

1. See General Orders, XX, XXI, XXIV and XXVIII.

2. See Official Forms, Nos. 19-21, 31-39.

3. Bankr. Act, § 63, and discussion thereunder. It should be noticed, however, that subsection g prevents the allowance of claims of creditors who have received void or voidable preferences, except when the preferences are surrendered; that subsection f limits the allowance of claims for penalties and forfeitures; that subsection m permits the proof of a claim of one bankrupt estate against another, and that subsection n places a time limitation upon the provability of debts. These subsections are closely related to the subject of the provability of debts.

Proof and allowance of claims are separate and distinct steps.—In the case of In re Mertens (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 16 Am. B. R. 825, 147 Fed. 177, 77 C. C. A. 473, the court considered the various subsections of section 57 and concludes: "From these various sections we deduce the following propositions: that proof and allowance of claims are two separate and distinct steps; that a clear statement of a claim in writing, duly verified and filed with a referee, if made within a year, is sufficient to take the claim out of the statutory limitation, even though it may be allowed or liquidated and allowed afterward. We think that section 63-b must be interpreted in the light of the other sections of the law and that to construe it as meaning that no proof of unliquidated claims can be filed until the precise amount due thereon is established will, in practical operation, make an allowance of such claims impossible for the reason that a hostile trustee or creditor can easily delay the liquidation until after the expiration of the year. The more reasonable and sensible construction is, that the filing of the proof, like the filing of a declaration at common law, if made within the time, takes the claim out of the statute of limitations, and that after such proof is made, the claim is before the court to be dealt with as the interests of the bankrupt and the creditor may require." See also In re Standard Telephone & Electric Co. (D. C., Wis.), 26 Am. B. R. 601, 186 Fed. 586; In re Fairlamb Co. (D. C., Pa.), 23 Am. B. R. 515, 199 Fed. 278.

This distinction has been lucidly maintained by Judge Ray, in In re Horstein (D. C., N. Y.), 10 Am. B. R. 308, 122 Fed. 266, where he says: "It will be noted that the proof of a claim is one thing, and the allowance of such claim is quite another thing. Claims may be proved, but not allowed. They may be provable, not allowable. They may be provable, and then allowed in part only, or on conditions only. The statute does not say that the claims of creditors who have received preferences shall not be proved; but it does say that such claim shall not be proof and allowance is much the same as that between evidence and judgment.¹¹ Before a claim can be regarded as proven the written proof called for by § 57-n must at least have been filed or lodged with the court or some officer thereof. That such written proof has been completed is not enough so long as the proof remains in the hands of the creditor or his attorney.¹²

II. PROOF OF CLAIMS.

a. General requirements.—Claims in bankruptcy must be proven in the manner prescribed in the bankruptcy law as supplemented by the general orders and official forms.¹³ Affidavits used in insolvency or general assignment proceedings under State laws are not enough; though, where the facts and amounts tally with the schedule and include those called for by § 57-a, they will, provided there is no objection, usually be accepted and filed. Proofs of allowed unless or until the creditor surrenders his preference. By plain implication, the proof of the claim is permitted. The claim of a creditor who has received a preference may be proved; but it cannot be allowed, unless he shall surrender the preference. Strange, indeed, is that construction of this law, in the face of those provisions, which will prevent a creditor from coming into court and proving his claim, having the amount of the preference received by him, if any (and that may be a serious and necessary question for determination, both to the fact of preference and its amount), determined by the court, and then having his proved claim allowed on surrendering the preference. Any creditor has the right to come into court for that very purpose. To hold otherwise will logically prevent a creditor who has in fact received a preference, by way of lien or otherwise, for only a small part of his claim, coming into court and proving his claim, and then having it allowed on surrendering the preference—a mode of procedure the statute expressly permits.”

“Debts are not the less provable, within the meaning of the Bankrupt Act, because the statute of limitations may be successfully pleaded against their allowance. As well say that a debt was not suable because the statute of limitations might be pleaded to an action upon it.” Hargardine-McKittrick Dry Goods Co. v. Hudson (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 10 Am. B. R. 225, 122 Fed. 232, aff. 6 Am. B. R. 657. See also In re Scruggs (D. C., Ala.), 31 Am. B. R. 94, 97, 205 Fed. 673, citing text.

Right to prove a secured claim.—There is apparently a distinction between the proving of a claim under § 57a and its allowance under § 57c, resulting in the right to prove a secured claim when the ultimate necessity for its allowance appears reasonably possible, even though it may turn out to be unnecessary because the security proves adequate to pay the debt in full. Emerine v. Tarault (C. C. A. 6th Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 55, 219 Fed. 68.

A proved claim does not become “allowed” by the filing thereof, since the allowance of a claim, different from the party’s act of proving and the ministerial act of filing, is a judicial act; and until a direct or indirect order of allowance is made, objections to a claim may properly be filed, it being unnecessary, until such order is made, to proceed under section 57k or l for a reconsideration of the claim and a recovery of dividends already paid. In re Two Rivers Woodenware Co. (C. C. A., 7th Cir.), 29 Am. B. R. 518, 199 Fed. 877.

A disallowed claim and a nonprovable debt are not identical things; and where a debt is disallowed because without foundation the claimant does not have a nonprovable debt. Leaser v. Gray, 236 U. S. 70, 34 Am. B. R. 8.

The practice covering the presentation of claims of creditors to the referee in bankruptcy is outlined in In re Sumner (D. C., N. Y.), 4 Am. B. R. 123, 101 Fed. 224.

Verified proofs of claim.—A wife who, in her verified proofs of claims against the bankrupt estate of her husband, makes no reference to any payment on account of loans which were the subject-matter of her claims, but expressly states that “no part of said debt has been paid,” and scratches out from the blank form the word “except,” violates the express requirements of this section. In re Girvin (D. C., N. Y.), 20 Am. B. R. 490, 160 Fed. 197, 206.

Necessity that forms be followed with exactness.—Bankrupt forms have been provided to expedite proper and prompt administrations according to the very right of parties and by no means for the purpose of creating purely technical defenses, hence the court is not bound by any hard and fast rule to these forms, but on the contrary any form of proof used, if sufficient to show the nature of the claim and the bankrupt’s liabil-

debt must show at least (1) the claim; (2) the consideration therefor;¹⁴ (3) whether any, and, if so, what, securities are held therefor; (4) whether any, and if so, what, payments have been made thereon; and (5) that the sum claimed is justly owing from the bankrupt to the creditor.¹⁵ Proofs must be (a) in writing, (b) under oath, and (c) signed by the creditors.¹⁶ There must be a sufficient verification, otherwise there is a failure of proof.¹⁷ As will be noticed hereafter, a defective proof of a claim, or an informal presentation of a claim may be corrected by amendment even if after the expiration of the time limit,¹⁸ provided there enough is presented to show that a demand is made against the estate, and that it is the creditor's intention to hold the estate liable.¹⁹

b. Proof as evidence; prima facie case.—A claim proven as required by the act should be received and filed by a referee receiving it, and amounts to a prima facie case;²⁰ thus proving the debt for all purposes in the proceeding, unless objected to or continued for consideration. If objections are made to the allowance of a claim, the formal proof of it raises a presumption as to its validity which must be rebutted by affirmative proof.²¹ Even if objected to, the sworn proof of claim is prima facie evidence of its validity; when objection is made, clause f provides that the objection shall be heard and determined, ity therefor supported by the legal affidavit of the claimant is sufficient. Matter of Collins (D. C., W. Va.), 32 Am. B. R. 788, 215 Fed. 247; Matter of Booth (D. C., N. Y.), 33 Am. B. R. 183, 216 Fed. 575; Matter of Hudson Porcelain Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 35 Am. B. R. 18, 225 Fed. 325.

R. 806, 107 Fed. 243, holding that the statement of consideration should be sufficiently specific and full to enable creditors to pursue proper and legitimate inquiry as to the fairness and legality of the claim, and if it be so meagre and general in character as not to do this it is insufficient. In re Cressinger (Ref., Cal.), 17 Am. B. R. 538, 543.

15. Claims which do not comply with the requirements of the bankruptcy act are not "duly proved" within the meaning of section 57d of the Bankruptcy Act. Matter of Hudson Porcelain Co. (D. C., N. J.), 35 Am. B. R. 18, 225 Fed. 325.

The amount claimed by a creditor to be owing him from a bankrupt must be definitely stated in the proof of claim and not left to depend upon some future contingency. Bay State Milling Co. v. Susman Feuer Co. (Conn. Sup. Ct. of Enos), 39 Am. B. R. 132, 100 Atl. 19.

Compliance with statute.—A proof of claim is not prima facie evidence of its allegations and entitled to allowance, unless it complies with the requirements of the bankruptcy act, as to the statement of the claim and its consideration. Matter of Hudson Porcelain Co. (D. C., N. J.), 35 Am. B. R. 18, 225 Fed. 325.

Claim against bankrupt on stock subscription.—A claim by a receiver of an insolvent insurance company against the bankrupt estate of a stockholder, based on the contention that it is necessary to enforce the liability of stockholders on their subscriptions in order to equalize claims between various stockholders who had paid their subscriptions in various proportions, should not be allowed where it does not appear how much the bankrupt has paid on his subscription. Matter of Bass (D. and not the claim.²³ If the proof of debt is not relied upon by the creditor, but he attempts to establish his claim by other evidence, he cannot, on appeal, use the allegations of his proof of debt to supply deficiencies in his testimony.²⁴ If proof is properly made by witnesses who are competent to testify, the claim may be received. It is a serious matter to reject a claim upon the ground that the witnesses are unworthy of belief.²⁵

c. Allegations of proof.—The proof of claim is not a pleading, but a deposition which must set forth the evidence with particularity.²⁶ While strict rules of pleading do not apply, it is nevertheless necessary that the claim and its consideration should be so set forth as to enable the trustee and the creditors to make proper investigation as to its fairness and legality without undue trouble or inconvenience.²⁷ If the allegations of the proof do not set forth all of the necessary facts to establish a claim, or are self-contradictory, the Proof of claim as evidence.—The Supreme Court in the case of Whitney v. Dresser, 200 U. S. 532, 15 Am. B. R. 326, has sustained the principle declared in the text, holding that the words of section 57-f suggests, if they do not distinctly import, that the objector is to go forward; it is the objection, and not the claim, which is there pointed out for hearing and determination, indicating that the claim is regarded as having a certain standing already established by the oath.

The proof of claim is prima facie evidence that the allegations made therein are correct, and the petitioner's status as a creditor must stand until it shall be properly and successfully attacked. In re Roanoke Furnace Co. (D. C., Pa.), 18 Am. B. R. 661, 152 Fed. 646; In re Coventry-Evans Furniture Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 22 Am. B. R. 272, 166 Fed. 516.

Negative averment.—In the case of Board of Commerce v. Security Trust Co. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 762, 225 Fed. 454, a claim was filed which was based on the alleged breach of contract between the bankrupt and a chamber of commerce consisting of a failure to maintain its factory as agreed, and objection was made as to the proof presented. The court said: "The objection that the claim is not sufficiently proved is based upon the fact that from the evidence it does not appear the breach of contract by the Company was not brought about by strikes, labor difficulties, fires, acts of the elements, panics, or other causes beyond its control. In the sworn proof of claim these negatives were clearly alleged, and, in the absence of proof to the contrary, are held to be sufficiently proved under the Bankruptcy Act, since such allegations are prima facie evidence and the sworn proof of claim is some evidence, even when it is denied. Whitney v. Dresser, 200 U. S. 532, 15 Am. B. R. 326, 26 Sup. Ct. 316, 50 L. Ed. 584. These designated exceptions and contingencies are all matters which were peculiarly within the knowledge of the company. Under such circumstances the prima facie proof of the proof of claim itself must stand, unless the one against whom the averment was made shows an excuse from compliance by proving the causes named."

What proof of claim should contain.—A proof of claim is not a pleading but a deposition and should inform to a certain extent of the origin and character of the debt, and the items of which it is made up should be given, and the statement of the consideration ought to be such as, if true, not to put the creditors or trustees upon proof or require oral explanation from the claimants, and should be sufficiently full to enable the trustee or creditors to pursue any legitimate inquiry as to the fairness and legality of the claim. Matter of Creasinger (Ref., Cal.), 17 Am. B. R. 538, 145 Fed. 224.

Statement upon information and belief.—The vital facts to support a proof of claim should be made to appear by positive averments, founded upon deponent's knowledge, and not upon his belief; and an allegation upon information and belief upon a vital point in a proof of claim is not sufficient to sustain such proof. In re United Wireless Telegraph Co. (D. C., Me.), 29 Am. B. R. 848, 201 Fed. 445.

claim may be disallowed; or the referee may unquestionably order proper and legitimate inquiries into the fairness and legality of such claim so that he may pass upon it intelligently and judicially.²⁷ The proof presented to sustain the claim should conform to the statement, at least as to amount and grounds.²⁸

d. Statement as to consideration.—The statement as to consideration must be sufficiently full and explicit to enable the trustee and other creditors to investigate as to the fairness and legality of the claim.²⁹ It must be sufficient to enable the referee passing on it to do so intelligently and judicially.³⁰ It will not be sufficient to merely state that the consideration was "for legal services,"³¹ or "for goods, wares and merchandise."³² The statement of the

A statement that the claim is "for goods, wares and merchandise" is insufficient. In re Blue Ridge Packing Co. (D. C., Pa.), 11 Am. B. R. 36, 125 Fed. 619. R. 272, 166 Fed. 516. In the case of In re Watertown Paper Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 22 Am. B. R. 190, 169 Fed. 252, it was held that the rejection of a claim is not justified because the consideration of the debt was stated to be for "wood pulp sold and delivered," when it really was for the balance of a running account though wood pulp sold did in fact constitute a large part of the consideration, where it appeared that the whole matter of the account had been fully inquired into before the special master, and the claim which was irregular in form had been amended to conform to the proof and the amount was clearly stated. In the case of In re United Wireless Telegraph Co. (D. C., Mo.), 29 Am. B. R. 848, 201 Fed. 445, it was held that a proof of claim which merely states that deponent was in the employ of bankrupt's predecessor from on or about November 1, 1903, to on or about November 1, 1906, and that a specified sum was due him for salary when he left its employ on the latter date, but which does not state the character of the services, or otherwise give the consideration for them is insufficient.

Where claim is for money had and received.—A proof of claim, setting forth the amount of the debt and alleging the consideration to have been a loan by the claimant to the bankrupt of a certain sum of money, and further unnecessarily alleging that the money was received, accepted, and used by the bankrupt for its own use and benefit is a sufficient compliance with the act, and where it is sustained by the proof it is immaterial whether or not the allegations amount to a count in assumpsit for money had and received. Flower v. Commercial Trust Co. (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 35 Am. B. R. 74, 223 Fed. 318.

Sufficiency of claim for legal services.—A general statement that the consideration of a claim is for legal services rendered during a certain period, without stating the nature of the services except in one particular, without specifying the dates or the number of times the claimant appeared for the bankrupt, and fails to state whether the amount claimed is the reasonable value of the services performed, is insufficient. Matter of Hudson Porcelain Co. (D. C., N. J.), 35 Am. B. R. 18, 225 Fed. 325.

32. In re Blue Ridge Packing Co. (D. C., Pa.), 11 Am. B. R. 36, 125 Fed. 619.

Goods, wares and merchandise.—In re Elder, Fed. Cas. 4,326, it was said: "Looking then at the object of the law and the reasons for requiring a statement of the consideration in the deposition, I consider that a general statement that the consideration of a demand is 'goods, wares and merchandise,' or hay, barley and board, is not sufficient; that the kinds of goods, the quantity, the price and near the date of sale should be stated; that the quantity of hay or barley, the price and the time of delivery if delivered at one time, or if delivered continuously through a period of time, that period should be stated. If the proof falls short of this the register ought not to consider it satisfactory and should withhold his approval."

claim should be itemized and set forth the dates of the several items where possible.³³

e. Requirements of General Order XXI.—Strict practice requires, however, that proofs of debt conform to General Order XXI (1) (2) (3). Thus, proofs (1) should be entitled in the court and in the cause,³⁴ (2) should contain a clause to the effect that "no note has been received for such account, nor any judgment rendered thereon;" (3) if an open account, should state when the debt became or will become due, and (4) if on items maturing at different dates, the average date should be stated.³⁵ A proof of claim is not vitiated merely because the caption incorrectly states the court.³⁶ If made (a) by a partnership, it must appear by oath that the affiant is a member of the partnership; if (b) by agent, the reason why it is not made by the claimant must be stated; and if (c) on behalf of a corporation, it must be sworn to by the treasurer, or if none, the corresponding fiscal officer of such corporation.³⁷

f. Requirements of official forms.—Several forms have been officially adopted by the Supreme Court governing the practice on proof of claims. The forms prescribed are: (1) for an unsecured debt (No. 31); (2) for a secured debt (No. 32); (3) for a debt due a corporation (No. 33); (4) for a debt due a partnership (No. 34); (5) for proof by agent or attorney (No. 35); (6) for proof of secured debt by agent (No. 36). Blanks are not supplied by the government, but are on sale in law book or stationery stores. Each of them contains an allegation which is not required by law;³⁸ none of them contains the allegation to the effect that the claimant has no note or judgment.³⁹ When none of these forms fit a given case, they should be varied or combined, reference being had chiefly to the requirements of the statute as to what constitutes a proof of debt. Some of these variations are considered later. Illustrative cases will be found in the foot-note.⁴⁰

R. 86, 125 Fed. 619, it was held that a claim which specified the consideration to be for "printing done for said bankrupt at its request heretofore, to wit, in September, 1903, as per bill rendered" is insufficient; it may inform to a certain extent of the origin and character of the debt, but the items by which it is made should be given; In re Elder, Fed. Cas. 4,326; In re Scott (D. C. Tex.), 1 Am. B. R. 553, 93 Fed. 418.

Claim based on open account.—In the case of In re Globe Boat Co. (D. C. N. Y.), 27 Am. B. R. 48, 190 Fed. 92, there was attached to the claim a statement of account substantially as follows: "To money advanced and salary due from Sept. 18, 1909, to Dec. 19, 1910, $2,295.96," crediting the bankrupt with $801.13, "By money drawn from firm," thus leaving a balance of $1,494.83, the amount of the claim. The claim was in no manner itemized nor did the proof of claim state when the salary became due, or that no note had been received for such account or judgment rendered thereon. It was held that the claim being on an open account, the proof of claim was defective as not complying with General Order XXI.

g. Before whom proofs taken.—Proofs of debt can be taken before any of the officers designated in § 20 of the act.⁴¹ This is a marked change from the law of 1867. They are not now usually taken before the referee. There being no requirement to that effect, the mere signature of the officer, without a certificate as to his authority or even a seal, seems enough,⁴² though referees can perhaps by rule require a certificate as evidence that the officer is "authorized to administer oaths." The proof being in the nature of a deposition and, if objected to, amounting to a pleading also, claims should not be sworn to before the attorney for the bankrupt,⁴³ although this would not of itself be sufficient to justify the disallowance of a claim.⁴⁴

h. Who may make proof.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Claims must be made by the creditor.⁴⁵ The proof of claim should show on its face the true interest of the person presenting it.⁴⁶ The status of creditors for the purpose of determining their rights to prove their claims is fixed as of the date of filing the bankruptcy petition.⁴⁷ An endorser or surety for a bankrupt is a creditor.⁴⁸ The executor or administrator of a deceased creditor may prove a claim against the bankrupt in behalf of the decedent's estate.⁴⁹ In the case of embezzlement or misappropriation of funds by a bankrupt, the person defrauded may at his option prove a claim founded upon an implied contract to repay.⁵⁰ A creditor who is indebted to the bankrupt in an amount much larger than his claim will not be allowed to prove such claim.⁵¹ It has been held if proof is made of an equitable claim, as by a cestui que trust, it must be not only of his claim but of all others similarly situated.⁵²

(2) RELATIVES AS CREDITORS.—A father may prove a claim against the estate of his son who is a bankrupt.⁵³ Where the wife's common law disability to enter into contracts in respect to her separate property has been removed, she is entitled to prove a claim against her husband's estate in bankruptcy, in the absence of deception on her part or conduct inconsistent with such claim.⁵⁴ Where a creditor is related to a bankrupt his claim will be subjected to a more rigid scrutiny than it would be if no such relation existed; but the honest or dishonest character of a debt is not to be determined by the existence of a relationship between the parties.⁵⁵

(3) CLAIMS BY CORPORATIONS, STOCKHOLDERS OR BONDHOLDERS.—A stockholder of a corporation cannot, by executory contract between the corporation and himself whereby the corporation agrees to purchase the stock held by him, be transmuted from a stockholder into a creditor and as such be entitled to share in the assets of the corporation.^{55a} If a firm having a corporation as a partner de facto is adjudicated a bankrupt, the corporation as a general creditor may not prove a claim against the estate for money advanced and goods sold to the firm upon the ground that the partnership agreement was ultra vires.⁵⁶ The fact that the stockholders of two corporations are identical will not prevent one corporation from proving a claim against the other.⁵⁷ The bondholders of a bankrupt corporation, whose bonds are secured by trust mortgage on all the property of the corporation, are creditors of the bankrupt notwithstanding the rights of the trust mortgagee under the mortgage.⁵⁸ A stockholder who has not paid for his stock must first pay the amount due before he can recover on a claim against the company.^{58a}

57. Stockholders of two corporations identical.—In the case of In re Watertown Paper Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 22 Am. B. R. 190, 169 Fed. 252, the court said: "The case thus presented is one in which the stockholders of two corporations are largely the same, in which both corporations have been under the same management and in which their affairs have for years been involved and intermingled; and the legal question is whether these relations prevent the one corporation from enforcing against the bankrupt estate of the other a claim which in case the latter corporation had remained solvent would have been both valid and enforceable. It must be clearly borne in mind that this is not a case in which a creditor is suing a corporation upon the ground that it has so held itself out with another corporation as, upon principles of estoppel, to render it responsible for the particular debt of the latter. It is an elementary and fundamental principle of corporation law, that a corporation is an entity, separate and distinct from its stockholders and from other corporations with which it may be connected. The fact that the stockholders of two separate chartered corporations are identical, that one owns shares in another and that they have mutual dealings, will not as a general rule merge them into one corporation, or prevent the enforcement against the insolvent estate of one of an otherwise valid claim of the other."

Bondholders of an insolvent corporation deposited their bonds with a bondholders' committee pursuant to a plan of reorganization and vested in such committee the legal title to the bonds, with authority to do with them as they saw fit toward conserving the property of the insolvent company and providing means for the protection of the bondholders, who subsequently accepted bonds and stock of the new corporation which purchased the assets of the bankrupt corporation, using the bonds in part payment therefor, namely, to the extent to which bonds were entitled to share in the distribution of the amount realized on the sale. Held, that the acceptance of these bonds and stock of the new company by the bondholders did not constitute a novation, and did not preclude the bondholders' committee from making a claim against the bankrupt estate as an unsecured creditor for the difference between the amount allowed as dividends and the par value of the bonds. In re Medina Quarry Co. (D. term "creditor" includes a duly authorized agent, attorney or proxy.⁶⁰ In view of the provisions of General Order IV to the effect that a creditor "will only be allowed to manage before the court his individual business," and the further provision authorizing a party to appear by attorney authorized to practice in a bankruptcy court, it has been held that a person who is not an attorney of the court may not represent a creditor other than himself and present his claim.⁶¹ If proof is made by an agent or attorney in behalf of a creditor it must appear why it was not made by the creditor.⁶² Claims should not be proved by an agent when the principal is present and able to file his own proof.⁶³

j. Proof of assigned claims.⁶⁵—(1) IN GENERAL.—Assigned claims may be proven in the same manner, within the same time and under the same conditions as other claims.⁶⁶ If the claim was assigned after bankruptcy General Order XXI (3) controls. The requirement that the referee give immediate notice to the original creditor, and the ten-day limit on the filing of objections by such creditor, should be noted.

(2) RIGHTS OF CLAIMANTS OF ASSIGNED CLAIMS.—Claims assigned before the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings may be proved by the assignee upon a proper showing that he is the owner of the claim.⁶⁷ An assigned claim may be proved although assigned as collateral security for a loan.⁶⁸ Claims which have been assigned before proof or after adjudication must be supported by a deposition of the owner at the time of the commencement of proceedings setting forth the true consideration of the debt and that it is entirely unsecured or, if secured, it must state the security, as is required in proving secured claims.⁶⁹ The assignee cannot prove his claim unless it appears that the assignor could have done so if there had been no assignment.⁷⁰ If the assignee is also the claimant, the ordinary proof of debt would seem enough.⁷¹ It has been held that the assignee of a chose in action must state the consideration which passes between the original parties unless the instrument be negotiable.⁷² The proof of a claim which has been assigned should set forth the date and facts of transfer and the name of the original creditor.⁷³ The failure of a wife to register an assignment to her of a claim against her husband, as her separate property, under a State statute, does not preclude her from proving the claim against his estate.⁷⁴ If the assignor was entitled to priority in payment based upon the character of the claim the assignee is entitled to the same priority.⁷⁵ If the right to priority attaches to the claim rather than to the claimant there can be no question as to the priority right of the assignee.⁷⁶ The priorities here referred to are those prescribed under section 64-b of the act and will be further discussed under that section.

k. How proven, if evidenced by a written instrument.—This is regulated by subsection b, and its provisions must be strictly followed.^{76a} If founded on a note or bond, or written contract, the original instrument must be attached to the proof of debt; otherwise, it will not be allowed.⁷⁷ But the failure to file a written instrument with the proof of claim thereof raises no presumption against the existence of such instrument.⁷⁸ The attaching of the note does not relieve the creditor of stating the consideration in his proof of debt.⁷⁹ When the claim is allowed the written evidence may be withdrawn, upon leaving a copy in its place.

Statement of consideration and payments.—

In the case of In re Stevens (D. C., Vt.), 5 Am. B. R. 808, 107 Fed. 243, the court said: "The claim is founded upon notes, endorsements and waivers of protest and notes in writing all of which appear to be filed except one such waiver stated to be lost, with the circumstances apparently sufficient to admit, on trial of the facts, of proof of the loss and the contents. And the consideration so far as it moved from the securities held by the claimant and payments so far as received by him are set forth. The requirement by § 57-a of a statement of the consideration and payments is of more than general allegations in these respects which might be sufficient in a declaration against the bankrupt upon those causes of action and extends to the particulars of each for the information of the trustee and those interested in the estate, but not beyond what relates to the claim as it accrued to the claimant. Other sources of information are as well open to them as to him. This requirement seems now to be sufficiently complied with by this claimant." See also Baumhauer v. Austin (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 355, 196 Fed. 289, rev'd 34 Am. B. R. 750, 179 Fed. 908.

Where it is lost or destroyed, it may still be proven by a proper affidavit.⁸⁰ The practice of attaching both original note and copy to the proof of debt, and requesting the referee to return the former, is usual. Where the absence of the original notes upon which the claim is based is not objected to, the court may treat their presence as waived.⁸¹ Where a creditor holds several notes against a bankrupt the better practice is to prove all of them as one claim.⁸² Where a note contains a stipulation as to payment of costs in case of suit, such stipulated fee will not be considered in determining the amount of the claim.⁸³ If the consideration of the note and the allegations of the proof of claim are clearly self-contradictory there should be an investigation as to the fairness and legality of the claim before allowance.⁸⁴

1. Debts created by fraud.—The referee has no jurisdiction to decide that a claim was created by the fraud of the bankrupt. He may only allow such claim.⁸⁵ Where a personal judgment has been procured in a State court creditors who were not parties to the proceeding in the State court may show that such judgment was procured by fraud or collusion.⁸⁶ Creditors whose judgments have been annulled as fraudulent under the bankruptcy act are still entitled to prove their claims. The proof of fraud on the part of the creditor must be clear and convincing; the presumption is that the claim is an honest one.⁸⁷

m. Claims by one bankruptcy estate against another.—Here subdivision m regulates. Without it, the trustee of the creditor estate would have power to prove. The court could compel him to file the additional deposition if necessary.⁸⁸

n. Statements, transcripts of judgments, etc., attached.—The practice of attaching statements of accounts to claims is general and should be followed. Likewise, a transcript of judgment should be annexed as an exhibit when the claim rests on a judgment; the proof, itself, should, however, show the consideration of the debt so in judgment.⁸⁹ In the case of transactions with

o. Amendment of proof of claims.⁹¹—(1) IN GENERAL.—The practice in respect to proofs of claims has always been liberal and free from technicalities.⁹² The general rule is that if the defect in the proof is merely formal it may be either disregarded or an amendment may be permitted to remedy the defect.⁹³ The referee will usually allow such amendments to proofs of debt as justice requires,^{93a} and claims objected to are often expunged or allowed to be withdrawn, with leave to amend and refile.

(2) CASES WHERE AMENDMENT WILL BE ALLOWED.—A claim filed within the required time may be amended for the purpose of supplying the oath of the creditor and a statement that no payments have been made upon the amount claimed, in conformity with the law,⁹⁴ or for the purpose of itemizing the proofs where a gross charge has been made,⁹⁵ or in the case of a claim upon certain notes to show the balance due,⁹⁶ or where composition was offered but not finally accepted.⁹⁷ Where a claim was presented on the wrong theory, as, for instance, for a secured debt and it appeared that it was unsecured,⁹⁸ the creditor should have an opportunity to amend so as to prove the correct amount of his unsecured claim,⁹⁹ or to set up a counterclaim and have the claim allowed for the balance.¹⁰⁰ The informal presentation of a claim, not sufficient to constitute a valid "proof of claim" may be amended so as to conform to the requirements, where the record contains all the facts necessary to establish a bona fide indebtedness and the circumstances under which it was incurred.¹⁰¹

^{93a} Supplementing defects by oral testimony.—The orderly procedure, where a proof of claim is insufficient in that it fails to properly state the consideration, is to require the claimant to amend, but where the referee to save time permits the claimant to give oral testimony to supply the defects, the testimony will be regarded as written into the claim and on the review of an order disallowing the claim, as constituting the claimant's claim. Matter of Welborne (D. Amendment of informal proof of claim.—In the case of Matter of Salvator Brewing Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 26 Am. B. R. 21, 188 Fed. 522 (aff'd 23 Am. B. R. 50, 103 Fed. 950), it appeared that the directors of a corporation indorsed notes of the company which were discounted at a bank; certain securities were assigned to one of the directors to be held by him in trust as security for the indorsement; the company became bankrupt and the notes were paid by the directors; in a proceeding by the trustees the assignment of the securities was declared invalid, but evidence was given proving the indorsement by the directors and payment of the notes; no formal proof of claim was filed; subsequently upon the termination of such proceedings, the directors filed formal proof of claim for the amount paid on their indorsement; objection was made on the ground that a proof of claim had not been

As for instance where after adjudication the bankrupt's creditors enter into an agreement for a settlement, which was signed by the creditors and contained a statement of the amounts of their several claims, it was held sufficient in substance to constitute an amendable claim so as to permit the filing of formal proof of claims.¹⁰¹ To permit an amendment there must be in the record the substance of what is required to make a valid proof of the claim.¹⁰² If a claim has been recognized by the court in proceedings for the settlement of claims against a bankrupt as a condition of the sale of the assets of the bankrupt, formal presentation of such claim may be excused, and the creditor should be permitted to file an amended proof.¹⁰³ Illustrative cases under the present and former law will be found in the foot-note.¹⁰⁴

(3) AMENDMENT AFTER THE EXPIRATION OF YEAR.¹⁰⁵—It is apparent from the cases already cited that a claim which is filed within the required time may be amended even after the expiration of a year.¹⁰⁶ An amendment may be filed within a year; it was held that the claim had been proved by the evidence given in a former proceeding and that such proof might be amended by adding the former proofs of claim. The court said: "It is also claimed in this case that the evidence given on the hearing in relation to the validity of the assignment of the securities, amounted substantially to a proof of the claim. Such evidence, of course, is not what is commonly known as a formal proof of claim, but it did prove facts which were essential to establish the claim, and indeed it was necessary, as a part of the claimant's proof in that proceeding, to establish that the notes had been paid by the endorers, in order to show any ground for claiming to enforce the securities. I think under the authorities, that the claim was proved in that proceeding, and that the motion made to amend the proof by adding the formal proofs of claim should be allowed." Citing Buckingham v. Estes (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 12 Am. B. R. 182, 128 Fed. 584; Matter of Roeber (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 11 Am. B. R. 464, 127 Fed. 122.

Claim for money loaned.—A claim for moneys loaned to the bankrupt, which does not state that payments set forth were made or received on the claim mentioned, and which appears on its face to be barred by the statute of limitations, should be disallowed with leave to amend. Matter of Ballentine (D. C., N. Y.), 37 Am. B. R. 111, 232 Fed. 271.

102. A creditor which has not filed or attempted to file a claim within a year, will not be permitted to amend an alleged proof of claim, consisting of a letter stating the status of the bankrupt's account. The general right to amend, regardless of the time which has elapsed, is abundantly sustained by the authorities. But to do so, it is plain, there must be in the record, as it stands, the substance of that which is asked for. The right to amend can go no further than to bring forward and make effective that which in some shape is already there. Matter of Thompson (D. C., N. J.), 34 Am. B. R. 242, 222 Fed. 169 (citing In re McCallum & McCallum (D. C., Pa.), 11 Am. B. R. 447, 127 Fed. 768), affd. 36 Am. B. R. 190, 227 Fed. 981.

Amendment to include secured claims.—To authorize the amendment of a proof of claim after the expiration of the year limited, there must be in the record the substance of that which is asked for. Hence, where at the time bankruptcy intervened bankrupt was indebted to claimant bank in a certain sum which was unsecured and in a further sum which then appeared to be amply secured, and the bank filed proof of its unsecured indebtedness only but filed nothing with reference to the secured claim, the bank cannot, after the expiration of the one year period when its security had failed, file an "amended or substituted" proof of claim, so as to include the balance due on its secured indebtedness after applying the proceeds of its security. In re Daniel (Ref., Tex.), 29 Am. Amendment after lapse of years.—An application to amend a claim made after the expiration of one year and the affirmance of an order of the referee disallowing the claim, should be denied, where the trustee contests the claim most strenuously and the bankrupt's liability is not established. Matter of Amsdell-Kirchner Brewing Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 40 Am. B. R. 284, 243 Fed. 783. Clause n, of this section, cannot be taken to exclude an amendment to a claim already filed, admittedly defective, more than a year after adjudication, where the claim upon which the original proof was made is the same as that ultimately proved. Hutchinson v. Otis, 190 U. S. 552, 10 Am. B. R. 135, affg. 8 Am. B. R. 382, 115 Fed. 937. In this case the court said: "It is argued that the allowance of the amendment is within section 57-n, forbidding proof subsequent to one year after the adjudication. The construction contended for is too narrow. The claim upon which the original proof was made is the same as that ultimately proved. The clause relied upon cannot be taken to exclude amendments. An example similar in principle is the allowance of an amendment setting up the same cause of action, after the statute of limitations has run, when the original declaration was bad. The proceedings remain in the district court, notwithstanding the appeal and the amendment properly was allowed there." Matter of Kessler (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 512, 184 Fed. 51, holding that a proof of claim which is defective in some substantial particular may be amended subsequent to the expiration of one year after adjudication, although the effect of such amendment may be that proof of claim is thereby effectively made only after the expiration of a year. The sole question in any given case is whether the document tendered is a proper amendment, and furtherance of justice requires it to be filed. If so, and the document proposed to be amended was filed within the year, it should be allowed to be filed even though the year has then elapsed. The statute prescribes no limit as to the time within which amendments may be filed. Bennett v. American Credit Indemnity Co. (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 20 Am. B. R. 260, 263, 159 Fed. 624. (4) WITHDRAWAL OF CLAIM.—The right to permit a withdrawal of a claim seems clear; for instance where a creditor files a claim based upon notes containing clauses waiving the bankrupt's homestead exemption, he will be permitted to withdraw such claim so as to proceed in the State court to subject the bankrupt's exempt property to the payment of the notes.¹¹⁴

p. Filing proofs of claims.—Proofs of debt should be filed with the referee. If with the clerk of the district court, it becomes his duty to transmit them to the referee.¹¹⁵ So also of claims filed with the trustee.¹¹⁶ Where the trustee does not deliver such proofs of claims to the referee, the creditor should not be charged with the failure.¹¹⁷ Where proof of claim has been delivered to the trustee the claim is sufficiently filed and it is the duty of the trustee to deliver it to the referee.¹¹⁸ Proofs on receipt are usually stamped with a filing stamp, showing the day and hour received, but are not allowed until called at a meeting of creditors.

III. PROOF OF SECURED, PRIORITY AND PREFERRED CLAIMS.

a. In general.—Subsections e, g and h relate specifically to the proof of claims of secured, priority and preferred creditors. Secured or priority creditors need not surrender their securities, but the value thereof may be determined and deducted, and dividends paid on unpaid balances. Preferred creditors, on the other hand, must surrender their advantage and place themselves on an equality with the other creditors before they will be permitted to share in the estate.

b. Secured claims.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The act contemplates that secured creditors may and shall prove their claims, and they are to set forth the claim, the consideration therefor, and whether any, and, if so, what securities are held therefor, etc. Claim of secured creditors and those having priority may also be allowed for certain purposes, thus, for the purpose of fixing the sum on which a dividend from the general estate is to be paid and also for limiting the voting power or voice of the secured creditor, or creditor having a priority, at creditors' meeting.¹¹⁹ Secured claims must be proven on one of the forms provided for that purpose.¹²⁰

(2) WHAT CONSTITUTES A SECURED CREDITOR.—Section 1, subdivision 23, defines a secured creditor as one who "has security for his debt upon the property of the bankrupt of a character to be assignable under this act, or who owns such a debt for which some indorser, surety or other person

Delivery to employee of trustee not sufficient filing.—Although the presentation and delivery of a proof of claim to the trustee within the year after a bankrupt's adjudication is sufficient, the delivery for filing of a proof of claim to a person in the employ of the trustee, but in what capacity is not shown, does not constitute a sufficient filing, so as to permit the creditor to file a proof of claim nunc pro tunc after the expiration of the one year period. secondarily liable for the bankrupt has such security upon the bankrupt's assets." ^{120a} Bondholders of a corporation are secured creditors and may prove their claims against a bankrupt corporation. ¹²¹ That "secured creditor" has a limited meaning in bankruptcy should always be remembered. ¹²² A holder of a promissory note containing a waiver of exemption is in effect a secured creditor. ¹²³ A holder of a mortgage on exempt property of the bankrupt is not a secured creditor. ¹²⁴ A person, holding a collateral note of a bankrupt corporation endorsed by one of its officers, is not a secured creditor. ¹²⁵ A creditor whose security has been destroyed by wrongful act of the bankrupt is not a secured creditor. ^{126a}

(3) CLAIM SECURED BY OTHER FUND OR ESTATE OR BY THIRD PARTY.—The question pertains in each case to the security which a creditor has upon the property of the bankrupt. He may prove his entire claim against the bankrupt estate notwithstanding the fact that he has other security for the payment of all or a part of such claim. He is not compelled to exhaust his remedy against the other fund before asserting his claim against the bankrupt estate. ¹²⁶ No matter how great may be the security which one may have, if it be property of another than the bankrupt, the creditor may prove his entire claim against the bankrupt estate, and receive a dividend thereon, and thereafter institute proceedings to enforce his claim upon the security for the balance. ¹²⁷ As where

C., Ga.), 26 Am. B. R. 917, 184 Fed. 965. The waiver becomes in the nature of a security in that the debt may be made out of any property owned by the debtor without regard to any exemption rights which the debtor would have had but for the waiver. Bell v. Dawson County Grocery Co., 12 Am. B. R. 159, 120 Ga. 628, 48 S. E. 150.

Claim against exempt property.—In the case of In re Cale (D. C., Minn.), 25 Am. B. R. 367, 182 Fed. 439, the claimant had recovered judgment after adjudication and before the bankrupt's discharge, which judgment became a lien upon a part of the debtor's homestead.

It was held that the judgment secured was enforceable only in the State courts, and not through sale of the property by the trustee and application of the proceeds, and that the claimant could only prove for the deficiency obtained by deducting from the judgment the value of the part of the debtor's homestead which could be applied in payment thereof. A creditor with an enforceable lien or claim against exempt property can collect only the deficiency from the general assets. This same question was again considered upon an appeal from a decision of the district court in the case of Gregory Co. v. Bristol (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 938, 191 Fed. 31, the court holding that where a claimant had a statutory lien on certain of the bankrupt's property which was exempt in bankruptcy from the claims of general creditors by reason of which such claimant was secured in a specified amount, a deduction of such amount from its claim was proper.

The equitable rule that a creditor having a lien upon two funds must exhaust that one upon which other creditors have no lien, does not apply in cases where it operates to the injury of the party having the double lien, and this rule has in substance been made part of the bankruptcy act. One who has been allowed to prove his claim as an unsecured creditor a creditor has a claim against two bankrupt estates, he may assert his claim against one unimpaired by the fact that he held security against the other, and he may recover dividends from the two estates upon the full amount of his claim, until from all sources he has received full payment of his claim.¹²⁸ And this rule applies even where the security that is held is security for a partnership debt but is property of individual members of the firm, the partnership and the individual estates being considered distinct and separate.¹²⁹ A trust company which holds as collateral security for the note of a bankrupt company certain debenture bonds issued by the bankrupt as security for the note, but not secured by mortgage or other means, such bonds constitute simply another promise to pay money and the trust company is not a secured creditor.¹³⁰ But it is, of course, otherwise where the bonds are secured by a special fund set apart to provide for their payment when due; in such a case the bondholders may participate in such fund, independent of their right to prove an unsecured balance against the general assets.¹³¹ A creditor whose claim is secured or partly paid by an accommodation indorser may prove the claim to its full amount, and exclude from the bankrupt estate the avails of such security or part payment.¹³² Where a creditor has a claim which is guaranteed by a third person, who turns over a note of the bankrupt to the creditor, such creditor may prove both the claim and the note and receive dividends on both.¹³³

(4) SURRENDER OF SECURITY.—A secured creditor may or may not surrender his security, as he chooses.¹³⁴ If he does, it inures to the benefit of all creditors, and his claim, if otherwise unobjectionable, is allowed at the full amount. If he does not, he can, it seems, have his claim allowed temporarily to enable him to participate in creditors' meetings prior to the determination of the value of his security, but only for such sums as seems to be owing over the security. He may retain his security and prove for the amount of his claim after deducting therefrom the value of his security.¹³⁵

Retention of securities.—In the case of In re Davison (D. C., N. Y.), 24 Am. B. R. 460, 179 Fed. 750, a question arose as to the possession of life insurance policies which had been assigned to a bank as security for the payment of a debt. The court said: "The law does not provide that on crediting the value of the se-

(5) RETENTION OF SECURITY; EFFECT ON PROOF OF CLAIM.—If the security is equal in value to the claim, he cannot prove any part of his claim, although the creditor bids in the property at a foreclosure sale for less than his claim.¹³⁶ A creditor cannot prove both a debt and the security thereof, but he may prove either one.¹³⁷ He may rely on his security and enforce it according to his rights as they exist; in such a case it is optional with him to make a formal proof of his claim.¹³⁸ If he does not present his claim and rely on the administration of the bankrupt estate, he is relegated to the property retained as security for the debt, and, so far as the estate is concerned, the debt is released.¹³⁹ As has already been explained, the value of securities is often arrived at summarily at first meetings to permit a creditor to vote the unsecured balance. A claimant may, of course, be fully secured.¹⁴⁰ If so, he should not be allowed to file a proof, and does not become a party to the proceeding.¹⁴¹ A creditor by proving an unsecured claim is not barred from proving the amount of a secured claim less the sum realized on the security.¹⁴² Where a debt is secured by a life insurance policy the value of the policy should be deducted therefrom and the balance may be proved against the curity on the debt and being allowed a dividend on the balance, the secured creditor is to surrender the security, even if tendered the value thereof as fixed by the court. The secured creditor has the right to retain the policies as security for any balance and any premiums it may pay to keep them alive. (In re Newland, 7 Nat. Bank. Reg. 477.) The policies belong to the bank as security until the debt is paid, but for purposes of a dividend as well as ultimate payment, it is compelled to credit now the value of such security. It does not follow that the policies and all sums received thereon, at maturity will become or now become the property of the bank absolutely, for the ownership is a qualified one and the bank cannot be deprived of them until the notes are fully paid. These policies were assigned to the bank in good faith more than four months before the bankruptcy, and the rights of the bank therein and thereto are in no way effected by the bankruptcy, except that it is compelled, if it elects to prove its claim, to credit the present value as fixed in the mode provided by the act on the debt, and I do not think this operates as an absolute sale and transfer to the bank. . . . The bankruptcy law in plain terms says that in such a case as this the secured creditor may prove his debt, have the value of his security determined, credit such value and have a dividend on the balance, except in cases where the contract of pledge provides a way of converting it into money, in which case that is to be done under and pursuant to the terms of the contract or agreement under which the thing pledged is held. In the absence of something in the bankruptcy act to the contrary. I am of the opinion that in cases where the value of the security is determined by agreement, arbitration or litigation as the court directs, it is contemplated that the secured creditor is to retain such securities, after receiving the dividends subject to such claims as others may have therein or thereon when finally converted into money."

estate.¹⁴³ If a trustee does not elect to redeem the security by paying the debt, the secured creditor may sell the security, if under the terms of his lien he has such right, and file a claim for the unpaid remainder of his debt.¹⁴⁴ There is no authority vested in the court, upon finding that there was an excess due the bankrupt after the payment of the secured claim, to enter a decree against the creditor, who is an adverse claimant, for the amount of the excess.¹⁴⁵ Where the claimant voluntarily appears before the referee in bankruptcy and presents his claim for allowance as a secured claim, alleging that he had a lien upon the land by virtue of a mortgage, deed of trust or the like, the referee has jurisdiction to determine the validity of the lien asserted, and to adjudge whether or not the claim should be allowed as a secured claim.¹⁴⁶ Where book accounts are assigned to secure a debt the creditor must turn over to the trustee the balance of the amount collected by him remaining after payment of his debt, without reference to the adverse claim of another creditor.¹⁴⁷ Where a lease did not provide security for the payment of water-rates and taxes by the bankrupt tenant, the landlord must establish his claim therefor before the referee.¹⁴⁸ Where the security is retained by the creditor he may enforce his lien in any court having jurisdiction, although he has availed himself of the privilege of filing his claim as a secured claim.¹⁵⁰ secured creditor and the trustee may be heard.¹⁵¹ If the value has been legally determined outside of the court of bankruptcy, it will take proof of, and be governed by that fact.¹⁵² This subsection has no application where the securities were not the property of the bankrupt.¹⁵³ The agreement by the terms of which the securities are pledged usually provides for a sale of the securities, and the disposition of the proceeds.¹⁵⁴ The time for fixing the value of the security is the date of its actual conversion into money by the creditor and not the date of the filing of the petition.^{154a} Where the security is sold some time after the filing of the petition and the proceeds are not enough to pay the entire amount of the creditor's claims, it is not permissible to apply the proceeds, first to interest accrued since the filing of the petition, then to the principal, and afterwards to prove for the balance.¹⁵⁵ Where interest and dividends accrue upon securities held by creditors of the bankrupt after the date of the petition in bankruptcy, they may be applied in payment of the after-accruing interest upon the debt.¹⁵⁶ If by action in a State court, the trustee should intervene and see that the security brings what it is fairly worth.¹⁵⁷ Section 6 relating to exemptions does not limit the provisions of subsection h, so as to authorize a creditor to prove his entire claim and to receive dividends thereon from the estate, where such claim is secured by a mortgage on exempt property.¹⁵⁸ The value of the security may be ascertained by converting it into money pursuant to the contract, and in the absence of fraud, the creditor may prove the balance of his claim.¹⁵⁹ It is only when the securities have not been disposed of by the creditor in accordance with his contract that the court may direct what shall be done in the premises. Of course where there is fraud or a proceeding contrary to the contract, the interposition of the court might properly be invoked.¹⁶⁰ Although the property pledged as security may be converted into money as agreed between the parties, yet the secured creditor may not dispose of the property to himself, under the guise of a sale.¹⁶¹ Where a debt is proved as a secured debt in the usual way, and the trustee objects on the ground that the security claimed constitutes a voidable preference, the court may hear and decide the issue, and allow the claim as a secured or unsecured debt, before the alleged security is converted into money.¹⁶² It is proper for the trustee to arrange with the secured creditor to accept the property held as security in satisfaction of the claim.¹⁶³

(7) EFFECT OF PROVING SECURED DEBT AS UNSECURED.—The law here was well settled prior to the present statute. If a secured creditor proves his debt as unsecured, he thereby waives his security.¹⁶⁴ This rule yields, however, where such a proof was made by one ignorant of his legal rights and without fraudulent intent.¹⁶⁵ Thus, where from ignorance or inadvertence a claim has been proved as unsecured the court, in the exercise of its discretion, may permit the creditor to have his proof expunged so that he may take steps to have the value of the security determined and to prove for the excess only. This right will generally be accorded to one asking it and excusing his mistake, if neither the bankrupt nor any other party will be injured; that is, if their rights after the granting of an order to expunge the proof will not be less or different than they would have been had not the mistake been made of proving the claim as unsecured.¹⁶⁶ A proof of claim may be amended so as to include therein a statement of a security in a case where the equities of general creditors will not be disturbed.¹⁶⁷ It has been held that proof without mention

One who claims a mechanic's lien but waives it on proving a claim in bankruptcy against the contractor, having voted upon the claim and transacted other business as a creditor at a meeting of creditors for the election of a trustee, may not thereafter assert that through the mistake made by a clerk of the lawyer who drew the proof of claim, the waiver therein was broader than he intended where the lien sought to be preserved must have been collected out of the proceeds of a contract belonging to the bankrupt. *Brown v. Amendment of claim to reinstate right to security.—Where a claimant has waived his right to security by filing his claim without asserting it, he may, before receiving a dividend, although more than a year after adjudication, be permitted to apply for an order authorizing the filing anew pro tunc of an amended claim thereby reinstating his right to security. Matter of Fisk & Robinson (D. of the security does not of itself operate as a discharge of a mortgage security; that while the creditor was prevented from setting up the same against the assignee, no one but the assignee could avail himself of the fact.¹⁶⁸ Where the security is the property of the bankrupt held by an indorser, or a person secondarily liable, it is not necessary that the creditor should prove as a secured creditor in order to retain his rights as against the indorser.¹⁶⁹ It seems that notwithstanding that a creditor has proved his claim based upon a waive note as unsecured, he may assert in a court of competent jurisdiction any right that he may have on a waiver of exemption.¹⁷⁰ A creditor, having a provable claim, may, upon the relinquishment of his security, share with the other creditors in the distribution of the estate, although the security was such as to be ineffectual against such creditors.¹⁷¹

c. Priority claims.—Subsection e of this section yokes priority claims with secured claims, both as to manner of proof and the ascertainment of the value of the property. A landlord's claim for rent, constituting a lien, by State statute, must be proved to protect the landlord's right to priority of payment.¹⁷² On the other hand, it has been ruled that where a claim is fully secured by a lien upon property of the bankrupt, the formal proof required by the bankruptcy act, is not necessary to the enforcement of the lien.¹⁷³ The reasons for the rule of prima facie proof applicable to proofs of claims do not apply to petitions for priority. Thus, allegations relating to priority are not prima facie evidence of their truth.¹⁷⁴ It is thought that what is said of secured claims, ante, applies equally to debts entitled to priority.

d. Preference claims.¹⁷⁵—(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection g has been as much discussed as any clause in the present law. The former statute denied allowance to a claim filed by a creditor who accepted a preference "having reasonable cause to believe that the same was made or given by a debtor contrary to any provisions of the act;" nor could any dividend be paid on such a debt until the creditor surrendered his advantage.¹⁷⁶ The words quoted do not appear in the present act. Further, the definition of "preference" was, by a shifting of clauses while the bill was in committee, so changed as to lead to the ruling that any payment by debtor to creditor, after, though without knowledge of, actual insolvency, was a preference, even though lacking intent and made years before. This question is discussed at length elsewhere.¹⁷⁷ A few of the more valuable cases on the now historic controversy will be found in the foot-note.¹⁷⁸ *Carson, Pirie & Co. v. the matter. After it, all payments subsequent to insolvency were preferences, the surrender of which was required before the claim of a creditor so "preferred" could be allowed. A further effect of that decision was to declare in substance that all of the indebtedness of the bankrupt to a particular creditor, existing during the period of insolvency, was to be treated as one claim, and any payment made and received, even in good faith, by both parties during such period was to be treated as a preference, and must be surrendered before the balance of the claim, or any part of it, could be allowed.¹⁸⁰ Under the act before the amendment of 1903 it was frequently held that a creditor was not required to surrender a payment made on an open account where, at the time of such payment or subsequent thereto, the creditor extended new credits to the bankrupt in excess of the amount of such payment, the net result of the entire transaction being to increase the indebtedness to the creditor, and the value of the bankrupt estate being enhanced to a like amount.¹⁸¹

(2) THE AMENDMENTS OF 1903.—The conditions resulting from this new doctrine—a reversal of the settled policy of all bankruptcy laws to protect transactions in due course even up to the moment of bankruptcy¹⁸²—were so unsatisfactory to business men and disastrous to the credit system, that the demand for remedial legislation became practically unanimous. Congress has responded by amendment (1) making it certain that no transaction more than four months before the bankruptcy is a preference,¹⁸³ and (2) limiting that which must be surrendered as a condition precedent to proving a debt to (a) preferences that are "voidable under section sixty, subdivision b," and (b) advantages possessed by creditors "to whom conveyances, transfers, assignments, or incumbrances, void or voidable under § 67, subdivision e, have been made or given."

(3) MEANING OF THE AMENDMENTS.—Considered broadly, subsection g seems now to mean what the "protected transactions" clauses of the English system have meant for nearly two centuries. He who has obtained an advantage over other creditors, in any of the ways indicated in the present law, and only such an one, must hereafter surrender his advantage before his claim can be filed or allowed. The intention of its framers is expressed in the sentence next before the last.¹⁸⁴ There may be some question, for instance, 183. This change is considered in detail under § 60.

184. The intention of Congress is indicated by the following from the analysis accompanying the House revision of the amendatory bill.

"Carson, etc., Co. v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 182 U. S. 438, 5 Am. B. R. 814, having held that § 60-a is a definition of 'preference,' it necessarily follows that payments and other bona fide transactions after actual insolvency, though in due course of trade and without knowledge or reasonable cause to believe that a preference was intended, must be, under § 57-g, surrendered before a creditor about the necessity of surrendering where the advantage consists of a lien through legal proceedings within the preference period, such a lien not being strictly either a conveyance, transfer, or assignment, or even an incumbrance in the common meaning of the word. The intention to require the surrender of such an advantage is nevertheless clear; nor is it doubted that the words of the law accomplish it. The discrepancies between a preference which is an act of bankruptcy.¹⁸⁵ and one that is even now merely voidable may also cause discussion. Again, the intention is clear. If not voidable under § 60-b, a preference need not be surrendered; reasonable cause to believe a preference intended must appear.¹⁸⁶ But as to transfers it must appear that they were made with a fraudulent intent.¹⁸⁷ Cases under the former law are not in point, save remotely, and are, therefore, not cited. Still, whatever be the ultimate decisions as to transactions, less common or more subject to suspicion, the exasperating practice of requiring the surrender of mere payments, made and received in due course, is at an end. It is now definitely established that where a creditor at adjudication has a claim for a balance due upon an open account for goods sold and delivered to the bankrupt within the four months' period, payments received by the creditor within said four months, and in good faith, without knowledge of the bankrupt's insolvency, do not constitute preferences which must be surrendered before proof of the claim for the balance due will be allowed.¹⁸⁸

(4) EFFECT OF AMENDMENTS OF 1903.—The effect of this change in § 57-g is to make only those preferences voidable which are made so by § 60-b, or by § 67-e, which latter refers only to conveyances made with intent to defraud creditors or rendered invalid by some statute of the State. Section 60-b, thus referred to, makes transfers voidable by the trustee when the creditor has reasonable cause to believe that the debtor intends thereby to create a preference.¹⁸⁹ Only creditors whose transactions have been entirely in due course will be apt to offer proofs for allowance. This objection will therefore, not often be made. If it is—as to prevent voting for trustee—it must usually be heard and decided somewhat summarily. The action of the creditor in surrendering or not will often turn on the decision. Whether, if he does not surrender after the point is raised, he can thereafter prove his debt is a question; it is thought that, even after a refusal, the creditor can surrender at any time before a suit is brought.¹⁹⁰ For time when this amendment went into effect, see “supplementary section to amendatory act,” post.

(5) CASES PRIOR TO AMENDMENT OF 1903 STILL VALUABLE.—The amendments just considered have rendered many cases decided under the law of 1898 no longer applicable, and they will not be cited. Some cases are who received such a payment could prove the balance of his debt. This was not what was intended by the framers of the law. There is a very urgent and widespread demand for such an amendment as will obviate this menace to trade.”

The fundamental purpose of this provision is to secure an equality of distribution of the assets of a bankrupt estate. Keppel v. Tiffin Savings Bank, 197 U. S. 356, 13 Am. B. R. 552.

nevertheless still of value. Those bearing on (1) what is a preference, and (2) whether a credit granted in good faith after the commission of a preference may be set off against the preference in determining the amount to be surrendered, will be found elsewhere.¹⁹¹ That until surrender a creditor has not a provable debt and may not be a petitioning creditor in an involuntary case is still the law.¹⁹² So also, it seems, is the doctrine that where the principal creditor cannot prove without surrendering, a guarantor cannot.¹⁹³ Likewise, the rule that creditors who cannot prove without surrendering their advantage on a particular debt, cannot prove other and detached debts not so tainted,¹⁹⁴ also that it is immaterial whether the creditor is entitled to priority or not.¹⁹⁵ The difference between a mere preference and a voidable preference, discussed in some of the cases,¹⁹⁶ now becomes important; the former need not be surrendered.¹⁹⁷

(6) WHEN SURRENDER REQUIRED.—(I) In general.—As the law now stands no claim is allowable where the claimant has received any advantage over his co-claimants by means of a preference which is voidable under § 60-b, or by means of a conveyance, transfer, assignment or incumbrance which is void or voidable under § 67-e.¹⁹⁸ A correct understanding of what is required under this section will necessitate a careful reading of the provisions of those sections and of the cases cited in the discussion thereunder. A creditor who has a voidable preference may make and file his formal proof of claim without surrendering his preference, and in that sense his claim is provable. In other words, it is susceptible of a formal statement in writing which may be filed in court. But the claimant may not secure an allowance of his claim, he may not vote upon it at a meeting of creditors, he may not obtain any advantage by means of it in the bankruptcy proceedings, until he first surrenders his preference.¹⁹⁹ It is incumbent on the parties opposing a claim to prove that in fact a preference has been received.²⁰⁰ The surrender must be made to the trustee, and not to the bankrupt or any other person.²⁰¹ It is no objection to a surrender that there is no trustee to receive the same since the estate can be reopened under section 2 (8).²⁰²

(II) Compulsory surrender not a penalty.—Subsection g was not intended to impose a penalty, but merely to give creditors who received preferences options to keep what they have received and take no dividends from the estate, or to surrender their preference and share equally with other creditors in the general distribution.²⁰³ And this right would not appear to be affected by the fraud of the creditor in trying to secure an advantage over other creditors, in the preferential payment of his debt, which was valid at its inception.²⁰⁴ As held by the Supreme Court the act contains no language forfeiting the whole or any part of an otherwise valid claim, on the ground that the creditor has afterward been guilty of fraud,²⁰⁵ and this being so the courts have no authority to enlarge the statute by adding such a provision.²⁰⁶

(III) Result of transactions beneficial to estate.—The fact that the net result of transactions within the four months was beneficial to the estate does not relieve the creditor from surrendering a large payment made on an account which had run for a long time prior to such period.²⁰⁷ But payments on a running account are not to be considered as preferences, required to be surrendered, where new sales succeed payments and the net result is to increase the value of the estate.²⁰⁸ Where in a running account payments by the bank-

This case was reversed by the Supreme Court on the ground that the court below had directed a surrender of a payment made during the four months' period, notwithstanding the fact that the creditor had no knowledge of the insolvency of the bankrupt. See 214 U. S. 292, 22 Am. B. R. 109. The decision in this case is based upon Carson, etc., Co. v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 182 U. S. 438, 5 Am. B. R. 814, and Jaquith v. Alden, 189 U. S. 78, 9 Am. B. R. 73.

Payments on running accounts.—In the case of Jaquith v. Alden, 189 U. S. 78, 9 Am. B. R. 773, it was held that where a debt for goods sold to the bankrupt upon a running account was all incurred within the four months' period while he was insolvent, of which fact the creditor was ignorant, payments on account do not constitute preferential transfers which must be surrendered before the creditor can prove his claim, although the greater part thereof was for goods sold before the last payment was made; Matter of Sagor & Bro. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 9 Am. B. R. 361, 121 Fed. 658. In the case of Yaple v. Dahl-Millikan Grocery Co., 193 U. S. 526, 11 Am. B. R. 594, it was held that where a creditor has a claim against an insolvent debtor for the balance due upon an open account for goods sold and delivered four months before the debtor's adjudication as a bankrupt, and during the same period makes a number of sales of merchandise on credit which becomes a part of the debtor's estate, payments on account from time to time received in good faith

rupt within the four months' period have induced new credits which resulted in the net increase of the estate, the creditor may be said to have once surrendered his preference by the giving of the subsequent credit, but where the bankrupt, beginning far beyond the four months' limit, makes a number of purchases and then finally within the four months makes a large payment on account, the creditor has been preferred.²⁰⁹

(IV) Intent to prefer.—A preference must have been actually intended in fact on the debtor's part, or there must have existed what the law regards as the equivalent of such an intent on his part, and such intent is not to be conclusively presumed from the mere fact that the debtor knows himself to be insolvent.²¹⁰ A trust deed given to secure the repayment of funds misappropriated within four months prior to the bankruptcy of the grantor without knowledge of the debtor's insolvency on the part of the creditor, do not constitute preferences which he is obliged to surrender before he can prove his claim. In the case of In re Jourdan (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 7 Am. B. R. 186, 111 Fed. 726, the court said: "While the Supreme Court has adopted a liberal construction of the statute in question and we are bound to follow it, there must be a limit to that method of interpretation and these cases reach it. It is beyond all reason to hold because a creditor has, in the ordinary course of business, during the four months preceding bankruptcy received payments which under some circumstances might operate as a preference in some views of the law, that that fact can be held to bar the proof of his claim when, looking at all the transactions together, they demonstrate not only that they were without any intention to acquire any unjust preference, but also that they have increased the net indebtedness to the creditor and correspondingly increased the bankrupt's estate. In order to avoid so unreasonable a result, we might say that all the transactions covered by the account current should be regarded as one, so that it could not be held that the effect of the payments was to enable the creditors at bar to obtain a greater percentage of their debt than any other creditor of the same class, within the meaning of paragraph a of section 60."

Payment by corporation to officer.—Where claimant who was bankrupt's president and manager ascertained after he became connected with bankrupt that it was insolvent and was in a position to know that such condition continued until bankruptcy intervened, bankrupt was chargeable with his knowledge, and payments made to claimant within the four months' period on account of money loaned by him to bankrupt constituted preferences which were recoverable by bankrupt's trustee and which should be surrendered before a claim for the balance due on such loan could be allowed. Cooper v.

constitutes a preference which must be surrendered before proof of the claim based upon the misappropriation.²¹¹ It must appear affirmatively, where the surrender of a preference is insisted upon, that the creditor had reasonable cause to believe that the transaction would result in a preference, and to this end the trustee attacking the creditor's claim has the burden of proving the essential elements of a voidable preference.²¹²

(V) Distinct and independent debts.—Where payments were made upon an indebtedness during the period of four months prior to the debtor's bankruptcy, and notes were given for the balance, such notes cannot be proved as independent debts without a surrender of such payment.²¹³ A creditor who holds two separate and distinct debts against the estate of a bankrupt must surrender a preferential payment on one of such debts before he can prove the other.²¹⁴ But where such payment is made upon a distinct and independent debt from that which is sought to be proved it need not be surrendered.²¹⁵ Thus, if a creditor has received a preference from a firm composed of two persons, but has an individual claim against one of them, he may prove the latter without surrendering his preference.²¹⁶

(7) PAYMENT OF NOTES DISCOUNTED AT A BANK.—The payment of notes given to third parties and discounted by a bank is a preferential payment to the bank and not to the payees of the notes, and must be surrendered before the bank can prove its claim for other indebtedness of the bankrupt.²¹⁷ In

Accommodation indorser; surrender of preference paid to holder.—An accommodation indorser before notes are paid is a creditor, his claim is provable as a contingent claim founded on a contract, and, therefore, he must refund to the bankrupt estate any preferential part payment made by the maker to the holder on account of the notes before he can prove his own claim for payments as indorser. Where it appears that a creditor of a bankrupt holding notes and a deed of trust as security therefor, took them with knowledge of the bankrupt's insolvency, a bank which is not a holder for value of the notes and which is protected by a solvent endorser, should not be allowed to enforce its claim. Bridgton Nat. Bank v. Way (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 43 Am. B. R. 204, 253 Fed. 731.

Credit by clearing house.—In the case of determining the preference to be surrendered by the bank, the increase of the contingent indebtedness of the bankrupt on the indorsement of notes given to it by customers and discounted by the bank should not be considered, since it cannot be said that such increased indebtedness resulted in a corresponding increase of the bankrupt's estate.²¹⁸

(8) WHAT IS A SURRENDER.—(I) Compulsory surrender; effect on proof.—Here the doctrines declared under the law of 1867 seem at least somewhat applicable. The phrasing of that statute undoubtedly colored some of the decisions under it. In a former edition of this work, the following language was used: "Under well-recognized principles of law, a surrender that is compulsory is not a surrender. The element of fraud is usually present, but may be lacking; the test is: was the act a voluntary one? Each case turns on its own facts and there is some conflict, but the weight of decision under the present law supports this view."²¹⁹ This view as here expressed received the approval of four of the nine judges of the Supreme Court, but the majority maintained a contrary view.²²⁰ The rule as now established is as follows: A creditor, who has received a voidable preference and retained the same until deprived thereof by a judgment of the court, may surrender the preference and thereafter prove his claim against the estate.²²¹

(II) Rule under former law.—Under the former law, there were no authoritative decisions. They varied from the rigid rule that, if a suit was brought to recover, it was too late,²²² to the rather watery doctrine that, even after judgment adverse, the recusant creditor was entitled to time to reflect and decide whether he would pay costs and yield, or continue recusant.²²³

(III) Surrender by direction of court or as a result of litigation.—A creditor should not be punished for submitting to the court the question as to whether the alleged preference is voidable; upon determining that it is voidable, the court should fix a reasonable time within which the creditor may surrender and have his claim allowed. Where a creditor has been compelled to surrender by direction of the court in a litigation to compel such surrender, he is entitled to prove his claim and to dividends thereon; the court may

Effect of fraud in receiving preference.—A preferred creditor may prove his claim notwithstanding there has been no surrender of his preference by him beyond what is involved in the payment of a final judgment secured against him in a proceeding instituted by the trustee to avoid the preference. This is true, although the creditor, in furtherance of his fraud in receiving the preference, exposed the estate to delay and expense by prolonged and unwarranted litigation. Matter of Bergdoll Motor Co. (D. settle the amount of dividend coming to him, and the final decree may direct him to pay over the full amount of his preference, with interest, less the amount of his dividend.²²⁴ Where as a result of the litigation the creditor surrenders a preferential payment he is entitled to prove his claim against the estate irrespective of whether the suit to avoid the preference was instituted in a State court or in a court of bankruptcy, even though more than a year had expired from the time of the bankrupt's adjudication.²²⁵ The court may summarily diminish or expunge an allowed claim unless the claimant pays to the trustee the value of property of the bankrupt which he has taken and converted to his own use without any prior claim to it, after the petition in bankruptcy was filed.²²⁶ The surrender must be to the trustee, and not to the bankrupt.²²⁷

c. Subrogation claims.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Under subsection i a surety or indorser or other person secondarily liable for the bankrupt may prove the principal creditor's debt, but only when the principal creditor could prove and does not.²²⁸ The proving party simply has the same relief he would have had if the principal creditor had proved his claim.

Compulsory surrender of preferences.—The surrender clause contained in section 57-g should not be construed as inflicting a penalty upon creditors coming within the scope of the enlarged preference clauses of the bankruptcy act thereby entailing an unjust and unprecedented result. The surrender clause was intended simply to prevent a creditor from creating inequality in the distribution of the assets of a bankrupt estate by retaining a preference, and at the same time collecting dividends from the estate by a proof of his claim against it. Whenever the preference has been abandoned or yielded up and thereby the danger of inequality has been prevented, such creditor is entitled to stand upon an equal footing with other creditors and prove his claim. Keppel v. Tiffin Savings Bank, 197 U. S. 356, 13 Am. B. R. 552.

Where within the four months' period a bankrupt corporation pays its notes secured by mortgage upon property of the indorser and judgment in an action to recover the payment as an alleged preference is rendered in favor of the trustee, more than a year after the adjudication in bankruptcy, the bank, upon payment into court of the full amount of the said judgment with interest and costs, is entitled to prove its claim upon the note as an unsecured claim. In re Lange Co. (D. C., Ia.), 22 Am. B. R. 414, 170 Fed. 114.

Sale of property.—If a referee allows subrogation, common creditors are entitled to have the property sold in order that it may be determined whether it will bring a surplus for their benefit and in order that the property itself will not suffer dissipation, deterioration and loss pending the determination of their contest against the right to subrogation in case they determine to contest it. Liller Bldg. Co. v. Reynolds (C. C. A., 4th Cir.), 40 Am. B. R. 371, 246 Fed. 90.

Claim of indorser of bankrupt corporations' joint note.—Bankrupt, a corporation, and one of its promoters, who was engaged in no other business except the management of the company's affairs, executed a joint negotiable note payable to the order of the third person who indorsed it over to claimant bank, for its face value less the discount.

(2) CLAIM OF PRINCIPAL TO BE PROVED.—It is the fixed liability of the bankrupt to the creditor which is to be proved, not the contingent liability of the bankrupt to the surety.²²⁹ The surety proves not his contingent claim, but the claim of the creditor, and he must prove it in the creditor's name. This right to prove arises, not from the original contract, but from the equities of the subsequent transaction.²³⁰ Since the right to prove exists primarily in the principal creditor, the surety cannot, after discharging part of the debt, be subrogated pro tanto and prove to that extent against the estate.²³¹ It is clear that if the principal creditor does not prove the debt, the surety is not released by the bankrupt's discharge.²³² The doctrine of subrogation may be applied to permit a third party who pays a debt and takes into his possession personal property held as security therefor, to prove the amount of such debt against the estate of the bankrupt debtor.²³³ A surety paying the debt of his principal after bankruptcy may set off the amount so paid against his debt to the bankrupt, and this is so, irrespective of the provisions of the bankruptcy act.²³⁴

(3) SURETY ON ATTACHMENT BONDS.—A surety on an attachment bond given by a bankrupt is a creditor, and if the surety pays a judgment rendered in an action on such bond, after the adjudication of the bankrupt, he is subrogated to the rights of the attachment creditor, and may prove the debt against the bankrupt.²³⁵ The attachment creditor may not waive its claim or withdraw proof thereof, with the effect of depriving the surety of the right to prove the claim.²³⁶

(4) RESTORATION OF PREFERENTIAL PAYMENTS.—Where preferential payments have been made by the bankrupt to the holder of notes to be applied thereon, and an indorser subsequently pays the balance due on such notes, he is subrogated to the rights of the holder cum onere, and can only prove such

After the adjudication judgment was entered on the bond in a proceeding pending at the time of the adjudication. Thereafter the creditor waived his right to dividends from the bankrupt's estate. Held, that the surety on the bond was a creditor at the time of the adjudication and at that time had the right to insist on the liquidation of any claim which the creditor had against the bankruptcy estate, and to discharge its liability on the bond, and therefore the creditor was powerless to waive, without consideration passing to the surety, and without its consent, any rights it had against the estate of the bankrupt. *Kilpatrick v. notes and participate in the distribution of the bankrupt's estate when he restores the preferential payments.²³⁷ Additional illustrative cases will be found in the foot-note.²³⁸ General Order XXI (4) should also be read in connection with this subsection.

f. Penalty and forfeiture claims.—The purpose of subsection j is clear. The creditors at large are not to be mulcted "except to the amount of the pecuniary loss sustained," interest and costs, because of debts owing the sovereign as a penalty or forfeiture. This clause does not affect a claim for a statutory penalty imposed for non-payment of a tax, in the nature of interest.²³⁹ A penalty imposed by statute for a wrongful act is not a provable claim in behalf of the person for whose benefit such penalty is imposed,²⁴⁰ and the same is true of a penalty for using the mails to defraud.^{240a} A claim for a penalty inflicted upon a corporation for a failure to file a report falls within this subsection and is therefore not provable.²⁴¹ A judgment secured on a penalty is not provable, except as to any pecuniary loss sustained by the act out of which the penalty arose, together with actual and reasonable costs and interest, because it is not for a fixed liability.²⁴² The general subject of debts due the State is considered elsewhere.²⁴³

IV. CONTEST OF CLAIMS.

a. In general.—It is provided by subsection a that claims duly proved shall be allowed "unless objection to their allowance shall be made by the parties in interest." It is then provided in subsection f that such objections shall be heard and determined "as soon as the convenience of the court and the best interests of the estates and the claimant will permit." Subsections k and l provide for a reconsideration and rejection after allowance.²⁴⁴

b. Objection before allowance.—(1) PROCEEDINGS ON CONTEST.—Contests on claims usually arise from objections stated at the time claims are called before the election of a trustee. The result is a trial, as of an issue in equity, the objections being the bill, the proof of debt the answer.²⁴⁵ On the call of claims duly approved and filed there must be an opportunity for objections to allowances by parties in interest.²⁴⁶ If the claimant appears at a hearing on his claim and participates in a proceeding without objecting to the form of the objections, he thereby waives any informality which may have existed.²⁴⁷

(2) FORM OF AND MANNER OF MAKING OBJECTIONS.—In some districts, it is the custom to dispatch business by noting an oral objection, with the proviso that it shall be reduced to writing and filed within ten days, or the claim stand allowed. A trustee's objections may be stated orally, although preferably they should be filed in writing.²⁴⁸ Although the statute is silent as to the form of the objections, it is better that they should be in writing, and sufficiently explicit to indicate to the claimant the nature and character thereof.²⁴⁹ The manner of making such objections is largely committed to the discretion of the referee.²⁵⁰ They need not be under oath.²⁵¹ Delay by a trustee of several months after a claim has been filed before objecting thereto does not necessarily render him guilty of such laches as to justify overruling his exceptions.^{251a}

(3) WHO MAY OBJECT.—The phrase "parties in interest" applies to those who have an interest in the res which is to be administered and distributed in the proceeding and does not include those who are merely debtors or alleged debtors of the bankrupt.²⁵² Stockholders of a bankrupt corporation having no provable claims against the corporation are not parties in interest.²⁵³ An unsecured creditor may object to the proof of claim by another unsecured creditor.²⁵⁴

(4) TESTIMONY UPON HEARING OBJECTIONS.—Testimony taken at meetings of creditors, which the claimant did not attend and of which he received no notice, is not admissible upon the hearing of his claim.²⁵⁵ A verified proof of claim will be considered as testimony in behalf of the claimant; no inference is to be drawn from his failure to testify in his own behalf since he is subject to call by the court or contestant to explain his claim.²⁵⁶ The verified claim of the claimant has some probative force. It is prima facie evidence of the allegations contained therein. A person who objects to the claim must produce some evidence in support of the assertion that the claim is invalid.²⁵⁷

R. 326, the court said: "The words of the statute suggest if they do not distinctly import that the objector is to go forward and show that the formal proof is evidence even when put in issue. The words are 'Objections to claims shall be heard and determined as soon,' etc. (§ 57-f). It is the objection in the claim which is pointed out for hearing and determination. This indicates that the claim is regarded as having a certain standing already established by the oath. Some force also may be allowed to the word 'proof' as used in the act. Convenience, undoubtedly, is on the side of this view. Bankruptcy proceedings

Where a claimant promptly files his claim and offers evidence in support of objections to a subsequent claim which is identical, the subsequent claimant may be permitted to introduce evidence in rebuttal.²⁵⁸

(5) DETERMINATION OF REFEREE.—The right to a review of the referee's decision is generally recognized; but the decision below is in effect that of a court of first instance and on questions of fact the judge will not disturb it, unless clearly erroneous.²⁵⁹ Where a referee's order disallowing a claim upon claimant's proof has been reversed, the matter should be remanded to enable the trustee to controvert the claim.²⁶⁰ A claim may be allowed in part and it is not error for a referee to deduct one item and allow the claim as reduced without requiring it to be resworn.²⁶¹

c. Reconsideration and rejection.—(1) PRACTICE AND PETITION.—(I) In general.—A claim once allowed can be re-examined and excluded in whole or in part, but the methods prescribed by this section seem to be exclusive.²⁶² Such a claim may be reconsidered for cause before the estate has been closed and a subsequent disposition thereof may be made according to the equities.²⁶³

are more summary than ordinary suits. Judges of practical experience have pointed out the expense, embarrassments and delay which would be caused if a formal objection necessarily should put the creditor to the production of evidence or require a continuance. Justice is secured by the power to continue the consideration of a claim whenever it appears there is good reason for it. We believe that the understanding of the profession, the words of the act and convenient and just administration are all on the side of treating a sworn proof of claim as some evidence even when it is denied."

Burden of proof.—The presentation of a claim evidenced by promissory notes, supported by deposition and proof or duly executed by the treasurer of a corporation constitutes a prima facie cause against the estate and casts the burden upon the objector to go forward with proof. Matter of Montgomery (D. C., Tex.), 25 Am. B. R. 431, 185 Fed. 955. See also In re Carter (D. C., Kan.), 15 Am. B. R. 126, 128 Fed. 846, holding that the presentation of the claim in proper form, duly verified except as to particulars which the court treats as waived, presents a prima facie case in favor of the claimant upon which it has a right to rest and the burden of proof is upon the objectors; In re Cannon (D. C., Pa.), 14 Am. B. R. 114, 133 Fed. 837; In re Sumner (D. C., N. Y.), 4 Am. B. R. 123, 101 Fed. 224. In the case of In re Schwarz (D. C., N. Y.), 29 Am. B. R. 700, 200 Fed. 309, it was held that the presentation of a promissory note accompanied by a duly verified claim casts upon a creditor objecting thereto the burden of furnishing some evidence to rebut that furnished by possession of the note and by the verified allegations of the claim; but upon such testimony being presented and further evidence being offered in support of the note, the question to be determined is whether the claimant has sustained the burden of proof, which necessarily rests upon him to establish his claim. Matter of Pratt Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 42 Am. B. R. 406, 232 Fed. 917; Matter of U. S. Molybdenum Co. (D. C., Me.), 43 Am. The findings of fact of a referee as to the validity of a claim will not be overruled, except upon convincing proof that he was wrong in his conclusions. In re Hatem (D. C., N. Car.), 20 Am. B. R. 470, 161 Fed. 895. A referee's decision, allowing the bankrupt a rebate upon his purchases as against the creditor's claim, may be affirmed, although the court may not have come to the same conclusion. In re Douglas & Sons Co. (D. C., Conn.), 8 Am. B. R. 113, 114 Fed. 772. The determination of a referee as to the validity of a claim upon objections filed by the trustee should be sustained when it does not appear that it was clearly erroneous. In re Greenfield (D. C., Pa.), 27 Am. B. R. 427, 193 Fed. 98.

Right of bankrupt to present claim as guardian after refusal of discharge.—Where a voluntary bankrupt has been refused a discharge, his application to have the action of the referee reviewed in refusing to allow his claim as guardian for his children to be filed is without merit, because in no event could he be discharged from the same. Matter of Roberts (D. C., W. Va.), 32 Am. B. R. 541, 213 Fed. 905.

The time for filing the petition for reconsideration of a claim may be fixed by rule of the District court, which may authorize an extension of time for good cause shown,^{263a} or if not so fixed, objections after allowance should be made within the year within which an amended proof of claim might have been filed.²⁶⁴ Upon reconsideration the court may either diminish the claim or expunge it entirely.²⁶⁵

(II) Jurisdiction of court or referee.—The practice is indicated in General Order XXI (6). The referee is the court of first instance; the register under the former law was obliged to certify such contests to the judge. If a claim is rejected, it must be "for cause," and "before but not after the estate has been closed." The district court has no jurisdiction to act upon a petition for a rehearing of the claim during pendency of appeal under § 25-a.²⁶⁶ A bankruptcy court in which an estate is being administered has full power to inquire into the validity of any alleged debt or obligation of the bankrupt upon which a demand or claim against the estate is based.²⁶⁷

(III) Petition; who may present.—The application is by petition,²⁶⁸ by parties in interest,²⁶⁹ and when there is a trustee in existence can only be presented by him, and then only when demanded by the interests of all the creditors.²⁷⁰ But where no trustee has been appointed the bankrupt may move to set aside and expunge a claim which has been allowed.²⁷¹ If a trustee refuses to move for the reconsideration of a claim which has been allowed when he ought to do so, he may be compelled to act or to permit the objecting creditors to act in his name.²⁷² The right of a creditor who moves to expunge

Stockholders of a bankrupt corporation upon whom has been levied an assessment which they will have to pay if the claim they object to is allowed, are "parties in interest," and may move to set aside the order allowing such claim and to expunge and disallow the same. Reconsideration of claims; rights of creditors.—Where certain creditors have made objection to and conducted a controversy over a claim in their own names, having voluntarily assumed the liability for costs and expenses, and have shown that the claim should be disallowed, the court will not ignore what has been done, upon the technical ground that the trustee is the only person to dispute the validity of claims against a bankrupt's estate. ²⁷² Refusal of trustee to act.—In the case of In re Stern (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 16 Am. B. R. 510, 144 Fed. 956, the court said: "In respect to opposing the allowance of claims and moving for their reconsideration after they have been allowed, the trustee is not bound to comply with every request preferred by objecting creditors, irrespective of its merits, nor is he clothed with absolute discretion to refuse. As the representative of the estate, he is bound to exercise his judgment and to act for the best interests of all concerned, but subject to the supervising power of the referee and the district judge. He does not act judicially but only administratively, and if he refuses to oppose a claim or to move for its reconsideration when he ought to do so, he may be compelled to act or to permit the objecting creditors to act in his name." See also In re Lewensohn (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 9 Am. B. R. 368, 121 Fed. 538; In re Baird (D. C., Pa.), 7 Am. B. R. 448, 112 Fed. 960; Chatfield v. O'Dwyer (C. C. A., 8th Cir.), 4 Am. B. the allowance of another creditor's claim is no higher than that of the bankrupts.²⁷³ Creditors themselves should not be permitted to supersede the trustees, and intervene for the purpose of a re-examination.²⁷⁴ A referee may, upon his own motion, take such action as may be necessary to correct an erroneous determination as to the allowance of a claim, due notice being given to the parties concerned.²⁷⁵

(IV) Practice on application; pleadings, hearings and evidence.—The application must be made promptly or it will be denied because of laches.²⁷⁶ But it has been held that reconsideration may be allowed after twelve months have elapsed since the filing of a claim, where it appears that no dividend has been paid on the claim and nothing has happened to prejudice the rights of the claimant.²⁷⁷ When application is made to increase or decrease the sum at which a claim has previously been allowed, the better practice is to vacate the former order of allowance, and allow the claim for the new amount.²⁷⁸ The creditors whose claims it is sought to reconsider should be given an opportunity to oppose the application for reconsideration. The bankrupt is not interested in the application and is charged with no duty trustee wrongfully refuses to take the necessary action to secure a reconsideration, an order will be granted, compelling the trustee to show cause why he should not move for a reconsideration.

Remedy of creditors.—Where a general creditor is dissatisfied with the allowance of the claim of another creditor, his proper remedy is a demand upon the trustee to move for a reconsideration or review of such claim, or, if the trustee upon demand declines to act, then by a motion to the District Court that the trustee be required to move, or that the objecting creditor be permitted to move in his own name. Application for re-examination in the interest of bankrupt's debtors.—That an application by creditors whose claims have been proven and allowed for an order compelling a trustee to petition for the re-examination of the claims of other creditors was made in the interest of alleged debts of the bankrupt is not a sufficient reason for denying it where it does not appear that in other respects the application was not a meritorious one as the application being a legitimate one and the assertion of a clear, legal right, under section 57, should not have been denied upon a consideration of motive. Matter of Sully & Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 123, 152 Fed. 619.

275. International Agricultural Corp. v. Cary (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 38 Am. B. R. 753, in which the court said: "While it is probably the better practice generally for the referee to act upon petition of the trustee or of creditors, and, in case the information comes in the first instance to the referee, to direct the trustee to institute proceedings for re-examination, yet we cannot think that the referee is without jurisdiction to act, as in the case in question, upon his own motion. There may or may not have been good reason for proceeding sua sponte, but the presence or absence of such reason is not fatal to jurisdiction. A court of bankruptcy is a court of equity (Bardes v. National Bank, 178 U. S. 524, 535, 4 Am. B. R. 163); the proceedings therein are more summary than in ordinary suits; and it cannot be that an equity court, acting under such summary practice, is powerless, in the interests of justice, on its own motion to take steps to correct what it believes to have been an erroneous action had upon insufficient knowledge; and the general rule is that firm creditors are not entitled to receive dividends from the separate estates of the partners until separate creditors have been paid in full."

concerning it and is therefore not entitled to be heard upon it.²⁷⁹ The claimant is entitled to "due notice" by mail; the time is usually fixed by the referee. It is customary to notify the claimant's attorney of record also. The issue is made by the petition and the proof of debt, the burden being on the petitioner, at least to overcome the prima facie case made by the proof of debt.²⁸⁰ Objections to proofs of claims should be set forth in the form of a petition for review.²⁸¹ Each creditor must file his own objections, and make an issue, he cannot adopt the answer of the bankrupt.²⁸² The defense of usury is as available to the debtor's trustee in bankruptcy as to the debtor himself.²⁸³ A trustee's petition for the reconsideration of an allowed claim should allege facts which, if true, are sufficient cause for a re-examination. It is not necessary to allege facts which, if proved, would defeat the claim.²⁸⁴ Although the bankrupt has failed to deny an allegation that one of the petitioners is a creditor, the petitioner must prove his claim, and the trustee or any creditor may contest the claim.²⁸⁵ Neither party is entitled to a jury.²⁸⁶ The customary rules of evidence apply.²⁸⁷ The practice on trials in equity should be followed.²⁸⁸

(V) Decision; form of order.—The result is an order either (1) reallowing the claim, or (2) rejecting it, or (3) reducing or increasing it. The referee cannot allow the claim conditionally.^{289a} If the claim is rejected, Form No. 39 should be used; if it is reduced, Form No. 38. The referee cannot pass upon and decide controversies involving questions of fact pertaining to or involving the interests of third parties in property belonging to the estate.²⁸⁹ After a decision and before a formal order has been entered, the referee may, in his discretion, deny a trustee's motion to dismiss his petition for a reconsideration and disallowance.²⁹⁰

(VII) Costs and expenses.—Costs, while often not allowed on such contests, are discretionary. Where it appears that either the claim or the contest was not in good faith, they will usually be given.²⁹³ The referee is not entitled to extra compensation for hearing and deciding, but he can insist on reimbursement or indemnity for his expenses, as in the employment of a stenographer, and the like.²⁹⁴ Illustrative cases under the present law, not already cited, will be found in the foot-note.²⁹⁵

(2) RECOVERY OF DIVIDENDS IN SUCH CASES.—It is the trustee's duty to recover a dividend that has been paid, if a claim is rejected, or the proportional part, if it is reduced. The statute is silent as to how this should be done. The claimant being a party, it would seem possible to require him to repay as a part of the order rejecting or reducing, and then, at the instance of the trustee, proceed in contempt if the claimant does not obey. In any event, the trustee can proceed by suit in the proper court.²⁹⁶

The bankruptcy court ordered that the judgment creditors perfect an appeal within sixty days, otherwise the court would not delay its action. No appeal having been perfected within sixty days, dividends were paid according to the judgment of the State court; but thereafter an appeal was perfected and the judgment reversed. It was held that the judgment creditor, not having appealed within the time fixed, must refund the dividends received prior to the reversal of his judgment on the ground that having waived the condition as to time reopened and litigation they should abide the final result. *Nelson v. to each and every creditor one year after adjudication in which to prove and file his claim. It is optional with him to do so or not. This provision is intended for the benefit of creditors who file their proofs of claim promptly and to give them the benefit of their own diligence. It was also intended to facilitate the administration and settlement of the assets of bankrupts.²⁹⁸ The authorities hold that the language of this subsection is more than a limitation of time and is an absolute prohibition.²⁹⁹ But this prohibition is not binding on the United States.³⁰⁰ If an appeal is brought from the order of adjudication it has been held that the time begins to run from the date of the dismissal of the appeal.³⁰¹

(2) APPLICATION OF LIMITATION.—It has no application to an adverse claim of title to property in the possession of a trustee; such a claim is not a debt of the bankrupt or his estate.³⁰² Nor does it apply to a controversy arising between an assignee of a proven claim and the assignor.³⁰³ The limitation was not intended to apply to a claim arising after the bankruptcy proceedings were instituted, as part of the cost of administration.³⁰⁴ The requirement is in line with the policy of the statute to compel rapidity of administration, and is applicable where a composition has been effected.³⁰⁵ The section only applies to claims sought to be asserted in bankruptcy; it would not prevent ^{300.} Extension of time.—§ 57n, requiring claims to be proved within one year from adjudication, is prohibitory and leaves the court no discretion to extend the time. Hence, a creditor who has failed to prove a scheduled claim within the period required is not entitled to have his claim allowed against the objection of the bankrupt out of moneys deposited by the bankrupt for the purposes of a composition, although such deposit is sufficient. Matter of Blond (D. Where a composition is effected a bankrupt may be heard to object to the allowance of the claim offered for proof after the expiration of the year, although he in good faith omitted it from his schedules. In re Lane (D. C., Mass.), 11 Am. B. R. 136, 125 Fed. 772. But it was doubted in In re Fox (Ref., Ohio), 6 Am. B. R. 525, whether the year's limitation for proving claims against bankrupt estates, laid down in section 57-n, had any application to composition cases. In the case of In re French (D. C., Mass.), 25 Am. B. R. 77, 181 Fed. 583, it was held that in proceedings for the confirmation of a composition the bankrupt has the right to appear in opposition to the allowance of claims which, although scheduled, had not been filed within the year and he would have this right even if he had inadvertently omitted such claims from his schedules; claims which have not been filed within one year after adjudication are not only barred from allowance in bankruptcy proceedings but lose all standing before the court for the purpose of composition.

When an estate is to be administered it is necessary to put a time limit to the proving of claims, because the rate of dividend depends upon what claims are proven, but this is not so in a composition because the dividend is necessarily fixed by the bankrupt upon the schedules alone. Matter of Atlantic Construction Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 35 Am. B. R. 838, 228 Fed. 571.

the creditor from setting up his claim, which had not been presented within the year, as a defense in an action brought against him by the trustee.³⁰⁸

(3) FILED WITH REFEREE.—The word "proved" must be read to include filing the claim with the referee; consequently no claim can be allowed against the bankrupt estate unless it has not only been filed but also filed with the referee within one year after the date of the adjudication.³⁰⁷ It is not sufficient that a sworn statement of the claim be made within the time limitation, but such sworn statement must be filed or presented in some form in the bankruptcy proceeding to prevent such claim from being barred by the statute.³⁰⁹

(4) PRESENTATION TO TRUSTEE.—Where a claim is duly presented to the trustee within the year, it is a sufficient compliance with the requirement of the statute, although not delivered to the referee until after that time.³⁰⁹

(5) PRESENTATION OF FACTS SHOWING CLAIM.—It has been held that a presentation of facts before the court establishing the existence of a valid claim against the bankrupt estate is a sufficient compliance with the requirement that a claim must be filed within one year after the adjudication.³¹⁰

Presentation of claim to trustee.—In the case of Orcutt Co. v. Green, 204 U. S. 96, 17 Am. B. R. 72, revg. 13 Am. B. R. 512 (sub nom. Matter of Ingalls Bros.), the court said: "General Order XXI provides that 'proofs of debt received by any trustee shall be delivered to the referee to whom the cause is referred.' There is nothing in that provision inconsistent with or opposed to anything stated in the bankruptcy law upon the subject and we must therefore take the statute and the order and read them together, the order being simply somewhat of an amplification of the law with respect to procedure, but nothing which can be construed as beyond the powers granted to the court by virtue of the law itself. The question is not whether any one but the court or referee can pass upon a claim and allow it or disallow it. That must be done by the court or referee, but it is simply whether a delivery of a claim properly proved to the trustee is a sufficient filing. The law provides (subsection c of section 57) that a claim after being proved may, for the purpose of allowance, be filed by the claimants in the court where the proceedings are pending, or before the referee if a cause has been referred; but that does not prohibit their being filed somewhere else prior to their allowance and the order in bankruptcy in substance provides that they may be filed after being proved with the trustee. Such order is equivalent to saying that proofs of debt or claim may be received by the trustee. When they are so received by him they are in legal effect received by the court, whose official the trustee is. Having been received by the trustee under authority of law, the proofs of debt are thereby sufficiently filed so far as creditors are concerned and it is the duty of the trustee to deliver them to the referee. If a trustee inadvertently neglects to perform that duty it is the neglect of an officer of the court and the creditors are in no way responsible therefor. The presentation and filing having been made within the time provided for and with one of the proper officers, his failure to deliver to the referee cannot be held to be a failure on the part of the creditor to properly file his proofs." In the case of Matter of Kessler (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 25 Am. B. R. 512, 184 Fed. 51, it was held that where a proof of claim against a bankrupt estate has been delivered to its trustee, the claim is sufficiently filed and it is the duty of the trustee to deliver it to the referee.

^{310.} Presentation of facts showing indebtedness.—In re Strobel (D. C., N. Y.), 20 Am. B. R. 884, 163 Fed. 787; In re Roeher (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 11 Am. B. R. 464, 127 Fed. 122, in which case a document inartificially drawn setting forth the amount due and claiming a lien on a certain special fund due the bankrupt was considered a proof of claim; In re Standard Telephone & Electric Co. (D. C., Wis.), 26 Am. B. R. 601, 186 Fed. 586, in which case the claimant was the holder of certain bonds secured by mortgage given by the bankrupt company and covering all its property; the mortgagee filed a petition before the referee setting up a mortgage and praying that it be declared a first lien upon the property of the bankrupt; issue was joined on the petition and at a hearing before the referee the bonds were put in evidence; the referee found that the mortgage was void, but it was held that the facts presented established a bona fide indebtedness and was sufficient as a proof of claim.

(6) EXCEPTIONS TO REQUIREMENTS.—An exception seems to be made in favor of tax claims, which need not even be filed,³¹¹ and where the administration was halted by an adjustment out of court, sufficient money being deposited to pay all claimants.³¹² Other exceptions are made by the language of the subsection, as where the claimant is an infant or insane.

b. Claims against property.—The presentation of claims against specific property in the possession of the trustee is on a different basis, as to time limitation, than the allowance of claims against the estate, upon which dividends are to be awarded. In such a case the court may, for the prompt administration of the estate, require such claims to be presented within a reasonable time, to be fixed by order, or thereafter to be barred.³¹³ The court may do this in the exercise of its equity jurisdiction, which includes the power to limit the time within which a remedy may be pursued, and to refuse relief where by laches the claimant has unduly delayed the prosecution of his claim.³¹⁴

c. Liquidated by litigation.—(1) IN GENERAL.—The subsection makes an express exception in the case of claims “liquidated by litigation.”³¹⁵ It has

314. Matter of Lathrop, Haskins & Co. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 34 Am. B. R. 739, 223 Fed. 912, in which the order of the court provided that “all claimants who did not file notice of claim to the said stock on or before May 1, 1910, should be forever barred from making any claim or asserting any title or interest in or to any of the stocks, bonds or securities of this estate or the proceeds thereof,” and the court said: “The order did not fix a time for general creditors to file claims against the estate. That the court could not have done, as the Bankruptcy Act in providing in section 57, subdivision n, that ‘claims shall not be proved against a bankrupt estate subsequent to one year after the adjudication’ plainly implies that creditors shall be entitled to file claims at any time within the year. But the court sought by its order to require persons claiming stocks or bonds then in the possession of the receiver, or which might subsequently come into his possession or into the possession of the trustee, to give notice of their claims within a time specified or be barred of the right to recover them from the receiver or trustee. We are at a loss to understand why the authority of the court to make such an order should be denied. It is said that such an order is in effect a short statute of limitations, and that as such beyond the power of the court to establish. In making the order the court was in the exercise of its equity jurisdiction. The equity courts, in jurisdictions where the disinction between law and equity is maintained, while not bound by statutes of limitation not in totidem verbis applicable to equitable demands have nevertheless from the earliest times asserted the right to adopt and apply statutes of limitation to cases over which their jurisdiction was concurrent with that of the courts of law. And in cases over which the courts of equity have exercised an exclusive jurisdiction they have acted upon the maximum vigilantibus non dormientibus aequitas subvenit and recognized laches as a defense peculiar to the chancery courts and refused to grant relief to one who has unduly delayed the prosecution of his claim. And it has also been the practice of equity courts in appointing receivers to limit the time within which claimants could assert a claim against the receivers so appointed. In the exercise of the right thus to limit rights of action the equity courts have not derived their power from any statute but have exercised an inherent power. It is too late in the history of these courts to challenge their right in this respect.”

Liquidation by litigation.—Where in a litigation as to property in possession of the bankrupt at adjudication, it is determined, more than a year thereafter, that the transaction by which delivery of the property was made constituted a sale sufficient to pass the title, the defeated claimant may prove for purchase price as a claim “liquidated by litigation” within this section. In re Landis (D. C., Pa.), 19 Am. B. R. 420, 156 Fed. 318. A creditor’s claim under a chattel mortgage, recorded in the wrong county, having been defeated, and his claim of ownership of property in possession of the bankrupt having been determined against him under decisions made more than a year after his adjudication in bankruptcy, his claims may be allowed under this subdivision.

been held that this exception should be interpreted as if it read: "If the final judgment therein is rendered within thirty days before the expiration of such time or at any time thereafter."³¹⁵ A final judgment establishing the amount of a debt or claim should be framed in such a limited form as not to involve a judgment in personam, but be adequate to enable the creditor to reap the benefit of a proof of claim.^{316a}

(2) WHAT CONSTITUTES LITIGATION.—The phrase "liquidated by litigation" is general, and the object of the exception which is made to the statutory limit of time is plainly to allow the proof of the claim after the expiration of a year by a creditor who during that time was engaged in litigation with the bankrupt's estate concerning its liability to him.³¹⁷ The litigation referred to means litigation between the claimants and the bankrupt.³¹⁸

(3) RECOVERY OF PREFERENCES OR SETTING ASIDE LIENS AND TRANSFERS.—A suit to recover a preference is a "litigation" within the meaning of this clause, and after judgment against a creditor in such suit, he may prove his claim within sixty days thereafter.³¹⁹ An agreement by a secured creditor and trustee in bankruptcy as to the value of the creditor's security, made pending a litigation in the State courts in which both were parties, constitutes a liquidation by litigation.³²⁰ Where it is sought to establish the validity of a mortgage upon the bankrupt's property in a proceeding before the referee,

Action to establish validity of mortgage.—Where, in an action brought by a creditor in the State court to establish the validity of a mortgage upon a bankrupt's stock-in-trade, the final judgment was rendered in favor of the trustee after the expiration of the year subsequent to the bankrupt's adjudication, declaring such mortgage to be an invalid preference, the claim of the creditor is "liquidated by litigation" within the meaning of section 57-n, and he is entitled to prove the same as an unsecured debt at any time within sixty days of the rendition of the judgment in the action in the State court. Powell v. Leavitt (C. C. A., 1st Cir.), 18 Am. B. R. 10, 150 Fed. 89. and it is decided by the referee that such mortgage is void, the decision is a process of "liquidation," so as to authorize the filing by the mortgagee of a claim as an unsecured creditor within sixty days after the question was determined.³²¹ The provision applies to a case where a creditor has claimed to hold a security and has litigated that question and been defeated; in such a case the creditor may thereafter prove as a general creditor.³²²

(4) LIMITATION AS TO TIME.—The words "such time" refer to the one year after or following adjudication.³²³ If the final judgment is rendered more than thirty days before the expiration of the period of one year after the adjudication, the claim of the creditor will be barred unless he files the same prior to the expiration of the year.³²⁴ If final judgment in the litigation was rendered within the period of thirty days before the expiration of the year, the claim must be filed within sixty days after the rendition of the judgment.³²⁵

d. Proof after expiration of year.—A claim may be offered for proof after the expiration of the year where the delay in its presentation was caused by the fraud of the bankrupt in so preparing his schedules as to lead creditors to believe that there was practically no estate for distribution.³²⁶ The statute was intended to affect the right of a tardy creditor to prove in competition with creditors who had been diligent, not the right of a bankrupt to prevent the payment of a creditor whose tardiness had been caused by the bankrupt's own fraud.³²⁷ But the section must be strictly construed to carry into effect its evident purpose. The expiration of the year terminates the jurisdiction of the court in respect to the filing of claims.³²⁸ The fact that the

329. Effect of concealment of assets.—In the case of In re Meyer (D. C., Or.), 25 Am. B. R. 44, 181 Fed. 904, the court said: "Section 57-n of the Bankruptcy Act so far as applicable here provides 'that no claim shall be proved against a bankrupt subsequent to one year after adjudication.' The provision has been repeatedly construed by the courts and they are practically agreed that it is more than a limitation and is prohibitory and that the courts have no power or discretion to extend the time therein specified or permit the proof of claims after the expiration of the year, even if the claimant has been misled by the fraudulent concealment of assets of the bankrupt." See also In re Peck (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 21 Am. B. R. 707, 168 Fed. 48, 93 C. C. A. 470; In re Ingalls Bros. (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 13 Am. B. R. 512, 137 Fed. 517, 70 C. C. In the case of In re Paine (D. C., Ky.), 11 Am. B. R. 351, 127 Fed. 246, the court said: "It may well be that Congress could with wisdom have put into the clause an exception covering cases where there had been a fraudulent concealment of assets; but that was a matter exclusively for Congress to determine and not for the courts to remedy. This court at least assumes no power to interpolate an exception, and thus put into the statute what Congress declined to embrace therein. The language of the clause is plain and unequivocal. There is no ambiguity about it and it admits of no construction. The decisions are equally clear to the effect that no proof of debt can be made after the expiration of one year after the adjudication, except in those instances where the period is extended by the act to not exceeding one year and six months."

clear statement of the claim in writing, duly verified, within the year is sufficient, even though it may be liquidated and allowed after that time.³³³

VL EFFECT OF PROOF AND ALLOWANCE.

a. In general.—Under the former law, a creditor who proved his claim could not proceed thereon in another court.³³⁹ This is not the law now. He can proceed, though he will usually be halted by a stay.³⁴⁰ He becomes, however, a party to the bankruptcy proceeding, with all that that condition implies.³⁴¹ If his claim, voluntarily filed, is disallowed it is a bar to a suit against the bankrupt on the same cause of action in another jurisdiction.³⁴² The action of a referee in bankruptcy in allowing a claim is res adjudicata as to all who have been made parties to the proceedings in the bankruptcy court.³⁴³ But it has been held that a creditor who has proved in bankruptcy a claim based on a contract and has been paid dividends thereon, may proceed in a State court to recover in tort for the balance due.³⁴⁴ A reservation, in a customer's proof of claim, of whatever rights he has against the bankrupts on account of their failure to return stock covered by a receipt, does not preclude him after discovery that his shares of stock have been returned to the trustee, from reclaiming them as his own.³⁴⁵

b. Waiver of lien.—A creditor's lien may be waived by the proof and allowance of his claim.³⁴⁶ How far a proof of debt that is not affected by a discharge amounts to a waiver has not yet been much discussed under the present law. Under former laws, proving for such a debt did not estop the creditor from asserting it against after-acquired property.³⁴⁷

SECTION FIFTY-EIGHT.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

§ 58. Notice to creditors.—a Creditors shall have at least ten days' notice by mail, to their respective addresses as they appear in the list of creditors of the bankrupt, or as afterwards filed with the papers in the case by the creditors, unless they waive notice in writing, of (1) all examinations of the bankrupt; (2) all hearings upon applications for the confirmation of compositions; (3) all meetings of creditors; (4) all proposed sales of property; (5) the declaration and time of payment of dividends; (6) the filing of the final accounts of the trustee, and the time when and the place where they will be examined and passed upon; (7) the proposed compromise of any controversy; (8) the proposed dismissal of the proceedings, and (9) *there shall be thirty days' notice of all applications for the discharge of bankrupts.

b Notice to creditors of the first meeting shall be published at least once and may be published such number of additional times as the court may direct; the last publication shall be at least one week prior to the date fixed for the meeting. Other notices may be published as the court shall direct.

III. Notice to Creditors by Publication, 835.IV. By Whom Notices Are Given, 836.

I. NOTICE TO CREDITORS GENERALLY.

a. In general.—The present statute requires a notice to creditors of every important step in a bankrupt proceeding. Its predecessor was somewhat loose in this regard, notices being often discretionary, and the time and method subject to the direction of the court.¹ The present law, perhaps, goes too far the other way. Notices should not contain the names of the creditors or the amounts of their claims, as seems sometimes to have been the practice under the law of 1867. Subsection a requires that the notice given shall be (1) by mail, (2) at least ten days before the day set for the meeting, and (3) addressed to the creditors at "their respective addresses as they appear in the list of creditors . . . or as afterwards filed with the papers in the case." The last clause quoted seems to cover cases where a creditor's address is changed during the proceeding, or is found to have been incorrect in the schedules, as well as those where a creditor requires a referee to mail to a specified address.² Notices may, however, be waived. For the first meeting, the addresses given in the schedule should be used,³ thereafter, those specified on the proof of debt, unless a request giving a specified address be filed as provided in General Order XXI (2). The sufficiency of addresses given in the schedules, is discussed under section 7 (8), and as to the effect of a failure to schedule properly under § 17. Whether or not the use of initials and the omission of a street address will make notices to such persons ineffectual will almost invariably depend on extrinsic circumstances.⁴ The cases under the former law will be found of little value.

b. Notices under rules and forms.—The general orders provide for notices in certain cases and regulate the method of service. Notices which are not required by the act or the general orders to be served personally on the party may be served on his attorney.⁵ Property may be sold under an order of the court with or without notice to the creditors.⁶ Any creditor may file with the referee a request that all notices to which he may be entitled shall be addressed to him at any place, to be designated by the post-office box or street number, as he may appoint; and thereafter, and until some other designation shall be made by such creditor, all notices shall be so addressed; and in other cases notices shall be addressed as specified in the proof of debt.⁷ The official forms prescribe the form of the notice of the first meeting,⁸ and of the application for a discharge.⁹ So also is the form of the notice to creditors of the payment of a dividend.¹⁰

c. Construction and scope of section.—This section should be read and construed together with § 59. The former enumerates the proceedings, of which notice is to be given to creditors, and prescribes the length of time of the notice and the mode of giving it to the creditors, while the latter is particularly directed to the subject of filing and dismissing petitions.¹¹ which it transacts business is sufficient; Kreitlein v. Ferger, 238 U. S. 21, 34 Am. B. R. 862, 59 L. Ed. 1184, holding that a schedule containing the address "Indianapolis, Ind." is prima facie sufficient.

11. Matter of Levi & Klauber (C. C. A., 2d Cir.), 15 Am. B. R. 294, 142 Fed. 962.

d. When notice not necessary.—A notice of a meeting of creditors is not necessary where the referee is the sole judge and acts independently of the creditors; unless, of course, required by subsection a. Neither is it essential, where, though similar to or the negative of a meeting of which notice is necessary, the statute does not specifically require it. Thus, a ten-day notice need not be given of the appointment of a special referee,¹² or of a receiver,¹³ or of examinations before the first meeting,¹⁴ or of a trial on a contested claim,¹⁵ or of sales of perishable property,¹⁶ or of the hearing of exceptions to the trustee's report on exemptions,¹⁷ or of many other minor steps in a proceeding.¹⁸ Indeed, no notice whatever need be given in some of them. Where possible, however, the ten-day notice by mail should always be given, unless otherwise prescribed by the general orders or local rules. Such is the policy of the law. Congress has made no provision for giving notice to creditors of the institution of involuntary proceedings, other than that which results by operation of law from the filing of the petition,¹⁹ but it is as true of the present law as it was of the act of 1867 that the filing of a petition is a caveat to all the world and in effect an attachment and injunction.²⁰

e. Combined notices.—Form No. 18, itself, is a combined notice—of the first meeting and of the examination of the bankrupt. It is possible also to notify creditors in one notice, say, of (1) a proposed compromise, (2) a proposed sale to be followed, without objection, by a public auction forthwith, (3) the declaration and (4) the payment of a final dividend, and (5) a final meeting to pass on the trustee's account.²¹ Notices should be combined and meetings consolidated, where possible.²²

22. Justice Brown said in In re Price (D. C., N. Y.), 1 Am. B. R. 419, 91 Fed. 635, that "Hereafter the published and mailed notices of applications for a discharge should contain a notice of examination of the debtor to avoid the necessity of further notice to all creditors in case such an examination is allowed."

f. Effect of notice on jurisdiction.—The filing of the petition gives jurisdiction, both in rem and in personam.²³ Failure to receive the notice is, therefore, not an objection to the regularity of the proceeding.²⁴ The important fact under the present law is: was the debt duly scheduled?²⁵ If so, there seems to be jurisdiction of the creditor, even without notice. Illustrative cases under the former law will be found in the foot-note.²⁶

g. Presumption that notice was given.—It is made by subsection c the official duty of a referee to give the notices prescribed by the section. It will be presumed, nothing appearing to the contrary, that the officer has properly and legally performed the duty devolved upon him.²⁷ As for instance, it has been held, authoritatively, that an order of discharge will be presumed to be based on sufficient notice to creditors, and that the introduction of the order casts a burden upon a creditor attacking it to show that there was absence of notice or other statutory cause affecting the validity of the order.²⁸ Where the record shows that notices were served as provided by law, it is not sufficient to assert merely that the notices were not received; there must be evidence adduced indicating that the notices were not sent.²⁹

II. WHEN NOTICE REQUIRED.

a. In general.—The mandatory phrasing of subsection a indicates that for all the proceedings there enumerated the ten-day notice by mail is absolutely essential.³⁰

b. Of examination of bankrupt.³¹—Subdivision (1) requires notice of an examination of the bankrupt. This refers to an examination under § 7 (9); it may to one under § 21-a. But a bankrupt may be examined at any continuance of a meeting in the call of which his examination has been noticed, and, if present at any other meeting, he can, it is thought, be examined even without such a notice.³² If examined for the purpose of preparing schedules,³³ or on the hearing of his discharge, no notice to creditors seems to be required.³⁴

c. Of proposed confirmation of composition.³⁵—Notice of the confirmation of a composition is required under subdivision (2). In this connection § 12-b should be consulted. While the usual notice must be given of an application for the confirmation of a composition,³⁵ it usually takes the form of an order to show cause, entitled in the district court and issued by the court.³⁶ It seems that a like notice is not required on an application to set aside a composition. Still, it is customary.³⁷

d. *Of application for discharge or revocation thereof.*³⁸—Subdivision (2) formerly provided for notice of at least ten days of an application for a discharge. The amendatory act of 1910 added a new subdivision 9 providing for a notice of thirty days in case of an application for a discharge. The provision as to thirty days notice is positive and should be strictly complied with.^{38a} The Supreme Court has, in Form No. 57, suggested a method which is both cumbersome and, in so far as it attempts to take from the district judge the power to fix the practice,³⁹ of doubtful force. Such notice should take the form of a short show cause order, the original signed by the judge and attested by the clerk, the same to be mailed either by the clerk or by the referee, or the attorney in charge if so "ordered by the judge." This practice is regulated by rules in the different districts,⁴⁰ and, in some, prior to the amendatory act of 1903, fees were charged for this service. Unless, however, there are district rules modifying it, the practice suggested by the Supreme Court should be followed.⁴¹ Personal notice of the application is not essential to the binding force of a decree granting a discharge.⁴² It is not necessary that the notice shall have been actually received and read by creditors, but mailing in the manner prescribed by the statute is sufficient.⁴³ A bankrupt is entitled to reimbursement for the expense of notice to creditors of an application for his discharge.⁴⁴ A default upon a motion to discharge a judgment will be opened, where the creditor did not have proper notice of the proceeding.⁴⁵ Since notice of an application for a discharge is required, it is not necessary to give notice to creditors of an application to extend the time within which to make the application for the discharge.⁴⁶ It seems that, on an application to revoke a discharge, any notice fixed by the court is sufficient.⁴⁷

e. *Of proposed sales.*⁴⁸—Notice of all proposed sales of property is required by subdivision (4). In this connection § 70-b should be consulted. The requirement that notice be given of every proposed sale of assets has proven an unfortunate restriction on discretion. The time necessary, substantially two weeks after application, often makes advantageous sales impossible. This difficulty doubtless led to General Order XVIII, under which most sales are now made. Under this order the court or a referee may direct a private sale, with or without notice, for good and sufficient cause shown.⁴⁹ The word "perishable" has been construed with extreme liberality.⁵⁰ This is hardly necessary—that is, if General Order XVIII (2) is not in derogation of the statute—provided good cause can be shown for a private sale; at least, such a construction can fairly be put upon that general order. However, when substantial loss will not result, the command of the statute should be obeyed. If notice of a proposed sale is given, it is often so phrased as also to give notice of a meeting of creditors to attend a public sale of the property immediately thereafter.⁵¹ If a creditor actually attends a sale of a bankrupt's property and bids on the same it is immaterial whether he received the usual notice of sale by mail or not.⁵² If an order of sale lapses for any cause and a subsequent order of sale is made, notice should be given to creditors and lienors.⁵³

f. Of declaration and payment of dividends.—Subdivision (5) requires notice of the declaration and time of payment of dividends. This seems to imply two meetings; indeed, since the amendatory act of 1903, two meet-

49. Sale without notice; discretion of referee.—In re Hawkins (D. C., N. Y.), 11 Am. B. R. 49, 125 Fed. 633, holding that the discretionary power of a referee directing a private sale of the bankrupt's property, without notice to creditors, ought not to be disturbed unless it clearly appears that his discretion was improvidently exercised.

An order to sell perishable property, even real estate, rests in the sound discretion of the court, and where it is not affirmatively shown that gross injustice has been done to the creditors, a sale of such property at private sale by the trustee, will not be disturbed for lack of notice to a creditor of the application of an order to sell or for confirmation of the sale. Notice of trustee's sale; sufficiency of publication.—The act of March 3, 1893, (27 Stat. 751), requiring publication once a week for at least four weeks before the sale of real property, which requirement has been construed to mean twenty-eight days at least, does not bind the Federal courts in their administration of the bankruptcy act; and, in the absence of reason to believe that publication three days earlier would have made a real difference for any purpose, the publication of notice of sale of the bankrupt's real estate once a week during each of the four weeks preceding the time set for the sale, the first publication, however, being but twenty-five days before, is sufficient. Stock of hardware cannot be sold without notice to creditors as "perishable property" although by delay it is becoming unseasonable.

Sale of building deteriorating in value.—Where a building, used as a manufacturing plant by an involuntary bankrupt, was rapidly deteriorating in value and was unsalable, and an offer was made therefor of a sum representing its fair value, which offer was conditioned upon conveyance being made within a shorter period of time than would allow notice to be given in accordance with the usual practice in sales of bankrupt properties, and where great loss would be occasioned by failure to make the sale, the court is justified in making an order, allowing the trustee to consummate the sale without notice, and a sale so made will not be set aside. ings are necessary.⁵⁴ Following the practice under the former law, the forms include one to be used by the trustee in instructing creditors to call for their dividends.⁵⁵ This form is archaic and rarely used, dividend checks being mailed direct with receipts attached, or so phrased as to amount to receipts when indorsed. It is common practice, too, to combine in one notice (1) that for the declaration of dividends and (2) that for the payment of the dividends so declared.⁵⁶ Where creditor claims are disallowed,⁵⁷ or if for any reason their claims are voluntarily withdrawn,⁵⁸ they will not be heard to object to any failure to give or defect in a notice as to the declaration of a dividend.

g. Of filing final accounts.—Notice of the filing of final accounts and of the time and place where they may be examined is required by subdivision (6). In this connection §§ 47-a (8), 55-f, and 65-b should be consulted.⁵⁹ The notice is one of ten days, but the return day must be at least fifteen days after the filing of the trustee's final report and account. A meeting for such purpose cannot now be held until three months after the first dividend.⁶⁰

h. If a proposed compromise of a controversy.—Subdivision (7) refers to § 27; perhaps, at least by analogy, to § 26. No compromise can be made, no matter how advantageous, save on the statutory notice. The requirement is often met by combining such a notice with one for a meeting for general purposes.

i. Of a proposed dismissal of a proceeding.⁶¹—Subdivision (8) clearly refers to § 59-g, and the cases cited under § 59 should be consulted. The practical difficulty of notifying creditors whose names and addresses are unknown, as in most involuntary cases before adjudication, is apparent. It, however, does not, it is thought, limit the mandatory effect of this provision.⁶² Notice to the creditors of the bankrupt of a proposed dismissal of the proceedings is indispensable, and an order of dismissal without notice is erroneous.⁶³ It has been held that the provision requiring notice of a proposed dismissal, construed with section 59-g, does not require notice where the dismissal is Dismissal of proceedings; notice to creditors.—An alleged bankrupt had more than twelve creditors, three of whom joined in an involuntary petition against him. Two of the petitioning creditors colluded to compel the alleged bankrupt to pay the claim of the third who was permitted to withdraw as a petitioning creditor. All but two of the listed creditors, aside from the original petitioning creditors, signed a statement in writing that they objected to an adjudication and agreed not to participate in any effort to that end. The notices to creditors, contemplated by sections 58-a(8) and 59-d, of a proposed dismissal of the proceedings for lack of sufficient number of petitioning creditors and to give other creditors an opportunity to intervene, were not given and no creditors intervened. It was held that one of the petitioning creditors having withdrawn and the other two being estopped from proceeding with the petition because of conduct in violation of their duty as petitioning creditors, the two remaining creditors who had not joined in the creditors' statement would not have been sufficient to make a jurisdictional petition and the court was warranted in dismissing the proceedings without the giving of the notice of proposed dismissal to creditors, especially after issue had been joined and a hearing had and where the question of lack of notice to other creditors was raised for the first time upon appeal. Cummins Grocery Co. v. Talley (C. C. A., 6th Cir.), 26 Am. B. R. 484, 187 Fed. 507.

on the initiation of the court, on account of a voluntary bankrupt's failure to take the necessary preliminary steps to bring the creditors before the court; the provision relates only to applications for dismissals by parties in interest.⁶⁴ The section contemplates notice to creditors when the petition is about to be dismissed for want of prosecution or by consent of the parties already in court, and has no application to the dismissal of the petition on the merits after hearing.⁶⁵ A dismissal of a petition without notice to creditors is not void because the bankruptcy court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, and its erroneous orders and judgments are as valid, in the absence of direct proceedings to review them, as those in which there is no error.⁶⁶ In an involuntary proceeding, where no list of creditors has been scheduled, the court may dismiss the petition upon the bankrupt's motion, without notice to those creditors who have not intervened.⁶⁷ The notice, if before a reference to the referee, should perhaps take the form of an order to show cause, and be served as above suggested in the same manner as the like order in an application for discharge.⁶⁸

j. Of appointment of receivers.⁶⁹—A receiver of the property of an alleged bankrupt ought never to be appointed, except in rare cases,⁷⁰ without notice to the alleged bankrupt; but an appointment without notice is not, in a constitutional sense, a deprivation of property without due process of law.⁷¹ Neither should a receiver be appointed without notice to adverse claimant in possession of the property,⁷² or a State court receiver,⁷³ in possession of the property.

R. 588, 112 Fed. 966, 50 C. C. A. 641, upon the motion of all the petitioners, a petition in bankruptcy was dismissed without notice to the creditors. Eleven months and twenty-three days after this dismissal other creditors appeared, and asked permission to join in the dismissed petition and to prosecute the proceeding, and their application was denied. The court held that the dismissal of the petition without giving notice to the creditors was not void, and that the application was too late to be seriously considered; Neustadter v. Chicago Dry Goods Co. (D. C., Wash.), 3 Am. B. R. 96, 96 Fed. 830; In re Jamaica Slate Roofing & Supply Co. (D. C., N. Y.), 28 Am. B. R. 763, 197 Fed. 240.

In this case the court, after referring to sections 58 and 59, said: "It is my opinion that these provisions of the law relate to dismissals which in effect withdraw the cases without submission to the court for its decision upon the merits, and there appears to be no requirement of notice to creditors who have not appeared, of trials of hearings in involuntary cases, but if the law does require notice to creditors of hearings upon the merits, still the rendering of a final judgment without notice to the creditors would be an irregularity or error, the effect of which would be to make the judgment voidable or reversible, as to parties to the record, and void as to others."

Bankrupt in prison.—The appointment of a receiver of a bankrupt before adjudication without notice to the bankrupt, who was in prison for engaging with two others, who had absconded, in procuring money through the mails by fraudulent representations, was held not to be void as taking property without due process of law, where a notice would in all probability defeat the very object of the appointment. In re Francis (D. l. m. Of meetings generally.—In addition to the requirements as to notice of the different steps already mentioned, subsection a also requires that the parties in interest shall have the statutory notice of "all meetings of creditors." This omnibus phrase seems to include every gathering to pass on matters that may be submitted to creditors. It does not, therefore, include meetings where the referee or judge acts independently of them. A first meeting or a special meeting to fill a vacancy in the office of trustee must, therefore, be regularly noticed.⁷⁶

III. NOTICE TO CREDITORS BY PUBLICATION.

Subsection b provides that only the notice of the first meeting must be published. It should be so published at least once, and the last publication must be "at least one week prior to the date fixed for the meeting." Publication must be in the official newspaper.⁷⁷ Whether other notices shall be published depends either on the standing rules of the district or the order Want of notice of voluntary petition.—In the case of In re New Chattanooga Hardware Co. (D. C., Tenn.), 27 Am. B. R. 77, 90, 190 Fed. 241, the court, in commenting on the Dwyer case, said: "I am clearly of opinion that the want of formal notice to the petitioning creditors of the application for an adjudication in the voluntary case, which it is stated in the Dwyer case should, as a matter of proper practice, be given, is not now a valid objection to an adjudication in the voluntary proceedings, as it appears that the petitioning creditors in both the involuntary cases have in fact had actual notice of the application for an adjudication under the voluntary petition, and have appeared in opposition thereto, so that the failure to give them formal notice is entirely immaterial."

76. Not so of a "special meeting," called under General Order XXI (6); there the court fixes what is due notice.

Notice of special meeting.—In the case of In re Stoeber (D. C., Pa.), 5 Am. B. R. 250, 105 Fed. 355, the court said: "I am of opinion that the notice in question, namely, of a special meeting called upon the petition of a creditor, under paragraph 6 of General Order 21, to have a re-examination of certain claims, should have been sent out by the referee, and that this duty did not rest upon the petitioner. Paragraph 6 provides that 'due notice [of such meeting] shall be given by mail addressed to the creditor whose claim is to be re-examined, but does not specify by whom the notice shall be given. I think, however, that this omission is supplied by the Bankruptcy Act in clause 'c' of section 58, which declares that 'all notices shall be given by the referee unless otherwise ordered by the judge.' It was suggested that this clause should be confined to the eight notices enumerated in clause 'a' of the same section, but I am unable to assent to the correctness of this construction. As the language is 'all notices,' and there is no other qualification than this 'unless otherwise ordered by the judge,' I can see no reason to limit the meaning of the word 'all.'" of the court in each case. It is customary on discharge applications and sales. Failure to publish, while not going to the jurisdiction, is probably so far an irregularity as to render void any meeting for which publication is necessary.⁷⁸ Proof of publication should be made by affidavit of the proprietor or foreman of the newspaper.⁷⁹

Closing estate.—The creditors must have ten days notice of a final meeting of creditors before closing the estate. Matter of Levy (D. C., Pa.), 44 Am. B. R. 248, 261 Fed. 432.

IV. BY WHOM NOTICES ARE GIVEN.

Notices must be given by the referee, "unless otherwise ordered by the judge." If by the former, the official business envelope can be used; perhaps if, under the order of the judge, actually mailed by another. Notices are sometimes printed on postal cards, sometimes on slips and inclosed in envelopes. The law imposes this duty upon the referee, and it will be presumed that he has properly performed it.⁸⁰ If the referee mails the notice he is entitled to indemnity for his actual expense in so doing, but, especially since § 72 was added by the amendatory act, to no fee. No compensation thus being possible, the judge has often in the past "otherwise ordered," i. e., he has, by standing rule, directed such notices to be mailed by the bankrupt or his attorney, and this practice will perhaps become general. In that case, proof must be made by affidavit and filed with the referee. If the referee mails the notices, a certificate in his record-book that he mailed notices to all creditors at the addresses given in the schedules, or as afterward filed with the papers in the case, is enough.⁸¹
